Mr. Peltier has been a constant subscriber to the Moving Picture World ever since it was started and attaches great value to the information, assistance and guidance furnished him by its columns.

Mt. Clemens has another moving picture theater, the Lyric, which seats 300 people. Admission is 10 cents for programs of the World and Equitable. George M. Smith is the owner. The Lyric is doing good business.

JAMES S. McQUADE.

NEW PLAN FOR ASSIGNMENT OF PLAYERS ADOPTED AT EDISON STUDIO.

AMONG the several changes which Manager Leonard W. McChesney has instituted since he took hold of the Edison studio is the dividing up of the stock companies into practically an organization of several stock companies, each with its own director. Mr. McChesney believes, although it has been customary for years with Edison, by assigning certain players with certain directors, each will get to know better the other's capabilities and work out pictures of more artistic unity and fuller dramatic expression.

Under this new arrangement, Mabel Trunnelle will be permanently associated with Director Richard Ridgley with whom she has worked much, even under the old system. Like many of the other coupling of players who have not been usually playing together, Robert Conness will play with her. Director John H. Collins, who has had Viola Dana a great deal, will have her permanently, but Edward Earle, who has played little with Miss Dana, goes opposite her.

Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt, who for years have been associated in the public memory almost as much as Irving and Terry will play together again after quite a time apart, in answer to popular demand, under Director George Ridgwell. Pat O'Malley, who played with Miss Dana, will now be seen with Leonie Flugarth, the featured child player of the stage, under Director Burton George. Under Director E. C. Taylor will be Bessie Learn and Bob Walker; Director Langdon West, Margaret Prussing and Carlton King; Director Frank McGlynn, Grace Williams and Richard Tucker; while comedy director, Will Louis will have Jean Dumar and Ray McKee, as before.

Other members of the stock companies will be subject to assignment to the different directors' companies because of the characters they play as in the cases of Sally Crute and Bigelow Cooper, being much in demand by practically all the directors.

ETHEL CLAYTON STILL WITH LUBIN.

Some over-zealous press agent or lax editor has permitted it to be printed that Ethel Clayton had severed her connection with the Lubin Company and was to begin work immediately with a western production company. The Lubin Company hastens to deny such unfounded rumors and to assure exhibitors and the many friends of Miss Clayton that not only will she remain with the Lubin Company but that she has begun work on a new five-reel feature V-L-S-E Lubin release, "Dollars and Cents," from the story by Albert Payson Terhune, in which she will be starred. The play will be produced under the direction of Joseph Kaufman.

Pathe Gets A. H. Woods Play

List Embraces Many of the Greatest Theatrical Productions of the Time.

AN announcement of extraordinary interest in both theatrical and motion picture circles is made by Pathe and A. H. Woods. Arrangements have just been perfected whereby Pathe receives the motion picture rights to all the plays that have been and will be produced by Mr. Woods. Thus the largest theatrical producer of the day becomes allied with the oldest of the motion picture concerns, and one that is the largest of the independent manufacturers. The list of plays which thus becomes available for motion picture purposes is a most remarkable one, embracing as it does many of the greatest theatrical successes of recent years.

Al. H. Woods.

These plays have been the prize for which many motion picture concerns have been angling for many a day. At the time the papers were signed there were three large immediate cash offers lying upon Mr. Woods' desk. With the acquisition of the plays Pathe becomes the possessor of some of the best stock of picture material held by any company. That they will add prestige to the Gold Rooster program, on which they will be placed, goes without question.

George Fitzmaurice, who has been intrusted by Pathe with the production of adaptations from famous dramatic successes, will produce many of these A. H. Woods plays. In his casts will be used so far as possible the actors who appeared in the original productions, among whom are many of the leading players of the day, such as Florence Reed and Robert Edeson. The pictures will be made in the very best manner, regardless of expense. George Brackett Seitz, the Pathe scenario editor, and Ouida Bergere, both well known playwrights, will make the adaptations. The first play to be filmed will be "New York" with Miss Florence Reed. Work on this picture will be started at once by Mr. Fitzmaurice.

Louis J. Gasnier, General Manager, Pathe.

General Manager Louis J. Gasnier, of Pathe, put through the deal with Mr. Woods, assisted by George F. Miller and G. Van Wervoke of the Pathe forces. Mr. Woods was represented by Martin Herman, his general manager, and Ralph I. Kohn, his private secretary.

The rise of A. H. Woods from the domain of ten cent melodrama to a position in the front rank of theatrical producers is one of the most spectacular in the history of the American theater. In a comparatively few years he has established himself as the most successful, the most original and the most daring of managers. Looking over the list of "hits" in the past five years, we find the name of A. H. Woods associated with the majority of the most emphatic ones. For instance, it was Mr. Woods who gave us that international music success, "Madame Sherry," to be followed later in the operatic field by the melodious "Gypsy Love," which enchanted two continents. It was A. H. Woods who staged the well remembered laughable farce "The Girl in the Taxi," which was also subsequently played abroad. It remained for the same manager to make a star of Julian Eltinge, the famous impersonator whose popularity is ever on the increase. When it came time to dedicate the new Eltinge theater in New York it was A. H. Woods who picked "Within the Law" for the initial attraction. The phenomenal success of this drama of the shop girl is too widely known to need added comment. And who has not heard of or laughed at the greatest tribute to Woods' ability to give the public what it wants, namely, "Potash & Perlmutter."

Even more recently Mr. Woods has given the public such pronounced successes as "The Song of Songs," "Kick In," "Innocent," "The High Cost of Loving," "The Yellow Ticket," "Common Clay" and "Abe and Mawruss," the last two the most notable successes of the current season.

A Woods' cast has come to have a special significance to American playgoers. Mr. Woods has assembled under his banner such prominent players as John Mason, Jane Cowl, Dorothy Donnelly, Florence Reed, Richard Bennett, Julian Eltinge, Barney Bernard, Madame Cottrelly, Irene Fenwick, Cyril Keightley, Thos. A. Wise, Forrest Winant, Pauline Frederick, Lew Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, John Barrymore, Josephine Victor, Jane Grey, Emmett Corrigan, Macy Harlan, Marguerite Sylva, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Bernard Granville, Adele Ritchie, Sam Bernard, Louise Dresser, and a host of others.

Mr. Woods is owner of the Eltinge theater, and lessee and manager of the Republic theater in New York. He personally selected Pathe to be the medium by which his plays are to be presented to the public in picture form, because he felt that the prestige and excellent organization of that house would insure the widest possible distribution.

ROTHAPFEL DINED AT SALT LAKE.

Exhibitors from all the surrounding territory attended the Rothapfel-Mutual banquet held at the Newhouse Hotel, Salt Lake City, on Wednesday, November 10. Several of the exhibitors in attendance traveled more than 500 miles to be here for this, the biggest motion picture event of the year in that region.

H. A. Simms, of the American theater, introduced the guest of honor, Samuel L. Rothapfel, whose words fell on receptive ears, and there is promise of a new high standard of motion picture presentation in the theaters of this territory as a result.

Among those who were present at the banquet were: A. L. Stallings, Clifton Pierce, Manny Feldstein, E. H. Goldstein, Mark Ross, L. D. Perry, Ernest Ryan, J. E. Ryan, S. P. Arnold, Mrs. Louis Marcus, J. C. Lindsay, George C. Cowing, James A. Stanley, Mrs. M. B. Lagrau, W. P. Moran, Ed. Shearer, Mrs. George E. Carpenter, A. J. Onway, D. E. Schwinger, R. W. Bertleson, W. J. Morgan, J. Martin Watson, J. R. Kenneard, Harry Quinn, Beatrice D. King, Louis Marcus, George E. Carpenter, M. H. Hanauer, W. B. Moyle, E. C. Schmidt, Inez Todd King, Mrs. Monroe Hauser, J. Rothneul, V. M. Foot, C. H. Paulson, C. E. Beardsley, C. H. Archibald, Robert Saunders, Emery C. Epperson and E. D. Lagrau.

McMAHAN IN BIG THEATER DEAL.

I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson, takes full possession of the Forest theater on Forest avenue, near Reading Road, in the very heart of Avondale, a suburb of Cincinnati, O. It is understood that it runs up to a very high price, as the Forest theater is practically a new house and it cost the Auditorium Theater Company, which is composed of Lee Ach, George W. Harris and several wealthy men of Avondale, something like $60,000 to build the same.

The theater has every modern equipment, is absolutely fireproof, and is one of the prettiest playhouses in the state of Ohio. There is also a commodious and up-to-the-minute airdome connected with the theater, for summer use.

The policy of the new management will be as it always has been, to give their patrons everything that is good in the motion picture industry, and their price will be 5 cents for children and 10 cents for adults.

Porter Sells Famous Players Holdings

Understanding Is That Treasurer and General Manager of Feature Company Will Soon Retire.

EDWIN S. PORTER will retire from the Famous Players Film Company. Mr. Porter was one of the organizers of the company and has been at the head of the producing forces. For some time he has held the offices of treasurer and general manager.

Mr. Porter has been prominently connected with the production of pictures from the beginning of the industry, having for many years been at the head of the Edison studio and later with W. H. Swanson and Joseph Engle, organizing the Rex Company, which was afterward merged with the Universal company.

The sum mentioned as figuring in the transaction is $800,000, for which amount it is said Mr. Porter surrenders all of his stock holdings in the Famous Players company.

Frank Bacon

FRANK BACON, the foremost character actor of the stage, who recently made his debut in motion pictures under Metro auspices, has been laid up in his room in the Hotel Remington, in New York City, for more than a week, following an injury he received while working in the last scene made in "Rosemary," the five-part Quality-Metro feature. In the role of "Professor Jogram" Mr. Bacon figures in a rough and tumble fight in an old English inn. His antagonist proved so realistic in his attack that he gave Mr. Bacon a hard push and the veteran character actor fell backwards over a table. He landed on the table, received several bruises and severely wrenched his back.

Frank Bacon.

"Rosemary" was made at the Quality studio in Hollywood, Cal., and as the company was called east to work in future productions, Mr. Bacon was obliged to make the journey across the continent confined to his drawing room. Immediately upon his arrival in New York he was placed under the care of a physician and removed to the Hotel Remington. He hopes to be able to work in the next Quality-Metro feature, even if he has to walk with the aid of a cane.

Marguerite Snow is starred in "Rosemary," and Paul Gilmore, the well-known stage star, is featured with her. There is an excellent supporting cast, as is testified in the appearance of such notable artists as Mr. Bacon. Mr. Bacon was featured for seven years in Cohan & Harris' stage productions, scoring heavily in character leads in "The Fortune Hunter," "The Miracle Man," "Stop Thief" and other successful plays.

BEVERLY BAYNE, NEWSPAPERWOMAN.

Beverly Bayne, the Metro star, is one of the few women in New York City who has a police card, usually given only to newspaper reporters, which entitles her to pass through police lines at fires, accidents, or similar happenings. It has just been given to her by the Commissioner of Police, for Miss Bayne has qualified as a newspaper writer, in addition to her work in motion pictures. Hundreds of newspapers throughout the country use her special articles on women's fashions, which she writes under the heading of "Beverly Bayne's Fashion Talks." The articles are sold through a newspaper syndicate.

"AMERICA FIRST."

Will S. Rising, dean of moving picture actors, as well as author and producer, is at work on a patriotic novelty reel, which may prove a sensation. It deals with the efficiency and preparedness of our army and navy, and introduces many of our Presidents from 1776 to the present time.

Lasky Productions

AS THE result of months of careful investigation and a close and expert study of motion pictures exhibiting and photoplay-going public, the Lasky Feature Play Company by reason of its findings will concentrate for the present on photoplays of modern theme and tense dramatic action.

"Armstrong's Wife," in which Miss Edna Goodrich appears as the star on November 18, for her debut on the screen, is said to be an excellent example of the kind of subject material for photodramas which the Lasky Feature Play Company believes is in most demand at the present time. It is modern. Its story is the narrative of a woman who chooses unfortunately between two men.

Following "Armstrong's Wife" the Lasky Company will release through Paramount on November 22 a comedy entitled "Chimmie Fadden Out West," produced by Cecil B. DeMille, the theme of which also is entirely modern. It is the second of a series of photo-comedies in which Chimmie Fadden as played by Victor Moore appears in the leading role.

Probably nothing could so well illustrate the Lasky policy in photoplay themes as the releases announced for December, of which there are four. This will mark the first month of the second quarter year of the Paramount Program. The productions are Theodore Roberts in a picturization of E. Phillips Oppenheim's "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," Fannie Ward in "The Cheat," by Hector Turnbull; Lou Tellegen in "The Unknown," founded on I. A. R. Wylie's famous novel "The Red Mirage," and Valeska Suratt in Marion Fairfax's original play, "The Immigrant." In all of these plays there is to be found a marked step towards strong, virile drama, produced on an elaborate scale. And yet in none of these has romance been sacrificed for modern realism as each contains a story of simple heart interest.

Frederick Warde with Thanhouser

THAT eminent tragedian and Shakespearean authority, Frederick Warde, has at last succumbed to what he jokingly terms "the film inevitable." He has just been engaged by Edwin Thanhouser, the Wizard of New Rochelle, and will first be seen as Silas Marner.

Mr. Warde is practically the sole survivor of the Shakespearean actors of another day—a day made famous by such names as the Booths, John McCullough, Lawrence Barrett, and Barry Sullivan. To Mr. Warde the old traditions of the stage remain the dearest, and the hand of time has not turned him from the original standards of the art of those days. For that reason he has been very much in demand on the lecture stage. Of moving pictures he says:

"A wonderful art to which I am a total stranger but an ardent admirer. Little did I think that I would ever take part in a studio production, but the spirit of the times and Mr. Thanhouser's proposal bade me give ear to the 'film inevitable.' My initiation into the mysteries of the film studio proves to me that I am not too old for new tricks."

Frederick Warde and His Son.

Mr. Warde's initiation will be at the hands of his son, Ernest, a Thanhouser director. It is only a few years since Ernest was bound for the pinnacle of eminence held by his distinguished father, for he was Richard Mansfield's stage director. In contemplating the novelty of directing his parent, young Warde promises not to revenge himself for the various lickings of boyhood days; of course he can get sweet vengeance by making his elder go through some extra paces.

Edison Burns House

Big Fire Scene in "Children of Eve," Kleine-Edison Release.

DESTRUCTION by fire of a four-story, especially-constructed brick factory building in Fort Schuyler, last Sunday, while making the final scene for "Children of Eve," the Edison feature, released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service, November 10, provided more thrills than bargained for and furnished at least one narrowly averted tragedy that for a time threatened to cause a panic among the five hundred women and girls engaged in the scene, and an equal number of spectators who had motored out to witness the spectacle.

The leap for life from the roof by a fireman, and the rescue of girls from the topmost floor of the blazing building by firemen who slid down life ropes, and by others who carried them down ladders, was realistic to the utmost; but the actual near-tragedy sprang a bit of realism not expected.

A camera operator, to get a certain viewpoint of the conflagration, had climbed a platform atop scaffolding about sixty feet high. He had no trouble getting up there because a fire ladder was available; but this means of ascension was wrecked when a brick wall of the factory crashed to the ground, burying ladders, hose, axes and other fire-fighting apparatus.

Mr. Cameraman enjoyed the balmy air and soothing sun's rays as he gaily signaled to motorboats and sailing craft passing, and was perhaps envied a bit by his fellow workers because he had such a point of vantage from which to view the fire.

But when the building was fired and the immense quantity of waste film, powder and gasoline stored in it began to burn, Mr. Cameraman's perch became quite the hottest place on the map and there was no way, aside from jumping, for him to get down. He was game, however, and stuck to his job, notwithstanding the scaffolding was scorching in a dozen places and threatening to burst into flames every instant. His tripod was blistered and the leather casing of his machine fairly smoking, but he never wavered. Women and children became near panic-stricken and began to scream, and men, realizing his peril, sought means to enable him to escape, but the fire ladders, broken and burning were buried beneath tons of red hot brick and stones. It looked serious for the plucky photographer, but he continued turning the crank of his camera, getting perforce a magnificent view of the raging fire. At last, when it appeared as if he must succumb or leap to probable death, the front of the burning building collapsed and the terrifying heat abated, and he was rescued.

NEW MANAGER FOR KLEINE'S ATLANTA OFFICE.

B. B. Hardcastle is the new manager for George Kleine's Atlanta office. He left New York last week to assume charge of the Kleine interests in the southeastern states after a record experience as a salesman traveling out of the Chicago office.

Mr. Hardcastle covered Indiana with the Kleine productions, and the good wishes of Hoosier State exhibitors follow him to his new sphere of action.

Mutual's New Masterpieces

First Two Weeks of December Will See the Release of Two Five-Part Subjects.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Mutual Film Corporation of two important screen productions scheduled for release the first two weeks in December. Each of them will be comprised of five reels and will be released as Mutual Masterpictures. In addition to these two exceptional productions the Mutual also announces the release for December 8, in the regular Mutual program of a three reel feature, presenting Dorothy Gish in the title role.

First of the two Masterpicture releases referred to in the opening paragraph "The Forbidden City," will go to the public December 2. Louise Glaum will be presented in the leading role, supported by a cast of exceptional merit. "The Forbidden City," in five parts, is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, author of several Masterpictures, notably "The Reward," "The Toast of Death," "The Mating" and "The Cup of Life."

The second of the Mutual Masterpictures for release early in December, is "The Buzzard's Shadow," in five parts, featuring Harold Lockwood and May Allison. This masterpicture will go to the public December 9. The piece deals with army life at one of the frontier posts during the early days of the westward march of civilization.

Miss Gish, as the star of "Her Mother's Daughter," a feature release on the regular Mutual program, December 8, gives one of her best performances. For her first appearance as a star on the regular Mutual program Miss Gish was cast for an important role, and she has carried the part through with exceptional merit.

Ruth Blair

RUTH BLAIR, "the prettiest girl in pictures," has again returned to the motion pictures after an engagement on the legitimate stage under the management of the Selwyn company, and has been especially engaged by the Fox company to play the leading role in "The Fourth Estate," under the direction of Frank Powell. Miss Blair left for Chicago last week for her new engagement. Her new role is a "sympathy" part. It requires deep emotional ability and intense dramatic power as well as to play the part of the wife of a poor man who is downed by the political "boss" system.

Ruth Blair.

Miss Blair is ideally suited to the part. She is tall and graceful, and has a wonderfully sympathetic face.

Madame Ada Dow Currier, the famous dramatic coach who discovered and made Julia Marlowe, declares that Miss Blair is possessed of a remarkable emotional ability, and that some day she will make another Julia Marlowe. Madame Currier has taken an unusual interest in this young actress, and has been her dramatic teacher for some time.

Ruth Blair was born in Pennsylvania. From the time she was very young she had an overwhelming ambition to go on the stage, and the success which has marked her career since she entered the dramatic field has been the realization of her childhood dreams.

Miss Blair is essentially feminine. She is an anti-suffragist, and she confesses that she is so old-fashioned that she prefers horses to automobile. She is an exceptional rider, as well as a great lover of all forms of outdoor sport.

Miss Blair is also an artist. She designs all of her own clothes. She is always on the lookout for new color combinations, and whenever she has found something which she thinks would make a beautiful garment she rushes home to her paint box and sketches, then colors designs for her own clothes.

Wright to Direct Miss Nesbitt

Edison Leading Woman Returns to Studio After Vacation—Will Appear With Mr. MacDermott.

MIRIAM NESBITT, Edison leading woman, has returned to the studio after about a two months' trip and rest during which she took a cross country tour, leisurely, to the Pacific coast and the San Francisco fair. In a number of cities in which she appeared she received unplanned but enthusiastic receptions. She remarked it as so strange that, even in the crowds at the fair, her face would be recognized by passersby, so long and so well known has this favorite been before the screen public. Her first reappearance will be in a three reel feature, "Life's Pitfalls," directed by a new Edison director, George Ridgwell.

Miriam Nesbitt.

After that Miss Nesbitt will be assigned a special director and will again appear with Marc MacDermott. These two favorite and accomplished stars are linked together in the public's affections and memory probably more than any other screen pair. This return to the older order is in response to a pronounced demand upon the part of exhibitors and patrons that these two appear together again.

The director in charge will be George Wright, newly appointed from the acting ranks of the Edison company. Mr. Wright first came to the Edison company with the intention of becoming a director, he having been a widely experienced stage director. While standing about getting onto the difference in motion picture direction, he was asked to play a part. The splendid way he did it marked him, unanimously, as too good an actor to lose from the screen.

Mr. Wright has appeared in such notable and successful stage productions as "My Friend from India," with Walter E. Perkins; the title role in "Chimmie Fadden"; in the all-star cast of "Shenandoah" with Otis Skinner; as player and director with the Charles Klein production, in "Bobby Burnit," "The Country Boy"; the London presentation of "The Third Degree"; "Bought and Paid For"; and "Within the Law."

George Wright.

Miss Nesbitt experienced a thrilling escape from injury while driving through the Yellowstone Park. In fact her entire trip was unusually eventful. Two women had died in the several days' trip through the Park, one from the high altitude. Miss Nesbitt, for the adventure of it, was riding with the driver when one of the horses fell, dragging the coach over an embankment and upturning the coach. Miss Nesbitt fortunately fell among some bushes, escaping with several severe scratches. Returning, by way of Texas, she arrived in New Orleans, the day after the bad storm when every restaurant and bakery in town was under water. During two days, no amount of money could secure for her more than some bad rolls and worse coffee. Taking the boat, which was not weighted with its usual cargo ballast because of storm-tied-up shipping, she encountered the roughest and sickest voyage of her life, quite assured that there may be something sometimes worse than motion pictures adventures.

Hereafter, it is probable that Miss Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott will appear only in features. Whenever the play calls for the especial kind of character he plays so well, Mr. Wright will play in the picture he directs.

Louise Beaudet

LOUISE BEAUDET, Vitagraph Screen Star, who practically grew up in the atmosphere of the theater, was born in Tours, France, but at an early age removed to New York. When Aimee came to America she requested that Miss Beaudet, although only about twelve years old, be allowed to play in "The Little Duke." She accompanied the French actress, with whom she stayed about two years, and then became the ingenue of the Baldwin Theater Stock Company in San Francisco. During this engagement she was cast for such characters as Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons," Ophelia in "Hamlet," Desdemona in "Othello," Doris in "Narcisse," and Lady Macbeth.

Louise Beaudet.

About this time the tragedian Daniel E. Bandman, having perfected arrangements for a tour around the world, Miss Beaudet accepted an engagement with his company. The tour lasted four years, during which time she played in an extensive repertoire, including Leah, Beatrice in "The Hunchback," Ariel, etc. Returning to America she was engaged by James C. Duff for the soubrette part in "Paola." Later, she became a member of Rudolph Aronson's Opera Company, which at that time included Lillian Russell. Leaving this organization, she joined Pauline Hall in the production of "Puritania." Now followed engagements as prima donna with Abbey and Grau at the Auditorium in Chicago, as Progress in Irme Kiralfy's "America," which ran for eight months at the World's Fair, and a starring engagement at the head of her own company, "The Louise Beaudet Opera Bouffe Company."

In May, 1895, while visiting Europe, the late Charles Frohman introduced her to George Edwardes, who induced her to play Marie Tempest's part of Adele in "An Artist's Model." During this engagement she was engaged to sing at the Palace Theater, London. Miss Beaudet's wonderful voice and artistry won her immediate recognition. During the week of June 27, 1897, Queen's Jubilee Week, she appeared at the command performance at Buckingham Palace, at which every King, Queen and Prince of the royal blood was represented in the distinguished audience.

In December, 1897, she made her vaudeville debut as the headliner of an all-star bill at Hammerstein's Olympia Music Hall, after which she for several years divided her time between Europe and America, appearing in drama and operatic roles interspersed with engagements in European music halls and American vaudeville.

During the summer of 1912 Miss Beaudet forsook the legitimate stage and joined the Vitagraph Company. Her versatility enabled her to portray a wide range of characters, and her art developed until motion picture fans all over the country knew Louise Beaudet as one of the most clever screen stars. The big part was given her by Mr. Vandergriff, in Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's photoplay, "The Battle Cry of Peace." Among the other more important pictures in which Miss Beaudet has appeared since becoming a Vitagraph Star, are "The Snare of Fate," "A Price for Folly," "Sauce for the Goose," "The Wheels of Justice," "The Goddess," "The Man Behind the Door," and "Green Stockings."

The Author of "Stingaree"

Some Notes of Interest Concerning E. W. Hornung and His Famous Characters.

IT WAS due to the wanderlust which caused a young newspaper reporter to resign a perfectly good position on a leading London daily and desert the fleshpots of England for the relative discomforts of the Antipodes that "Stingaree," one of the most striking characters in fiction and motion pictures, was born.

Ernest William Hornung is the man who brought "Stingaree" into being. Kalem Company is now engaged in imbuing this famous character with life, and transferring his activities to the screen in a series of twelve two-act episodes. The first of these is "An Enemy of Mankind," and it will be issued on Wednesday, November 24th. The succeeding episodes, each of which is complete in itself, will follow at weekly intervals.

E. W. Hornung.

Mr. Hornung is noted for his original characters. "Stingaree's" predecessor, "Raffles," is an example of the British author's ability in conceiving a personality which holds the interest as the result of heroic qualities, or, as is more frequently the case, because of the engaging manner with which this figure perpetrates wrongs against his fellow men.

It was at the impressionable age of eighteen that Mr. Hornung resigned his position and left for Australia. The young man was exceedingly fortunate in that he obtained a position on the editorial staff of the Sidney "Bulletin," an antipodean nursery of literary talent arranged somewhat after the manner of the New York "Sun."

At that time the country was still agitated over the deeds of the notorious Kelley gang, the Gardiner gang and other bushrangers. In the latter band was a young lad named Gilbert, who although of a respectable family, deliberately chose a criminal career.

Although these gangs had been wiped out before Mr. Hornung's arrival in Australia, the outrages they had perpetrated were still one of the principal topics of conversation. The newcomer collected all the data he could concerning the careers of the outlaws, making a special study of Gilbert. The latter was undoubtedly the source of Mr. Hornung's inspiration when he wrote "Stingaree."

At any rate, when the reporter returned to England about two years later, he brought with him a wealth of exotic material which resulted in a series of stories of the back blocks, the sheep stations, new chums, "Sundowners," and outlaws, of love and adventure that in their way had and retain all the charm of the tales of our own cattle-raising West. The close resemblance existing between the Australians and ourselves, much closer than that between us and the Englishmen, may have been a factor in the instant success of "Stingaree," and other of Mr. Hornung's books, on this side of the water.

Mr. Hornung knew, moreover, how best to use his material. Fresh from Australia he was forcibly struck, on his return to the mother country, by the fresh, youthful unconventionality of the one, and the prim, stiff social traditions of the other. After writing a number of stories which became popular, Mr. Hornung gave further evidence of his ingenuity in the weaving of plots in "The Amateur Cracksman," the first of the stories in which Raffles made his appearance.

This welcome creation arrived in the nick of time to give the hard-working amateur detective a well-earned rest. Mr. Hornung had established himself firmly in public favor before he invented Raffles, but this engaging scamp took his readers by storm.

Encouraged by Raffles' popularity, Mr. Hornung decided to create a character which would be to the Australian bush what his first out-law hero was to polite English society. The result was "Stingaree." The central character of the tales issued under this general title is an Englishman who is forced into exile and resolves to make mankind pay a heavy toll for the wrongs inflicted upon him. Throughout his career of crime, however, this remarkable character refrains from staining his hands with blood and one of the reasons for this is the fact that his name invariably inspires such terror in the outlaw's victims that they never dream of resisting his demands.

True Boardman, who enacts the title role, makes the motion picture "Stingaree" exactly the sort of character that Mr. Hornung had in mind. Seldom has any player fitted a role more perfectly. Howie, the ruffian who, although utterly unprincipled, restrains his blood-thirsty desires because of his love for the brainier criminal, is admirably portrayed by Paul Hurst. It is safe to predict that not a person in all the world will view the forthcoming episode of "Stingaree" with greater enjoyment than the man who is responsible for this unique character.

Paul Gulick

TO TAKE an ordinary motion picture weekly and make it one of the most interesting publications of its kind is the difficult task that Paul Gulick, editor of the Motion Picture Weekly, house organ of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has accomplished in the twelve short months he has been in charge of that publication.

Paul Gulick.

At the time he took charge of the Universal Weekly, as it was called then, it was but a large advertising program of the Universal releases. Now, under Mr. Gulick's master touch, the weekly has become the delight of the thousands of exhibitors who use Universal pictures, as well as their guide in selecting their programs.

The Motion Picture Weekly as edited by Mr. Gulick is more than a mere house organ, for it contains authentic fashion reviews, spicy interviews, a complete music guide for exhibitors, intimate notes of men in the business, complete synopses of all Universal releases, with special articles of its famous actors and actresses, a department for the exhibitors and managers, as well as a humorous department.

Mr. Gulick was born in Vermont—son of a minister. But he has shown two things since coming under the rays of the gay white lights of Broadway—that not all Vermonters are farmers and not all ministers' sons "village cut-ups." Mr. Gulick is one of the best-liked men in the motion picture business, as well as one of the most capable publicity men.

A Most Popular Feature

"The Battle Cry of Peace" Now a Country-Wide Propaganda —Shown in Many Cities.

IN RESPONSE to the urging of prominent men in all parts of the United States, the famous patriotic screen message on preparedness, "The Battle Cry of Peace," has been released in ten cities. In New York City it has rounded out the one hundred and fortieth performance at the Vitagraph theater. Runs of a similar length have already been arranged in other large cities in theaters of tremendous seating capacity. These include the Olympic theater, Chicago; the Majestic, Boston; the Metropolitan Opera House, Philadelphia; the Columbia, San Francisco; the Metropolitan, Cleveland; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; the Colonial, Dayton, O., and one of the large houses of Dallas, Tex.

At the 4,000-seat Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia, the picture is being produced under the personal direction of Lee Shubert. In Boston, Howard & Gordon, whose standing as theatrical managers in New England needs no comment, are managing the picture, having purchased the state's rights for Massachusetts. Eugene Roth, of the Portola theater, one of San Francisco's de luxe moving picture houses, was so impressed with the purpose of "The Battle Cry of Peace" that he rented a legitimate theater to produce it—the Columbia, seating 3,000 people.

Emanuel Mandelbaum, one of the founders of the World Film Corporation, will show "The Battle Cry of Peace" in one of the finest houses in Cleveland, the Metropolitan. In Dayton, Jules Hurtig, of Hurtig & Seamon, New York, will produce the picture at the Colonial, a legitimate house with a seating capacity of 2,500; and in Buffalo Michael Shea, the widely-known theatrical figure of that section, will produce it at Shea's Hippodrome.

The Chamber of Commerce of Dallas, Tex., has undertaken the promotion of the picture in that city, and twelve prominent men have been appointed to secure the most desirable house in the city for its showing. Rochester, N. Y., has also been decided upon as another exhibition center for "The Battle Cry of Peace," and there remains but the completion of a few details before it will open in that city.

The reception accorded the picture in all of these places has even exceeded that which was given it in New York. In the Middle West, where it was felt there was need for such propaganda especially, the production has aroused a tremendous wave of patriotism.

"Bella Donna" at the Strand.

THE Strand theater is showing Pauline Frederick in a spectacular film adaptation of the celebrated novel and play, "Bella Donna," by Robert Hichens and J. B. Fagan. This play, which made Nazimova famous, is a striking combination of intense tragedy and Oriental settings. The tale is that of Mrs. Chepstow, an English adventuress, whose exploits are matters of common gossip in London. Despite the fact that her name is bandied about by the wits at his club and that her reputation is distinctly unsavory, the Hon. Nigel Armine, an impressionable and rather unsophisticated man, refuses to believe what he hears. Struck by the marvelous beauty of the woman, and drawn to her by a force which he does not exactly interpret, he marries her and takes her to Egypt. But the simple-minded Armine soon palls upon this roving, restless spirit, which fastens upon a handsome native, Baroudi, as the object of its fierce and hungry adoration. The clandestine love affair increases in intensity, until Baroudi so masters "Bella Donna" that he persuades her to poison her unsuspecting husband. Dr. Isaacson, a friend of Armine's, appears on the scene, "Bella Donna" is unmasked; Baroudi turns against her; and, her wild dream of wealth, power and luxury shattered forever, she gazes wistfully out upon the desert waste in the black night. Then she slowly traces her weary and faltering way out across the desert—and into oblivion.

The afternoon fashion show is in its third week. The latest Parisian and American styles for women are shown in colors on the screen. The Topical Review contains the latest European and American news pictures, and war scenes taken at the front.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

"A Submarine Pirate," in which a United States undersea boat, lent by Secretary Daniels, is used by Syd. Chaplin in a Mack Sennett comedy; "Jordan Is a Hard Road," the Griffith supervised film version of Sir Gilbert Parker's famous novel, with Frank Campeau and Dorothy Gish in the leading roles; and Katherine Kaelred, of "A Fool There Was" fame, presented by Thomas H. Ince in a worthy successor to "Aloha Oe," called "The Winged Idol," are this week's offerings at the Knickerbocker theater. Supporting Syd. Chaplin are Glen Cavender, Wellesley Ruggles and Phyllis Allen.

In "Jordan Is a Hard Road" Frank Campeau appears in the role of a Canadian bandit, which gives him opportunities similar to those offered in the Trampas of "The Virginian." Miss Gish, Owen Moore, Sarah Truax and Ralph Lewis have prominent roles.

"The Winged Idol" is the story of a derelict reclaimed by the power of a mystic, played by Miss Kaelred. When she has reclaimed him, he returns to his wife and child, giving an unusual turn to the ordinary vampire plot. House Peters is the husband. The cast also includes Clara Williams, Elizabeth Brubridge and J. Frank Burke.

At the Broadway theater this week Charles Cherry, the clever Frohman star, whose name is known to every theatergoer in the country, is making his first appearance on the screen in the celebrated dramatic success, "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," under the auspices of the Famous Players Film Company. The play selected for Mr. Cherry's debut is one which has won laurels in this country and abroad, and develops to the full his ability as a light comedy and dramatic actor. There are numerous powerful dramatic situations in the photoplay. Lillian Tucker, who recently scored a pronounced personal success in "Experience," supports Mr. Cherry.

Charles Chaplin is also seen in his latest two-reel comedy, "A Night in the Show." South American travel pictures, Pathe news and cartoons are also on the program.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty and "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Vitagraph continue their runs.

Opening of New Majestic Theater

Handsome New Motion Picture House at St. Nicholas Avenue and 185th Street—Under the Direction of Messrs. Fleischman & Goldreyer.

THURSDAY EVENING, November 11, the doors of the handsome new Majestic theater, devoted exclusively to motion pictures, were thrown open to the public. The opening was a most auspicious one, the ample auditorium being packed to the limit. Situated at the corner of St. Nicholas avenue and 185th street, the theater has a seating capacity of over 1,600 and a system of entrances and exits which permits its being filled or emptied in the most approved manner. The decorations are rich and harmonious, but not intrusive, and everything about the theater speaks of a liberal and intelligent expenditure of money. The program will consist of selections from the best and latest feature pictures and one and two-reel photoplays. A first-class symphony orchestra furnishes the music.

On the opening night the theater was profusely decorated with handsome floral offerings from the friends of Messrs. Fleischman & Goldreyer. During an intermission, former Assistant District Attorney Henry J. Goldsmith appeared in the balcony in the front of the auditorium and congratulated the management, the audience and everyone present on the opening and the future prospects of the new photoplayhouse.

CAV. AMBROSIO ON HIS WAY HERE.

With Mrs. Frieda Klug Schultz He Will Study American Conditions.

According to a cable dispatch received at the office of the Moving Picture World, Cavaliere Ambrosio, the famous founder of the producing house of that name, will visit this country by the end of this month. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Frieda Klug Schultz, who is well known in film circles here and in Europe.

Mrs. Schultz has recently been on a business visit in this country disposing of several valuable features to the Universal Film Company. Mr. Ambrosio will bring with him several six-reel features in which Rita Jolivet, the well-known French-American actress, has the leading parts. Under the guidance of Mrs. Schultz Mr. Ambrosio intends to stay here long enough to become familiar with the conditions of the American market.

Equitable Gets Frank Powell

Famous Director Joins Staff with No Strings on His Ideas, Energy or Skill.

THE Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, the directors of which concern last week appropriated one hundred thousand dollars with which to purchase film stories and adaptions, announces this week that in seeking the very best material available their directors have not stopped there, but are in the field for the foremost directors, that the first big scoop is the securing of Frank W. Powell, the man responsible for "A Fool There Was," the discoverer of Theda Bara and the man who staged all the Nance O'Neill pictures for the William Fox concern.

Frank Powell.

Mr. Powell signed with Equitable after lengthy conferences with Arthur H. Spiegel at the Sherman House, Chicago, where Mr. Powell is producing "The Fourth Estate," in conjunction with the Chicago Record Herald.

Mr. Spiegel, who is now in the city after an absence of but two days, announced the procuring of Mr. Powell upon his arrival here Friday. He said Mr. Powell's first effort for Equitable would be "The Chain Invisible," the Richard Le Gallienne story, in which either Emmet Corrigan and Gail Kane will co-star, or Brandon Tynan and Lily Cahill will work jointly.

Mr. Powell, whose production of "A Fool There Was" proved to be one of the most sensational pictures of its season, was responsible also for each of the film plays in which Nance O'Neill has appeared. The new Equitable director began his activities in theatricals as a stock director and actor. Five years ago he heard the call of the lens and took up motion picture acting. His powers of visualization so impressed his various employers that he soon became a director and now occupies a prominent niche in that profession.

For the Equitable Corporation, Mr. Powell will devote his time to the production of original works from the pens of the various authors on the Equitable scenario staff.

"The Chain Invisible," Mr. Powell's first vehicle, and which, according to Mr. Le Gallienne's foreword, should make a most startling and vivid subject, will be produced at the Fifty-second street studio.

Mr. Powell will complete his directorial obligations with the William Fox concern December 1st, and report to the Equitable immediately thereafter.

With Mr. Powell at work Equitable will have eight companies and will fulfill, by February 15, their anticipation of having fifteen productions on the shelf, thus making good that diversification of program which has been aimed at.

All Quiet at Lubinville

The Circus Leaves Town and Other Disturbances Have Disappeared.

BETZWOOD, Pa., has quieted down once more and the stay at home farm folk have gotten back to the groove of life for the Leon Washburn Mighty Show and Circus has packed up its tents and gone away, the street erected for the big fire scene in the Raymond Hitchcock feature, "The Wonderful Wager," has been burned and cooled off, and Director Rene Plaisetty with his company headed by the inimitable Raymond and Marion Sunshine, have come triumphantly to the Lubin Philadelphia plant where the picture will be completed

More than fifteen thousand feet of the various exciting events which Hitchy has gone through for the picture have been taken and since its beginning the blonde forelock comedian has learned seven languages, all of which he speaks fluently, he declares, namely, lion, tiger, leopard, elephant, Plaisetty, circus and Midnight. The Ford flivver, of which he has been the engineer, fireman and pilot for the past five weeks, has figured in no less than thirteen smashes, some of them premeditated, and some more or less expected. The wild enthusiasm the star displays at the thought of rising at 6 in the morning, parading in a clown's suit for seventeen hours, and driving homeward in this selfsame palatial Ford is indeed remarkable.

Horsley Construction Activities

Building New Studio and Enlarging Construction Departments—Stammer Supervising Furniture Building.

PLANS have been filed with the building department of the city of Los Angeles for the construction of a new indoor studio, furniture and property room building in connection with David Horsley's studio. This new structure will give the plant 20,000 feet of floor space.

In addition, the present outdoor stage is being prepared for the coming rainy season, which will soon be on, by the equipment of a canvas roof over the steel structure so that work can be carried on every day, regardless of weather conditions.

The planing mill and carpenter shops are being enlarged to three times their present size in order to take care of the requirements of the organization, and new equipment is being added.

Fred Stammer, an experienced furniture designer and builder, has been placed in charge of the furniture construction department and has begun the building of "period" furniture for use in the pictures. For this work a great quantity of mahogany has been ordered and in a short time the plant will be manufacturing its own furniture of every description.

Wellington Playter

WELLINGTON PLAYTER, who has been on the Pacific Coast for nearly a year, is now playing in "Glory," the eight-reel Kolb & Dill feature in course of production in Los Angeles. Mr. Playter had been in receipt of offers from Kolb & Dill at the same time he had been sought for the role of the robust Canadian woodsman in Mr. Bushman's "Pennington's Choice." Through a compromise he was enabled to work in the latter subject and then take up his part in "Glory."

Wellington Playter.

Mr. Playter is one of the few leading men of giant physique now playing for the screen. Yet he is so well proportioned his height is apparent only when placed near others. Before the camera he has been successful from the beginning. For over a year he was a member of the stock company of the Famous Players. While at the Twenty-sixth street studio he was prominent in the support among others of John Barrymore, Macklyn Arbuckle, W. H. Crane, May Irwin and Nat. C. Goodwin. He played opposite Mme. Bertha Kalisch in "Marta of the Lowlands." Since going to the coast, Mr. Playter has filled a six months' engagement with the Universal company, where he has been featured in Bison productions.

The Kolb & Dill subject in which Mr. Playter is now engaged is a comedy, and it is said that it is the aim of the producers to make it one of the most ambitious yet placed on the market.

Mr. Playter is a writer as well as an actor. Last winter he wrote a vaudeville sketch that made a hit.

Dr. Jose M. De Lasarte

AMONG the distinguished visitors to the San Francisco Exposition was Professor Dr. Jose M. De Lasarte, of Barcelona, Spain. Dr. Lasarte came to this country about two months ago to attend the exposition as the representative of the civil engineers of Spain, and as a member of the Committee of the Barcelona International Exposition of Electrical Iudustries. Within the last week Dr. Lasarte has been in New York. He expects to remain here up to November 15th, and may be addressed at 130 West 70th street. His Barcelona address is Bailen 46, Barcelona, Spain.

Dr. Jose M. De Lasarte.

Dr. Lasarte is deeply interested in motion pictures of an educational and dramatic character. He has been busy examining film conditions in this country and acquainting himself with the general sources of film supply. He has been in Los Angeles, San Diego, Denver, St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Buffalo.

Dr. Lasarte believes that there is a splendid opportunity for American producers to come into Spain, Portugal and their colonies and introduce their films. He will be glad to hear from any producers here who desire to exploit this market which is now controlled almost entirely by French manufacturers.

"What our people want," said Dr. Lasarte on a visit to the offices of the Moving Picture World, "is a regular program giving them an entertainment of from two to three hours. At present the supply is limited and programs suffer for a lack of variety. I am convinced from my personal knowledge and observation that American-made films will go well in Spain, Portugal and their colonies. Both your dramas and comedies will appeal to our audiences. You must make sure, however, of giving us a regular and dependable supply."

Dr. Lasarte is a member of the Common Council of the City of Barcelona, where he is well known and highly esteemed.

METRO SIGNS MABEL TALIAFERRO.

Mabel Taliaferro, the beautiful and talented star of the speaking drama, who played the stellar role in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Polly of the Circus," and other notable productions of the legitimate stage, has been signed by the Metro Pictures Corporation to appear in a series of big Metro feature pictures produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. She will be surrounded by an exceptionally strong supporting cast, including many gifted artists of both the stage and screen. The engagement of Miss Taliaferro is in keeping with the high standard set by Metro, and adds another brilliant star to their already long list, which includes Ethel Barrymore, Francis X. Bushman, Martha Hedman, Emily Stevens, William Faversham, Marguerite Snow, Beverly Bayne, Mme. Petrova, Mary Miles Minter, Lionel Barrymore, Valli Valli, Edmund Breese, Emmy Wehlen, Henry Kolker, and half a score of other famous players.

KING BAGGOT OFF FOR ST. LOUIS.

King Baggot, the popular Universal star, left New York November 9 for a little vacation in his native city of St. Louis, Mo. For a week or ten days he will enjoy himself and meet old friends. It is probable that he will also make a few theater appearances. While in St. Louis, Mr. Baggot will reside with his mother, Mrs. King Baggot, at 1462 Union Boulevard.

Detective Series for Centaur

Crane Wilbur Is the Author and Will Also Play Featured Role.

DAVID HORSLEY has had prepared and has just begun the production of a detective series, to be known under the general heading of "The Adventures of Allan Dare," which he will release as Centaur Star Features on the Mutual program. The first picture is subtitled "The Phantom of the Road" and will be released December 22.

Crane Wilbur.

The fact that "The Adventures of Allan Dare" is a series does not mean that it will be a succession of disjointed episodes. In this case each release will be in itself a complete story, built upon a new adventure of Dare, and carried through to its final solution. One adventure will have no bearing upon the preceding or subsequent one in the matter of the story, the only connection of one release with the other being in the use of the same characters throughout.

In this manner the trouble usually coming from a serial and series—that of theater patrons missing an episode and then losing interest because the thread of the story is broken—will be entirely obviated. Rather interest will be increased, a point which has been proved by the biggest magazines of the country applying the same principles of production. A few cases in point are the Reeve "Craig Kennedy" stories, the Booth Tarkington "Penrod" adventures and others of a like nature. These stories have built up a big cumulative following for the magazines that could not have been obtained had they been published serially. Mr. Horsley in following this idea feels sure that the series will be a big success aside from the fact that he has selected stories of a type that are always popular in motion pictures.

The series is written by Crane Wilbur, who has shown exceptional ability as a photoplaywright by his stories, "The Blood of Our Brothers," and "Could a Man Do More?" which were recently picturized by Mr. Horsley and released as Centaur Features.

In the first picture, "The Phantom of the Road," Mr. Wilbur portrays a mysterious gentleman of leisure who appears on the road in a big black motor car and wearing a black cloak, cap and mask. A murder mystery occurs and the guilt is fastened upon an innocent girl. The mysterious gentleman solves the problem and places the responsibility upon the proper party. Hardly has the girl time to thank him before he enters his car and is off in the night.

Besides the suspense coming from the element of mystery attached to the principal character, the picture has some remarkably thrilling scenes, one of them showing an auto carrying a group of people rushing over a high cliff and into the lake below.

Being set in modern times the scenario offers many chances for scenic beauty in the picture, of which full advantage has been taken. In the cast are Crane Wilbur, who plays Allan Dare; Carl Von Schiller, Edward Collins, Gordon Mullen, Celia Santon, Mrs. Williams and a host of others.

The length of time the series will run has not been decided.

Making the Players Comfortable

Essanay's New Studio Will Have Gymnasium and Other Conveniences.

ONE of the features of Essanay's new studio building, which is now rapidly going up, will be a completely equipped gymnasium. There will be a running track, an indoor tennis court, handball and squash courts and all the ordinary apparatus used in gymnasiums. George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, ordered this addition to the studio because he believes that the way to get the best work out of his players is to have them in the finest of physical condition. Every actor and actress will be encouraged to take regular physical exercise, though it will not be compulsory.

There will be a man and a woman instructor, certain hours being set off for the men and others for the women to use the gymnasium. Several large shower baths will be constructed on each side of the studio which will be open at all hours.

There also will be a library and reading rooms as a general lounging place for players when not at work, so that they will not be confined to the necessarily limited space of a dressing room.

The main offices and directors' rooms will be on the second floor of the building, most of the first floor being given to a gigantic studio where several directors can work at the same time. Its proportions will be large enough for the staging of Essanay's great feature plays, many of which called for scenes of such magnitude as to cramp a 100 by 100-foot studio.

The floor space of the new studio will be 350 by 175 feet, or 61,250 square feet. The building will be fireproof, being constructed of brick and steel, the only possibly inflammable part being the furniture. A standpipe will connect with every room, however, with a short hose, so that it will be ready for immediate use in any corner of the building.

It is expected that the new quarters will be ready for occupancy by the first of the year.

Screen Club's Fourth Annual Ball

THE Screen Club ball last Thanksgiving evening at the Hotel Astor eclipsed any previous reception of any theatrical organization. In a financial way it also exceeded any of the previous Screen Club dances, even though the price was advanced from $2 to $5. The next Screen Club ball, which will be the fourth annual, will be held Saturday, November 20, in the gold ballroom of the Hotel Astor. If the tremendous success of last year's event is any criterion it can be said without question that a splendid evening is in store for those who attend this year's function.

The general arrangements for the big affair are in the hands of a committee of which King Baggot is chairman. Jacob Gerhardt is treasurer, and Jules Burnstein chairman of the seating arrangements. The list of box-holders who have subscribed is as follows:

New York Motion Picture Company, Ed Carewe, Frank Powell, Nicholas Power, James Kirkwood, William Farnum, Tom Terriss, William Quirk, Pathe Freres (two), Famous Players, S. G. Poppa, King Baggot, Ben Wilson, Solax, Harry R. Raver, World Film Corporation, Clara Kimball Young, Lewis J. Selznick, the Equitable, Metro (two), Peerless, Vitagraph, Marshall Farnum, Ed Roskam, J. C. Graham, William Fox, Edison, Gaumont, Thanhouser, Harry Myers, Louis Hall, Hugh Hoffman, A. P. Kelly, George Terwilliger, Thomas G. Wiley, Ben Goetz and the Moving Picture World. Only three or four boxes remain unsold.

The floor committee will consist of the club's president, William Quirk, as chairman, and the officers. Some unusual decorative schemes for the big hall are being worked out by Charles Greene and "Doc" Willat. They have let it be known that everyone will be surprised with the result that they expect to accomplish. Will C. Smith, assistant manager of the Nicholas Power Company, will, as usual, be in charge of the spot lights, illuminations, and the electrical end in general. William J. McKenna will select and arrange the musical numbers with the leader of the Hotel Astor orchestra. The music in the Hotel Astor main ballroom is always helped greatly by the fine organ that is installed in the orchestra balcony. The grand march will be led by Miss Clara Kimball Young and President Quirk.

The Screen Club building will be open for the women friends of the club members from noon on Saturday, and there will be open house until closing time Sunday. After the ball it is customary for the dancers to gather at the clubhouse where a merry time is always a certainty. The reception at the Hotel Astor will be officially on after 8.30 in the evening. The admission price is $5 per couple.

Machat & Goldman Get Another Theater

Open North Star Theater with Some Ceremony—$8,000 Organ Installed.

THE North Star Theater, 106th street and Fifth avenue, New York, having come under the control of Machat & Goldman, the new management marked the event by special advertising for the evening of November 8th. The result augurs well for the future of the North Star, one of the largest theaters in Harlem with a seating capacity of 1,600.

Before 7.30 o'clock every seat in the house was occupied; the lines were three deep behind the last row of orchestra chairs and the lobby was crowded with those awaiting admittance. Between 8 and 10 o'clock the management was obliged to turn hundreds of people away. "Damaged Goods" was the chief attraction of an eight-reel program.

Machat & Goldman have installed an $8,000 pipe organ and using a gold fibre screen are able to show a clear picture, despite the long throw of 162 feet. The house is handsomely decorated and furnished with every convenience for patrons. Formerly it was controlled by the Stanley Corporation of Philadelphia. The North Star is the fourth large New York theater to come under the management of Macha & Goldman, the others being the Manhattan, Manhattan avenue and 109th street; the Tiffany, Westchester avenue and Tiffany street, and the Banner, Longwood and Westchester avenues.

Beata Gray

AMONG the actresses engaged by the Universal Company for leading roles there is none perhaps more thoroughly qualified by nature and training than Beata Gray, who is being featured in Brinsley Shaw's productions. Miss Gray is a beauty and an accomplished actress. Several years ago, when she was studying art at the New York School of Applied Art, her beauty was recognized by no less a connoisseur than Harrison Fisher, who used her as the model for his "Western Girl" pictures. Charles Dana Gibson then found her to be just the type for his "Debutante" series, and Miss Gray might have remained a favorite model among foremost American artists had she not preferred the stage.

Following an extensive vaudeville tour, she made her debut in photoplays at the Pathe studio, later becoming a member of the Vitagraph and Biograph companies. Her performances with these concerns and in several Famous Players productions have revealed a varied talent and a personality that lends itself especially well to comedy. Miss Gray played opposite David Higgins in the Famous Players' "His Last Dollar" and has carried important roles with such actors as Lionel Barrymore, Ned Finley, William Russell, Alan Hale, Franklyn Ritchie and William Jefferson. In Mr. Shaw's company she will play opposite Paul Panzer, with whom she was first associated in Pathe pictures.

Beata Gray.

The Universal officials are confident that Miss Gray will score a marked success in "Sunshine and Shadow," the story having been written by Director Shaw with the personality of his leading woman in mind. Although this energetic young person is being kept pretty busy in the studio, she still finds time to write scenarios, some of which will be produced by Universal.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Inconsistency of Opponents of Sunday Moving Pictures.

FOR years the fight has been waged in many places against the showing of moving pictures in theaters on Sundays. Some time ago the ministers in various communities substituted selected programs of moving pictures for the evening sermons, with the approval of their congregations. This did not mean, in many instances, that pictures were barred in theaters, while they were permitted in churches.

At the present time, in many communities, churches claim the right to run pictures on Sunday, while they have had ordinances passed to prohibit theaters from doing so. These ordinances contain the crafty provision that pictures cannot be shown "for pecuniary profit" on Sundays.

It may be asked why the churches have departed from long custom and usage by running pictures on Sunday evenings. The primary object, evidently, is to attract a larger attendance, and with the hope of increasing the regular attendance. By increasing the regular attendance and adding to the church membership, the influence and wealth of each church is increased, which, in the long run, means an increase in the pastor's stipend. Is not the showing of pictures in churches on Sundays, from this viewpoint, clearly for profit?

But let there be no misunderstanding. We are pleased to see pastors use pictures on Sundays and to know that material as well as educational benefit is gained. All we ask is that they be fair to their principles and to exhibitors. They should be above quibbling and act strictly "on the square."

On the other hand, exhibitors should exercise more intelligence and nicer discrimination in the selection of the pictures on their Sunday programs. For one day in the week at least they should be able to offer attractive programs of an educational character. These may not necessarily exclude refined photodramas and comedies, but they should exclude rough slap-stick and lurid melodramatic subjects. I am referring, of course, particularly to exhibitors in cities and towns where an animus against Sunday moving pictures has been created by the strict, church-going element.

In communities like Bloomingdale, Evanston and Winnetka, Ill., where Sunday picture theaters are barred altogether, and where (with the exception of the first mentioned) moving pictures are shown weekly in some of the churches, the case is different. These are illustrations of the kingdom of heaven taking possession by force.

Enlightened opinion, however, has already released mankind from much of the Pharisaism that is attached to religious practice, and persistent perseverance for the right, on the part of those who support moving pictures, will prevail in the end.

Ten Cent Morality.

Under this heading, in a recent issue, the Chicago Evening News had the following editorial which will be read with profit by all lovers of the moving picture and of truth:

> There exists in this, as well as in every other country, an uninstitutionalized, but none the less, powerful society for the suppression of vice in others. This association accomplishes much good work, but it seldom reverses its searchlight. Whatever is in the rear appears to be safe. It hardly ever objectivizes its ego.
>
> An example of its activities is found in the censorship which many cities maintain over moving picture shows. It is doubtless just and expedient to maintain such a censorship for the protection of the habitues of the movies, the most popular and the most patronized of amusements. But if censorship is right in principle it is natural to wonder why it is not extended to include every variety of entertainment.
>
> Apparently one may have one's morals protected for a dime, but if one chooses to spend a dollar or more one's morals may be in imminent, if unsuspected, danger. The so-called "legitimate" stage is practically unhampered by official restrictions. It is true that if a play or a burlesque is so "raw" as to be an open menace to the peace and dignity of the State, the police power may be invoked to suppress it, but the police power is seldom invoked for this purpose. In the name of "culture" much may be put over, to use an expressive uncensored term, that would not be tolerated in the cheap family theater.
>
> There are problem plays in which the problem seems to be how far adventures in pruriency may go without remonstrance, and which are received as "profound studies of life," whereas the same story told in the silent drama would cause the official censor instantly to seize his pencil and execute a wholesale deletion.
>
> Producers of such plays argue that "the public demands" this stuff, ignoring the fact that clean, wholesome productions, if bright and well presented, invariably have long runs. Moreover, if the public does demand tainted plays, why has not the 10-cent public as much right to be corrupted as the dollar public? Or, putting it the other way about, why has not the dollar public as much right to have its morals protected as the 10-cent public?
>
> Perhaps the seeming inconsistency here is one of those "blessings of poverty" of which we hear so much—and see so little.

Chicago Film Brevities.

It has been decided by the Selig Polyscope Company to make Los Angeles the center of Selig productions, pro tempore, and, consequently, the Selig studio at Chicago has been temporarily closed. Several offers have already been made to the Selig Company by film concerns who wish to lease the Chicago studio, but no action has been taken as yet along these lines. The Selig laboratories, which rank among the most complete in this country, will continue to be operated in Chicago.

* * *

T. N. Heffron, James Bradbury and Miss Grace Darmond have left Chicago for the Los Angeles studio, where they will join the Selig Coast forces. Mr. Heffron, as will be remembered by readers, has directed many meritorious Red Seal photoplays at the Chicago studio, including "The House of a Thousand Candles," "A Black Sheep," etc. Needless to say he will continue to direct Selig productions at Los Angeles. James Bradbury, the veteran comedian who has supported on the American stage such eminent stars as Edwin Booth, Barrett, Lester Wallack and others, scored a big hit at his essay before the camera in the Selig Red Seal photoplay, "A Black Sheep," and has become a regular Selig player.

* * *

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, recently completed the Selig Jungle-Zoo at Los Angeles. This remarkable institution houses the most modern of moving picture studios together with every facility for artistic work, and there the majority of the members of the Selig producing staff, together with Selig stock companies, are employed. With the approach of winter, the Selig Company has deemed it advisable to send the Chicago producing staff and stars to the land of perpetual sunshine. This new policy will not apply to the Tom Mix company which will continue working in the Southwest.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. T. Rock of Vitagraph arrived in the city Sunday morning, Nov. 7, and remained until the following Tuesday. They were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Rock, at their home in Rogers Park, during their stay. Mr. Rock was much pleased with the continued success of "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Olympic.

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Mfg. Company, told me a good story on the making of "The Raven," the other day, when I was out at the plant reviewing that six-reel feature. One of the camera men, who had been working for six weeks, day and night, incessantly, on the double, triple and other exposures, running up as high as twelve, accosted Mr. Spoor one night in the studio, after the six weeks' work, and said: "Gee, boss! This has been some grind!" "It sure has," replied Mr. Spoor. The camera man, after adjusting something that had gone wrong on his camera, then said with great solemnity, "That guy Poe must have been some nut."

I note that the Seattle V-L-S-E. publication, called "Pals," has been increased to eight pages in the issue of Nov. 6. Tom North, the live Seattle manager of V-L-S-E., Inc., and the managing editor, is to be congratulated on the interesting and instructive matter which the publication contains for his patrons. The issue mentioned has an advance article on the coming of S. L. Rothapfel, accompanied by a cut, and a warm welcome is given the great director of film presentations on his visit to the Queen City of the northwest.

James V. Bryson, for many years manager of Laemmle Exchanges, most of his time in that capacity having been spent in Minneapolis, has resigned the position to devote his entire time to his interests in the Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Company, with offices at 622 Hennepin avenue, on the second floor of the New Garden Theater Building. His partner in the enterprise is David G. Rogers, owner of the Nicolett Theater, Minneapolis, who recently was unanimously elected president of the Minnesota Exhibitors' Association. The Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Company is the distributing agent for Power and Simplex machines, and carries a complete line of accessories. The company has an expert mechanic in charge of its repair department. While regretting that Mr. Laemmle, by the change, has lost an able and hard-working representative, I join with many others in wishing Messrs. Rogers and Bryson all success.

Frederick R. Martin, formerly traveling representative for the Fox Film Corporation in Southern Indiana and Kentucky, from the Cincinnati office, has resigned to accept a similar position with the Metro Pictures Corporation. Mr. Martin will travel through Iowa, from the Des Moines office of that company. Mr. Martin called at this office on his way to Des Moines and gave some interesting information on the trade conditions in Southern Indiana and Kentucky. He stated that business was much better now than it had been for some time past, but not yet as good as it should be. "The big feature productions in the smaller towns have won many new patrons for moving pictures," said Mr. Martin. "The majority of the theaters in the smaller towns are giving at least three feature days a week, while many of them are running exclusive feature programs. The admission price is a question of very great importance at the present time, in the small towns, as the exhibitors realize that they cannot afford to pay the rental asked for the big productions and offer them to the public at the same admission charged for the smaller productions. This is especially the case in Kentucky. I found that quite a number of exhibitors in the smaller towns get 20 cents admission, without any difficulty, for the big features, and indications show that it will be only a short time until the 10 and 20 cent policy will be established all over. Kentucky, probably, has been very slow, so far as the improvement and uplift of the exhibition of moving pictures is concerned, but it is advancing rapidly and, with the educational movement, better roads, etc., now on foot in that State, rapid progress will be made. Already many modern theaters are under construction. A great deal depends upon the distributing system employed by the larger releasing concerns for these small-town exhibitors. It is just a matter of establishing the big feature programs permanently in these towns to assure better admission prices and the uplift of the exhibiting industry in many ways. The exhibitor has nothing to fear from the large concern which has a feature program to offer; but he has been seriously injured by the numerous wild-cat exchanges, which have used these smaller towns as a dumping ground for all the "junk" film they can get hold of. True, the small exhibitor cannot afford to pay the rentals which those in larger towns can afford, but if the larger exchanges will co-operate with them and assist them in putting on the better productions, the small towns will yield very valuable accounts." Mr. Martin was at one time connected with the business department of the Chicago office of the Moving Picture World, and we wish him pronounced success in the Iowa field.

At a recent conference with Chief Healey and First Deputy Schuettler of the Chicago police force, Captain O'Brien, head of Chicago's police detective force, suggested that an appropriation for a complete moving picture outfit be asked from the council, for the purpose of taking moving pictures, daily, of pickpockets and other prisoners arrested for misdemeanors in the city. The prisoners will be lined up daily, every morning, and made to march in line past a certain point. Unknown to them, a camera will be at work registering the faces of everyone in the line. "This is going to be a big thing for the department," said Captain O'Brien the other day. "It will be a great improvement over the regular daily line-up, and, of course, far better than the few pictures we print now and then in the police bulletin." It is the intention to have these daily moving pictures exhibited at all the police stations in the city, so as to increase the efficiency of the detective force by better enabling them to recognize old offenders.

Winnetka women are still strongly opposed to the exhibition of moving pictures in that secluded village. About two weeks ago an adventurous exhibitor proposed to build a moving picture theater at an outlay of $40,000, and sounded the village trustees on the matter. A report of the affair spread rapidly, and, immediately 128 housewives circulated a petition of protest and laid it before the council. Village Attorney Dickinson drew up an ordinance embodying their objections, and it will be presented to the trustees in a few days. The ordinance provides: "That moving picture exhibitions, vaudeville performances and burlesque shows, for pecuniary benefit, in the village of Winnetka, are hereby prohibited," also "that no building or structure now in existence in the village, or to be constructed within it, shall be used for the purpose of exhibiting moving pictures, etc., for pecuniary profit." A penalty of not less than $25 nor more than $100 is provided. In the meantime at the community house, which is affiliated with the Congregational Church, weekly moving pictures are shown. Of course the collections taken up at these presentations are not for pecuniary profit!

The Rev. Wm. T. McElveen, pastor of the Evanston Congregational Church, gave a "trial" moving picture presentation in the edifice recently, employing films connected with travel and natural history. The experiment was so successful that the pastor announced that regular Sunday night presentations will be given, beginning Nov. 21. The pastor, of course, gave out that these will be free moving picture shows. What about the collections that will be taken up at each of these?

The New Strand theater on Wabash avenue will change its weekly bills on Sundays, instead of on Mondays, as heretofore, beginning Sunday, Nov. 14. "Madame Butterfly" will be succeeded by "Bella Donna" on that date, with Pauline Frederick in the leading role. The children's bill, given Saturday morning, Nov. 13th, was comprised of "Such a Princess," and the comedy, "Hunting in Crazy Land."

"Damaged Goods" will be given its first screen presentation before the public in Chicago at the La Salle Opera House, Sunday evening, Nov. 14. After much wrangling with the Chicago censor board for the last six weeks, the films have been given official approval, but it is not stated just what cutouts, if any, have been made.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have announced that they will resume control of the Studebaker theatre on Monday, Nov. 29th. This announcement shows that the $2 picture program at that theater, under the auspices of the Triangle Film Corporation, has been a failure. Jones, Linick & Schaefer also announce that under their management the best productions of the three celebrated producers, Griffith, Ince and Sennett, will be screened for admission prices of 25 and 50 cents. For the latter price the best seat at night can be secured, and at the former price, on afternoons. The presentations will be run continuously, daily, from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

LOS ANGELES CENSORS UNDER FIRE.

Secretary Resigns and Charges are Made Against the President.

AT LAST it has happened. The local "board of censors" has come to a wall, the wall being several affidavits which tell of the covered-up work of two of the members, Judge A. P. Tugwell, who acted as president, and who was requested to resign, and E. T. Jorgensen, who held the office of secretary.

Graft charges were flying thick and fast here on Monday, when J. A. Quinn, who had tried to present "Damaged Goods," but who was restrained by the board, started the ball rolling by the legal papers. It is alleged that Jorgensen had last year accepted money from an exhibitor for "press agent work," but that in reality the work was for casting his vote favorably on the picture under fire at the time.

When the president of the council asked for the censor board president's resignation the Judge refused, but was told that unless his hands were up by the following day the council would act on the matter.

Two weeks ago this paper stated in this department that J. W. Brooks, a local exhibitor, was a member of the board of censors and was able to vote against his competitor's pictures. Now the council contemplates ejecting this exhibitor and rehashing the ordinance. The proposed law will make an exhibitorless board of censors. Judge Tugwell also manages a theater, but not a large downtown house.

The specific charges against the deposed president are that he has solicited and received special favors from the various film exchanges in the way of special rates for films which are shown at his theater, and it is also alleged that he collected $2 a week from about forty films for carrying films to and from the censor board's projection room. According to the affidavits the president used to pay a boy $2 a week to do the same thing, but that the boy became ill and when he returned for work was refused, the president telling the exchanges that he would not have the boy around the office, and continued to do the "service" himself with his automobile.

The members of the council who have investigated the case say that only the three members, Tugwell, Jorgensen and Brooks, the latter not guilty of any of the alleged actions, except his being a moving picture showman—are in any way out of place on the board, and that the other members, Los Angeles women, are not involved in the charges made.

When the investigation started, Councilwoman Lindsey, who has been especially active in this line, went to the bottom of the matter, and it is due largely to her efforts that the alleged conditions were uncovered. She said that she had simply been prompted by a desire for a square deal.

At a mass meeting held in the Majestic theater last Friday evening Councilwoman Lindsay stated that if the board of censors had outlived its usefulness it might as well be abolished.

Hisses, hoots and meagre applause followed the words of Judge A. P. Tugwell, as he spoke to the audience that had listened for two hours to the talks of many prominent persons who praised "Damaged Goods" and reprimanded the board of censors.

The meeting was called to discuss the board, and protest against its action in refusing the right to exhibit "Damaged Goods."

MABEL NORMAND AND ROSCOE ARBUCKLE TO MAKE EXTENSIVE TOUR.

Will Visit Many Cities En Route and "Shoot" Pictures for Triangle Program.

"MABEL" and "Fatty" will take a long trip. They will leave this week for New York City with a company of players and be gone for several months. Mabel has been enjoying a few weeks' vacation after her serious illness, and taken in the Big Show in San Francisco. She is now completely well and ready for almost anything in the way of "picture-sque" excitement, though a wedding scene with "shoe-showers" might still make her nervous.

Nothing however can make smiling, rotund Roscoe Arbuckle lose his nerve or perpetual smile. He will direct the pictures, and scenes will be taken at points of interest along the route. Stopovers will be made at Salt Lake City, Denver, Colorado Springs, Chicago, Niagara Falls and other places. In the party will be Ferris Hartman, Al. St. John, a cameraman, assistant director and a full corps of assistants. After a sojourn in the East, the return trip will be made by way of Panama Canal, where scenes will be taken. The popular Keystone players will be greatly missed by their friends and admirers in Los Angeles. A pleasant journey to you, Mabel and Fatty, and don't forget to come back to our fair city.

TRIANGLE PROGRAM PREMIER.

Clunes Auditorium Thronged on First Night.

On Monday evening, November 8th, Clunes Auditorium Theater was thronged as never before. The event was the first presentation of three photoplays on the new Triangle service headed by "The Iron Strain" featuring Dustin Farnum and Enid Markey from the studio of Thomas H. Ince; "The Lamb," by D. W. Griffith, starring Douglas Fairbanks, with Signe Auen, and a clever and lengthy comedy, with Raymond Hitchcock, Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand and other Keystone players.

The show started at 7.30 and long before the screen was illuminated the crowds began to enter the large theater and take their seats. Then came the fans. They took vantage points and waited for the entrance of the players. As each well-known player entered the house he was applauded and by the time the seats were filled the applause became a thunderous expression of the admiration of the thousands for the photoplay stars.

As for the pictures you have already had reviews, so it is unnecessary for us to say anything about them other than that they all went over big, not only because the audience was made up of moving picture men, but because the plays were worth while.

CALIFORNIA M. P. CORPORATION.

Producing "The Unwritten Law" on Elaborate Scale.

Recent advice from the studio of the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael indicate that they are at work on some well known copyright productions. General Manager Beyfuss is confident that some of their feature subjects stated for early release will bring the California brand in the limelight throughout the country.

INCITY INAUGURATES INITIAL STUDIO.

And a new town was born: "Incity."

Ince City is too long. Incity is shorter and decisive. That is the new name of Ince's newest studio located at Culver City, near Los Angeles. The new location was used this week by the veteran producer and his staff. He used 700 people in the scenes which "broke in" the new place. This does not mean that the entire studio is completed. Ince worked in one immense set constructed on the lot and on one of the eight stages.

The scenes were for the H. B. Warner story by C. Gardiner Sullivan and were the largest ones. It is of New York Stock Exchange life and is a hummer. We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Warner, the well-known eastern star. Friday was the opening day. Mr. Ince explained that he had been engaged by Kessel & Baumann just five years ago—on a Friday. On a Friday he left New York for the Coast. The same unlucky(?) day he took charge as director-general of the Edendale plant. Another Friday, sometime later, he closed the deal for the 18,000-acre ranch which now is known as Inceville. Friday seems to be Thomas's lucky day. Hope so!

ANNA HELD ARRIVES AT PALLAS STUDIO

Anna Held, queen of musical comedy and light operetta, arrived at our fair city Monday afternoon this week. She was met at the Salt Lake depot by Charles Eyton, manager of the Morosco Photoplay Company and other representatives from the Pallas studios. Miss Held left New York on Thursday last week after having signed a contract with Oliver Morosco to appear in a few photoplay productions for a consideration, it is stated, of $25,000.

Her first appearance before the camera will be in "Madame La Presidente," one of her greatest stage successes. Frank Lloyd will be the director for these productions. Anna Held is accompanied by her daughter, Mme. Liane Carrera, who was seen with her in vaudeville a few months ago, her maid and "Ting des Tourelles," a prize Peking dog which the noted comedienne does not permit to get out of her sight. The party is staying at the Hotel Alexandria pending the selection of a bungalow near the studio. Miss Held expressed her great delight in the prospect of spending a few weeks in beautiful Southland, and living in a California bungalow.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

A riproaring comedy is being made this week at the Hollywood studios of the Kalem Company. William Beaudine is the director, and Bud Duncan, Ethel Teare and Jack MacDermott play principals. There are many hilarious situations and some very reckless automobile driving by funny Bud Duncan. Miss E. M. Gibsone wrote the scenario to this photo-farce.

A stranger on earth would have been terrified to see the swarm of motorcycles which swooped down on Inceville this week to work in a big scene for a production featuring Bessie Barriscale and Bill Desmond. The motors were under the direction of "Dare Devil" Paul J. C. Derkum, motor maniac, scareless speeder, and nervy good fellow, who has won so many races. The bikes were representing Balkan bicycle skirmishers.

A realistic court-room scene was done at the Lasky studio the other day when Cecil B. De Mille completed "The Cheat," featuring Fannie Ward. The large chamber was filled with over 250 persons, and was presided over by Judge Arthur H. Williams, formerly of the New York Appellate Court. For this picture the Lasky Company was also fortunate in securing some real imported Chinese carved wood furniture. The valuable pieces were given to the film concern by Sing Fat, a millionaire Chinese store owner who runs a circuit of stores along this coast. This collection will be seen in the scenes laid in the home of the wealthy Japanese in this picture. The collection is valued at $25,000, and is being protected by watchmen, both night and day.

Directing 100 people, Billy Wolbert, of the Vitagraph, has returned from a steamer trip to San Diego, where he did scenes for "La Paloma," a coming feature on the big program. For this picture some wonderful settings are being filmed, and when completed the offering should more than please the film lovers who see it.

While visiting Thomas H. Ince at the canyon studio the other day, we had the pleasure of meeting Willie Collier, the Broadway comedian, who had just signed up with the veteran producer to work in a new comedy-drama which was written especially for him by C. Gardiner Sullivan. Mr. Collier likes the coast and the picture game, but is anxious to return to the footlights and the audience.

* * *

Ince has been doing things at both his large plants. Last week he added Irving Willat, the well-known eastern laboratory man, to his staff, and he will look after the whole of Ince's camera work. Three crack static men were also signed up. They are Bill Alder, Dal Clawson and Lee Bartholomew.

The dance floor will accommodate 300 and used jointly for pictures and dancing; 500 can watch pictures while 100 couples do the one-step. The house is to be modern in every way and equipped with the latest improvements.

If it had been a boy his name no doubt would have been Jack. As it is it is not impossible that a compromise may be affected and Jacqueline given her as a name.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven will begin work this week on "The Ivory Box," a five reel story by Olga Printzlau. This Universal feature will be staged under the direction of Jay Hunt.

The new Laughlin Theater at Pine and Fourth streets, Long Beach, Cal., will open this week. It is said to be one of the most pretentious picture houses in California, and according to the Long Beach papers will eclipse anything in either San Francisco or Los Angeles.

The Laughlin theater is built of solid brick and concrete and absolutely fireproof throughout. The house is handsomely decorated with mural paintings. The floors are covered with heavy carpets and the auditorium illuminated with concealed lights. The building has three gilded domes, and over the entrance is a handsome marquee brilliantly illuminated at night. The Laughlin is said to have cost at least $50,000. Archie Levy, well known vaudeville man on the coast, will be the manager. The program will consist of first run pictures and vaudeville.

Lasky's "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar, started its third week of phenomenal run at Tally's Broadway theater. Great crowds could be seen early in the morning waiting in line, at the box office. It is stated that over 100,000 people have attended this remarkable photoplay, in the last two weeks.

RETURN OF HORNE AND HIS KALEMITES.

James Horne has returned with his company of Kalem players from Fresno, where they have been filming scenes on a sheep ranch for the eighth episode of "Stingaree." The owner of the ranch is a native of Australia and came recently over here. He became much interested in the production of the story, which is of his own country, and loaned to the company many stuffed animals and other Australian material for the sets in the pictures. When the "Kalemites" left, the rancher presented True Boardman, who is taking the part of "Stingaree," with a saddle on which he had ridden many times over the same territory now being portrayed in the story.

Alma Hanlon in Special Kleine Drama

ALMA HANLON, who made her film debut in George Kleine's comedy, "The Fixer," will be given the lead in a story written especially for her by Max Marcin, the dramatist, who wrote "The House of Glass," now playing at the Candler theater, New York City.

Work on the production is already under way at the big Kleine studios in the Bronx. Miss Hanlon, who has been referred to as the film star who "leaped into fame over night," is surrounded by a splendid cast, all the members of which are enthusiastic admirers of the pretty ingenue.

Alma Hanlon.

Miss Hanlon's film experience is probably more limited than that of anyone else in the Kleine studios. Three months ago she determined to follow in the path of her forebears, ten generations of whom have been prominent in the theater, both here and abroad. Appearing in "La Voyage en Suisse," "Fantasma," the spectacular piece, "Superba" and "Humpty Dumpty," of which they were the originators, the Hanlon Brothers, of whom George is Miss Hanlon's father, won worldwide fame. Miss Hanlon first obtained an engagement as an "extra" at the Peerless studios, and after two days' work was engaged by Pathe. She appeared in three comedies and then was engaged by George Kleine, who recognized talents in her that were lying dormant, but by proper cultivation would blossom forth in appealing freshness. Miss Hanlon's charming beauty and fascinating personality contributed to her instant success which won her a permanent place in the Kleine organization and proved the inspiration for Max Marcin's remarkable story.

When completed, the feature will be released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

Putting the Punch in a Fight

Producing a Thanhouser Drama, Director Nowland Tries a New Method of Arousing Fighting Blood in His Actors.

DIRECTOR EUGENE NOWLAND might as well abandon all hope of winning the Noble peace prize. He spoiled his chances last Saturday afternoon at the Thanhouser studio while Leon J. Rubinstein—the irrepressible Ruby—shepherding a flock of press witnesses, looked on and smiled. Ruby does so love a fight. Sometimes, he declares, fighting proves an inspiration, and, then again, inspiration produces a fight. Of course, when he said that he referred to Director Nowland's inspiration, and, press agent that he is, he still spoke the truth.

When it was all over, when the Dove of Peace once again visited New Rochelle, a doctor was ministering to a cut knee owned by Morris Foster, a lacerated hand attached to John Lehnberg's muscular arm, and to a black eye belonging to Gladys Hulette. Later in the day Lehnberg collapsed completely, and an examination showed that two ribs were broken. If all goes well, he will be on his feet again in about ten days.

As an offering to the patron saint of pictures with a "punch," Director Nowland will contribute his production of Clinton H. Stagg's story of the moonshiners, called "In the Name of the Law." And if it does not contain the "punchiest" of all fight scenes he will be disappointed. Not content with telling his actors to battle as though a $20,000 purse depended upon the outcome, he went to unprecedented lengths in stirring up emotional feeling in the combatants, so that they just couldn't help tearing each other to pieces.

The Thanhouser outdoor stage contained the requisite setting—a genuine cabin built of logs; in the rear a wood fire crackled under a pot; in the center of the room stood a table, near it a chair; otherwise the space was left clear for action. The signal for Foster and Lehnberg to grapple was the crack of a pistol shot fired by Director Nowland, who was crouching, shouting and gesticulating on the side lines. In each hand he held a pistol and between his verbal exhortations for more and more ferocity there came the sharp reports of the director's firearms. On the bank, only a few feet away, half a dozen men pointed rifles at the sky and at a signal that the fight had reached its climax they added a deafening volley to the din and excitement.

Then Miss Hulette came from a corner of the cabin to separate the men, and a pianist, Miss Dolly Keough, supplied an accompaniment of melodramatic music for the scene of love and entreaty—a scene that had to be cut, for the little actress had stepped in the way of a clenched fist. Her eye was hurriedly treated and she carried Director Nowland's scene of relentless realism through to the end.

Before all this happened, Ruby's sensitive reportorial flock had been fortified by a substantial luncheon, Director Nowland acting as host, and had enjoyed a glimpse of the brighter side of life in an elaborate cabaret scene being staged by Frederick Sullivan for a Thanhouser feature, entitled "Her Last Performance."

Mount Vernon Company Enjoined

Essanay and Keystone Companies Win in the Suits Instituted Against Alleged Dupers of Chaplin Films.

IN the equity suits brought in the United States District Court by the Essanay Film Company and the Keystone Film Company, against Paul R. Hedrick, J. Blair Smith and another trading as the Mt. Vernon Pictures Company, a permanent injunction has been issued by order of Judge Charles M. Hough.

The suit of the Keystone company was based on the alleged violation of its right to a number of Chaplin plays, among them being "Dough and Dynamite," "A Gentleman of Nerve," "His Trysting Places," etc. The actions were brought about by reason of the alleged activities of Abraham George Levy and associates, trading under the name of the Charlie Chaplin Company. Levy has been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury, charged with violating the criminal section of the copyright law.

Similar suits were brought by the same complaints against the Pierson Film Company, of Ossining. The defendants in these cases either denied outright any violations of the rights of the suing companies, or admitted having made films for Levy, under the honest belief that he had the rights to the plays he ordered negatives of made by the defendants. They surrendered all the stuff and the suits were discontinued without costs.

Suit On Over Trademark

Selig Polyscope Company Complains That Kay-Bee Is Violating Its Diamond.

A SUIT in equity has been brought in the United States District Court by the Selig Polyscope Company against the New York Motion Picture Corporation, alleging a violation of the trademark of the complainant. After setting out that William Selig was a pioneer in the picture field followed by the organization of the Polyscope Company, which took over all Selig business, including his diamond device as a distinctive trademark, the complaint alleges that the defendant has adopted a trademark, using a diamond with the letters "K. B." inside its lines. The complainant, an Illinois corporation with offices in Chicago, declares the trademark, duly registered, is of much greater value than the $3,000 jurisdictional sum. Prayer is for an injunction pending the suit and answer to interrogatories affecting the issues.

The defendant has filed answer neither admitting nor denying the charges in the first ten paragraphs of the complaint, but demanding strict proof. Regarding its own device the company declares the Polyscope diamond is merely an outline drawing, that Selig and the company have varied it, sometimes printing in the word Selig, at others adding other signs and symbols. The answer declares the trademark registered was illegal in that the Patent Office had no right, because of its indefiniteness and lack of distinctive merit, to issue the copyright certificate. The device used by it, the answer declares, is distinctive, as it always carries the letters "K-B" inside the diamond and that because of its value as such symbol, it has added greatly to the defendant's profits.

Burton George, Actor, Scenarioist, Director

EDISON has added a new director to their forces in the person of Burton George, a man well grounded in theatrical experience and long in the motion picture business in varied activities—actor, scenario writer and directing. For his first Edison film he is working on a three-reel feature in which Pat O'Malley and Leonie Flugrath, the little girl star of the stage, will be featured.

Burton George.

Mr. George was born in Lake Charles, La., and spent fourteen active years in that field which has proved so fruitful for successful screen actors because of its wide character changes—theatrical stock companies in New Orleans and, later, five years in stock in San Antonio and Denver, usually doing heavies. Then he went to New York City where, after playing in a well-known stock company, he experienced motion pictures for the first time in the old Owl Picture Company.

After another dip into stock work, he joined the Biograph forces, where he acted for about six months, before Griffith had yet become a director. From there he went to the Reliance for one year and then out west with the New York Motion Picture Company, acting for two years under Director Thomas W. Ince.

His first directing opportunities came when he joined the Universal where, after a brief time as an actor, he became a director, writing and putting on an unusually large number of his own scenarios. The next three years were spent with Lubin, first as an actor and later as director. His appointment to the Edison directorship followed this.

Mr. George is known as one of the most energetic directors in the business, the speed with which he turns out footage in no wise affecting the quality of the production. His wide experience as an actor, scenario writer and director enables him to lose no time in knowing what effect he wishes to secure.

Equitable Plans Big Program

New Directors, New Stars, and Original Material Provided for a Remarkably Aggressive Campaign.

GENERAL MANAGER FELIX F. FEIST of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, this week announced the completions of all equipping at the Equitable's Fifty-second street studio, and the commencing of work there by three Equitable directors.

When Frank Powell, Charles Seay and John Ince begin their new productions, Equitable hopes and anticipates optimistically that by February 1, they will have at least fifteen finished productions on the shelf, and thereby be enabled to diversify their releases, as they have planned to do.

In addition to Powell, Ince, S. E. V. Taylor and Seay, E. Mason Hopper, Webster Cullison, Edmund Lawrence and Joseph Golden and Harry Pollard are busily engaged on production at Flushing, L. I., Fifty-second street or the Triumph studios in the Bronx.

Three permanent stars, Muriel Ostriche, Gail Kane and Margarita Fischer, are either at work, or awaiting their next vehicle. Miss Kane has finished "The Labyrinth," Margarita Fischer is in the final scenes of "The Dragon" and Muriel Ostriche has just completed her first Equitable release, "A Daughter of the Sea." Now Brandon Tynan, Frank Sheridan, Molly McIntyre, Emmett Corrigan, Henry Kolker and Gail Kane are to begin work at one of the three Equitable producing headquarters.

Another tremendous leap to the front is promised by Equitable, through an arrangement now being made whereby twelve of the most noted writers of the day are to devote their time to writing material for the Equiable screen.

Eugene Walters, author of "Paid in Full," "The Wolf," "The Easiest Way," "The Wife," and "Homeward Bound," is about to conclude arrangements with the Equitable to furnish them with six original and virile stories a year: Rachel Crothers, whose numerous plays and novels have established her as a factor in fictiondom; Harriet Ford, author of "The Argyle Case," "The Dummy," and other plays; Edwin Milton Royle, author of a large number of big stories and plays, including "The Squaw Man," and eight other noted writers, are under arrangement with Equitable to produce a certain number of stories and plots, and it is thought that work will begin on this material within a few weeks.

William Stoermer, until recently studio manager for Thomas Ince, with Triangle, has assumed a similar position at Equitable's Fifty-second street studio, and under the general direction of Isidor Bernstein will handle the material side of all productions at that place.

The fact that William Courtenay's picture, "Sealed Lips," based on "The Silence of Dean Maitland," in which Mr. Courtenay was supported by Mary Charleson, formerly of Lubin, and Arthur Ashley, formerly of Metro and Thanhouser, two purely screen actors, turned out so generally excellent, leads Equitable to adhere to the policy of blending stage and screen stars in each of the forthcoming plays.

For Frank Sheridan's production of "The Man Higher Up," a mixed cast of players has been assembled. The cast is the result of Equitable's new policy of endowing each of its productions with the very best talent obtainable, without consideration of primary cost.

In addition to Mr. Sheridan the cast of "The Man Higher Up" will include Clara Whipple and Mary Charleson, two regular screen players who are members of the Equitable regular stock cast, Charles Gleason, Frank Beamish, Henry Spengler, George Arbine and William H. Tooker, all of whom have appeared in principal parts in feature productions, and have proven their worth, will have important roles in Sheridan's picture. Marie Booth, Myrtis Coney and Mary Weston will handle the lesser feminine parts.

With the acquisition of the new directors Equitable expects to be quite busy during the holiday season.

Premier in New Offices

THE Premier Program Corporation, announcement of which was made last week, has moved into its permanent quarters and now occupies the entire second floor of the Leavitt Building, 126-8-30-2-4 West 46th street.

This location is in the heart of the uptown film district, being centrally located near the Railroad Terminals, Subways, Elevated and Surface systems of transportation.

The equipment throughout is mahogany and although simple and dignified is rich and serviceable. The main entrance is through an outer office, space in which is reserved for the use of stenographers and clerks. Opening directly from this room are the offices of the Sales Department, Advertising and Publicity, and such other departments as come into direct contact with the largest number of daily visitors. Also opening into this office is an enclosed reception room for the use of visitors not actually engaged in one of the other offices.

A corridor leading from the main entrance room communicates with the offices of the corporation. These offices occupy the front of the building, having, therefore, ample light and air. Along this same corridor, also, separate offices are provided for each of the five producing companies, whose features will be released on the Premier Program. Beyond the offices of the producing companies are the offices of the accounting department and beyond these in turn are the rooms occupied by the scenario department.

The projection room has every modern convenience. The equipment in the booth includes two projection machines and all other appurtenances requisite for high grade projection. Immediately adjoining the operator's booth is a fireproof vault of ample capacity.

FIFTEEN MALEFACTORS IN UNIVERSAL'S "GRAFT."

The greatest bunch of grafters ever gathered under one roof, that's what it is. Fifteen of 'em, and every single one of a different variety of a grafter, but a grafter nevertheless. These are the fifteen characters who will appear, one in each release of "Graft," the new Universal Film Manufacturing Company serial, which is being written by fifteen different authors.

You might say that some look to be perfect gentlemen.

The Grafters in "Graft" (Universal).

They are in real life, but in reel life they are some of the world's most noted criminals. The first of the "Graft" series will be released the first part of December, immediately following the three-week serial of J. Warren Kerrigan in the new adventures of Terence O'Rourke. The first chapter is by Irvin S. Cobb, and is now being made at Universal City.

"A YELLOW STREAK" (Metro).

In "A Yellow Streak" Lionel Barrymore, who is shown in the picture in the garb of a parson, is first a young man of Wall street who loses home, friends and money because of moral cowardice, but who later recovers his grasp on life in his experiences in a Western country. He returns to New York, humiliates his enemies and demonstrates that the "yellow streak" in his character has been eliminated.

Scene from "A Yellow Streak" (Metro).

The picture is being made at the studios of Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., by Director William Nigh, and Miss Irene Howley is starred with Mr. Barrymore. The subject is in five reels and is scheduled for release in December.

Mae Hotely

Lubin Comedienne Takes a Vacation for the First Time in Four Years.

THEATERGOERS who get the first runs will miss Mae Hotely from the Billie Reeves comedies—or any others for that matter, for a little while—for the Lubin comedienne is taking a vacation, her first in four years. At the close of the original Reeves contract her director, Arthur D. Hotaling, announced a layoff, and as he is also her husband, there was no scandal when he took his star on an auto trip up the Hudson for a couple of weeks with their daughter, Leola May. Then they came back to the big city and spent a week looking over the subway holes and at the present time they are in Los Angeles getting ready for a new series of Lubin pictures with fresh players, new backgrounds, new authors and new ideas generally. For the past four years the Hotaling section of the Lubin company has been stationed in Jacksonville in the winters and during one awful summer. The other three years they came north for the hot weather and summered in Atlantic City, but they worked unceasingly for nearly four solid years and both felt the need of a rest. It was decided that when work was resumed a new locale might give an added touch of novelty to the comedies and so a move to the westward was made. A studio will be established in Los Angeles, but it is the plan of the director to work up and down the coast to get the greatest possible variety to the backgrounds and to employ the entire scenic resources of the "photoplay coast."

Ruby Hoffman with Kleine

MISS RUBY HOFFMAN, whose splendid work in George Kleine's recent comedy, "The Fixer," featuring Bickel and Watson, won her so many laudatory letters from picture fans and numerous complimentary remarks from trade critics, is now a permanent member of the Kleine forces. Miss Hoffman will be seen in the forthcoming Kleine drama, "The Danger Signal," founded on the Saturday Evening Post story, "Canavan, The Man Who Had His Way," by Rupert Hughes. Miss Hoffman's capable work in the comedy and her desire to return to more dramatic roles was responsible for her transfer from the Bickel and Watson Company to that headed by Arthur Hoops, opposite whom, in the feminine lead, she will appear in "The Danger Signal."

Otto Sarony Co.
Ruby Hoffman.

Those who remember "The Gentleman from Mississippi" will recall some of the best work of her career. In the role of Mrs. Spangler and the engenue part of Carolina, Miss Hoffman displayed great versatility. Every "Gentleman from Mississippi" company traveling out of New York carried Miss Hoffman in its cast, an unusual tribute to her remarkable genius.

Miss Hoffman's name is almost synonymous with Philadelphia stock companies, having been a stellar member of the Girard, Standard and Walnut Street companies for a number of years. With Eugenia Blair she endeared herself to the theater loving public of the Quaker City.

She has had her share of traveling experience, too, principally with that well-known Daniel Frohman drama, "Detective Keene," in which she appeared sixty-two consecutive weeks, covering the entire United States in that time. She handled the engenue lead in "Seven Days," was starred in two vaudeville sketches and toured the country with Eugenia Blair in "The Woman in the Case."

Miss Hoffman's experience plus her exceptional work in "The Fixer" is ample assurance of her future in pictures.

Another Team in Pictures

ONE after another the stage favorites are taking to the screen. This time Tom Waters has succumbed to the motion picture epidemic, taking his wife, May Wallace, with him. They were engaged first in a one-act comedy for the Gaumont company at Flushing, L. I. This is called "Does Advertising Pay?" It was released on the Mutual program November 7.

Tom Waters is one of the old-timers, and his broad comedy is admirable for screen purposes. Being a fine musician, his one regret is that motion pictures cannot convey one of the most pleasing features of his stage work—his music. His first engagement professionally was as pianist for the late Bill Nye. After touring with the humorist, Waters went with "One of the Bravest," at that time one of the most popular attractions on the road. Musical comedy has been the medium through which he has entertained America, and as a comedian he has played in some of the most famous productions of the last two decades.

Tom Waters.

Mrs. Waters began her theatrical career in that thrilling yet bucolic melodrama, "Only a Farmer's Daughter." Quitting the drama after a few seasons, she went in for farce comedy, where her laugh-provoking abilities were soon recognized. Her greatest success in this line, perhaps, was with Donnelly and Girard in "The Greazer."

To show her versatility Mrs. Waters next essayed comic opera, appearing as one of the three daughters in "Wang." Later she was prominent in the support of leading stars, among them being Weber and Fields. Since her marriage in 1902 to Mr. Waters she has played with him as a co-star.

Modern Theater Construction*

By Edward Barnard Kinsila.

Article III.

THE present article will treat solely with the salient features of a spacious theater catering to popular-priced audiences and having a comfortable seating capacity for over 1,800 persons. Such a house should be erected on a residential promenade or shopping thoroughfare in the midst of a thickly settled section of this class of people.

The basement of the building underneath the auditorium should be utilized as a spacious waiting-room, where patrons could be entertained by pictured news events of the world.

Abundant Cloak Rooms.

Along either side of this basement hall provide extended counter space, with abundant hanging space behind it for hats and coats, well attended by uniformed maids in pocketless dresses, so that patrons might divest themselves of their outer clothing and recover it quickly when leaving the theater. Avoid fixed charges for hat checking. Furnish locked cash boxes for tips underneath the counter, with coin slots through the counter. After the day is over, make a just division of the tips with the attendants.

Air Conditioning Chamber.

Also in the basement, underneath the front portion of the auditorium, construct an air conditioning chamber as described in my previous article on "Heating and Ventilation." As the provision made therein may not be adequate for properly cooling so large an auditorium as shown here, it might be better to install a cold water spray, supplied from an artesian well, or artificially cooled, in place of the icebox. This spray should be a constant thin sheet of cooled water, through which the air intended for cooling the auditorium is either forced or sucked before being introduced into the air supply ducts.

Inclosed Auditorium.

Build the auditorium as per the accompanying diagram, the floor representing a broken saucer with the broken edge turned toward the stage. Inclose the orchestra floor at the back with inclosed boxes, and provide double glass paneled swinging doors for each aisle. This will give a comfortable, cozy appearance, not attainable otherwise, to a very large auditorium.

Locate the orchestra in one of the stage boxes provided for that purpose, and the chorus in the opposite box.

Make the approach to the balcony from the ground floor at two points by broad staircases on either side of the foyer, and provide tunnels on the mezzanine floor to pierce the balcony at six points to the broad cross aisle immediately back of the open loges. Equip cloak-rooms between the tunnels on the mezzanine floor for the accommodation of those in the balcony, and shape the mezzanine floor in the form of a balcony overlooking the foyer. To directly reach the rear section of the balcony continue the approach stairways by an additional flight. Such an arrangement will greatly lessen the number of steps usually employed to reach balcony levels.

SPACE GAINED BY LOW BACK CHAIRS 6" PASSAGE WHEN SEAT IS TIPPED UP 16"

Comfortable Chairs.

Install twenty and twenty-one inch low-backed arm chairs and space them thirty-six inches from back to back. The chair the top of whose back just reaches the middle of the spine is far more comfortable than the high-backed chair generally employed that induces a slouchy attitude calculated to induce spinal curvature. It also provides more passage distance between the rows, as illustrated by the small diagram of a chair here shown.

If desired, tiny electric bulbs may be inserted in the upper back rim of each seat, to be operated by the tip-up movement of the seat. With an automatic tip-up seat, the electric current would be connected and the bulb lighted to show that the seat was vacant. When the seat was occupied it would be down and the current closed, extinguishing the light. Electric connection might also be made with the box office to register the number of vacant seats in the house.

Stage Arrangement.

The outer proscenium opening should be seventy feet wide between the columns, and about thirty-five feet high. The curved stage front, three feet nine inches above the floor level first row of seats, should be fitted with metallic filament tubular lamps, similar to those described later for general illumination arranged in three horizontal rows—one red, one blue and the other white—to serve as footlights.

Back of this the stage platform should be submersible, to permit the introduction of water for an artificial canal, about twelve feet wide, spanned in the middle by a wide bridge curved upward sufficiently to permit the free passage underneath of Venetian gondolas containing small bands of serenading gondoliers. This would permit the introduction of brief spectacular scenes between pictures to relieve the choral numbers.

Movable Inner Proscenium Arch.

Just skirting the inner walls of the canal as they come into view should be arranged movable ornamental inner proscenium arches, built of fireproofed profile, and capable of being diminished or extended to accommodate the scene on the stage. Profile arches are light enough to admit the introduction of two or more styles of arch.

The rear of the stage should be canopied with a circular horizon, as indicated on the diagram, painted a sky blue, thus making it possible to introduce moving clouds, storm or night effects by the aid of a stereopticon located above the inner side of the inside arch. If church steeples or other obstacles protrude above the sky line, they may be blocked out by opaque stencils fixed at the lens of the stereopticon.

Double Screen.

Two projection screens, at right angles to each other, should be erected on a circular turntable of the automobile garage pattern, mounted on a hydraulic jack capable of being raised or lowered, thus permitting a variety of screen designs to fit changed stage decorations. If translucent screens are employed, projection could be made effectively from behind. There are any number of good translucent screens on the market not controlled by patents.

Concealed Lighting.

A pleasing effect may be secured by concealed cornice lighting, with no lamp fixtures visible anywhere. This should be done with specially contrived lamps designed for this purpose. These tubular metallic filament lamps are about fourteen inches long, with narrow sockets and small connections to produce a continuous, rather than an intermittent, line of illumination. They are made about three inches in diameter to avoid overheating and are silvered on the inside to prevent dust from accumulating on the reflector surface. If installed in two rows and equipped with dimmers, any desired degree of light may be readily obtained, and if the cove above the cornice be properly curved, all evidence of the source of light is removed.

Lighting of this sort permits the exhibition of pictures on a darkened stage, while the auditorium is brilliantly lighted. Only direct rays of light that reach the screen affect the sharpness of the picture.

The Actual Construction.

Let us now turn our attention to the labor and material requirements of a colossal theater. A topographical survey of the premises should first be made by a competent engineer at a cost of about twenty dollars. The excavating should next be done for about thirty-five cents a cubic yard, with a varying charge for depositing the excavated earth outside the premises when necessary. Rock excavation, with blasting, costs from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars and fifty cents per cubic yard.

Foundations.

Foundation walls, two feet thick, built from below the basement line and not less than five feet below the outside

grade line (to avoid the ravages of frost), composed of one part Portland cement, two parts clean sand and four parts broken stone, should not cost more than $5.40 per cubic yard, laid without forms, and $6.75 per cubic yard laid with well-braced, smooth forms.

Underneath the foundation walls lay a concrete footing of the same mixture, two feet thick, and extending six inches either side of the wall; also substantial footings for the base of all columns. Footings rarely require forms, the mixture being dumped into the trenches, which are excavated the proper size.

Extraordinary care is necessary in determining the character of the base of your foundations, particularly where rock and earth occur, or where filled-in ground, marsh or quicksand exists. Piling, caisson or special footing construction may become necessary.

Protect your foundation wall against dampness by adding a standard waterproofing compound to your concrete mixture; also supply additional protection by furnishing proper drainage.

Structural Steel.

The structural steel for the skeleton framework of the building should be computed by an architect or engineer, and ordered in advance of everything else. When purchased under mill delivery (meaning after fabrication at the mills), it should cost about $55 per ton of 2,000 pounds. When ordered from stock, to insure quicker delivery, it should cost about $6 more per ton.

and plates, and are by far the cheapest and best form of steel column construction, having successfully resisted the severest fire tests. They are sold by half a dozen firms at a regulation price per foot.

Hollow Tile.

Construct the exterior walls of twelve-inch heavy tile building block, with varying sizes for interior partition walls. While the exterior walls are merely curtain walls, the Board of Fire Underwriters demand that they be twelve inches thick, to resist the pressure from high-pressure fire-extinguishing apparatus.

If at any point in the walls where columns be not provided extra bearing strength be required, grout the interior vertical cells of the hollow tile with liquid concrete to their foundation base. A good mixture of concrete, reinforced by the interior webs of hollow tile, will furnish a perfect monolithic concrete column.

Hollow building tile should cost, laid, about twenty cents a square foot; the necessary exterior stucco—two coats, a brown coat and a splatter dash coat—about sixty cents a square yard extra; and the interior plaster, laid directly on the wall without furring, two coats, also sixty cents a square yard.

Floors.

Many of the approved methods of concrete arch flooring, five inches thick, may be laid for from one dollar to one dollar and a quarter per square yard. If it be four inches thick, it will be cheaper and equally good. If the stage be covered with a wood top floor, the under fireproof floor should be laid with hollow tile arches rather than concrete arches, as the escaping moisture from a concrete mixture is liable to warp the wood after it is laid. The price of several forms of efficient hollow tile arches is about equal to concrete arches.

Steel Windows, Doors and Partitions.

In erecting a theater it should be built absolutely fireproof, without a particle of inflammable material in it. Incredible as it may seem, this may all be accomplished at an additional cost of ten per cent., or less. Steel windows may now be had at about the same price as wood ones. Steel doors cost about double. Light partitions may be cheaply constructed of rigid expanded metal, well plastered on both sides. All stairs should be cast iron or concrete, or a combination of both.

Ceilings, Suspended and Otherwise.

All ceilings should be plastered on expanded metal, whether curved or ornamental ceilings, suspended from the construction above by ordinary wires, the additional cost for scaffolding and the extra plaster required for expanded metal being small.

Roofing.

The basis of the roof should be three-inch concrete slabs, covered with Barrett specification five-ply tar and gravel roofing. The concrete slabs cost about seventy-five cents per square yard and the roofing about five dollars per square of one hundred square feet.

Machinery for Stage Effects.

The machinery for the submersing of sections of the stage will depend largely on the extent and character of the apparatus. For the turntable the cheaper form of garage turntables will answer, mounted on a pivoted hydraulic jack.

Heating, Ventilating and Plumbing.

The heating of a theater by boiler may be reckoned at ninety-five cents per square foot of radiation required. Add to this the cost of installing the water spray. The plumbing is a more difficult figure to give and depends largely on the character of the work. A good siphon-jet water closet may be bought for twenty-five dollars complete, excellent urinals at six dollars and lavatories from fifteen to eighteen dollars each. The fittings and piping, of course, cost extra.

Illumination and Decoration.

The lighting contract should be let by competition, as should the decoration. The interior decoration of a theater should never be left to the architect. If he be an expert in artistic mass work required for architecture, he is not likely to be equally good in minute detail work. They are two distinct branches of art, and the human mind is incapable of thinking equally well in mass and detail. The price for decorating a theater as here planned should not exceed five thousand dollars. To my mind, the finest decorated theater in New York City, the Hudson theater, cost but fifty-six hundred dollars to decorate, and was done by the highest-priced and best firm of decorators in America.

The ordinary painting is not much and costs very little. The chairs and draperies are again a matter for the decorators, their price depending on their quality.

To roughly estimate the cost of an absolutely fireproof theater, minus plumbing, heating, lighting and seating, multiply the number of cubic feet contained in the building by sixteen cents.

Manny Goldstein

MANNY GOLDSTEIN, for the past few years manager of New York Exchanges for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been promoted to be assistant to Morris Hoffman, general manager of exchanges for the Universal. Mr. Goldstein has left for Denver, Salt Lake City, and several other important northwestern exchanges, where he will remain for eight or nine months, building up business and increasing output generally.

Manny Goldstein.

Though a comparatively young man Mr. Goldstein has had much experience in exchange work, starting a large office in Des Moines and later going to Boston, where he was one of the large exchange men. Then he came to New York City, going to the Universal. He was shortly made assistant to Mr. Hoffman, and when the latter became general manager of exchanges and needed an assistant, he naturally thought of Mr. Goldstein.

The result was that Mr. Goldstein was promoted, and his rapid rise to one of the most influential positions in the exchange end of the Universal is due in no small respect to his efforts to satisfy the exhibitors and his ability to deliver the goods once he had landed a contract.

ELABORATE SETTING FOR "UNWRITTEN LAW."

Elaborateness of sets and costumes will be an outstanding feature of the early scenes of Edwin Milton Royle's "Unwritten Law" as it is now being produced in motion pictures by the California Motion Picture Corporation at its San Rafael studio. It is reported that for this production the gowns of Beatriz Michelena alone will run far up into the thousands of dollars.

This announcement is particularly interesting to Miss Michelena's large following of admirers, since it will be her first opportunity to appear on the screen as a daughter of wealth, and it will consequently stand out in sharp contrast to the great majority of her previous roles. Heretofore she has won her way to the hearts of the motion picture public in such impersonations as "Salomy Jane," "Mignon," "Lovey Mary" of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Lily" of "The Lily of Poverty Flat" and Nell Sanders in "Salvation Nell." In each of these characterizations the predominating environment was one of poverty. In the present picture, however, Miss Michelena is to be introduced as the bride of a millionaire attorney with aspirations for the Governorship, and the wealth of her surroundings is to be emphasized for the purpose of contrast with later scenes. An elaborate ball, a fashionable cabaret and a boudoir, nursery and drawing-room of unusually rich appointments are among the big early scenes of the production.

LUBIN'S "HEARTACHES" FINISHED.

Director Joseph Kaufman has completed work on the four-reel original photoplay drama by Daniel Carson Goodman, "Heartaches," in which June Daye, the Lubin star, is appearing, and has begun the making of an original four-reel production by Anthony P. Kelly, "The Rift in the Lute," in which June Daye will also be featured with Craufurd Kent, the new Lubin player, playing opposite, and Inez Buck, formerly of "The Misleading Lady" company.

HUMAN MOVEMENTS ANALYZED.

Remarkable Educational Subject Released by the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE above named is without a doubt one of the most remarkable educational films that has ever been made, and is an analytical treatise of the action of the muscles of the body of the athlete in walking, running, the running jump, the high jump, throwing the stone, etc.

Preceding each concentrative analysis, pictures taken at ordinary speed serve as an illustration of the particular movement to be dealt with, after which the same thing is given a slow analysis by means of pictures taken with a Pathe high-speed camera, at the rate of one hundred pictures to the second.

The unusual character of this film as well as its educational value, serves to make it attractive. In fact it is one of the most fascinating pictures of the kind that could well be imagined. The slowness, and effortless deliberation with which the movements are executed, are almost weird in effect, and at the same time wonderfully graceful.

VITAGRAPH'S "HOOLIGAN AND DOOLIGAN" COMEDY.

The Vitagraph Comedy Four, Flora Finch, Kate Price, Hughie Mack and William Shea, in a cast augmented by Nitra Frazer and Donald MacBride, are working in a one-part comedy, entitled "When Hooligan and Dooligan Ran for Mayor," being produced by Wally Van.

Mr. Exhibitor, if you are interested in Sunday entertainments send for our pamphlet, "The Sunday Show and the Law." Sent free upon application.

Marguerite Clayton

MARGUERITE CLAYTON, who is so well known as leading woman with "Broncho Billy," G. M. Anderson, at Essanay's Western studio at Niles, Cal., now is at the Eastern studio at Chicago where she is taking leading parts.

Miss Clayton, who is twenty-one years old, has been in motion picture work, but two and a half years, but rose rapidly from an extra girl to leads. She joined the Essanay company by answering an advertisement for a position. She is a girl of the Western plains, having been born and raised in Ogden, Utah, where her father is a civil engineer.

Marguerite Clayton.

She spent her time on her pony, racing over the plains, when she was not in school. When she saw the advertisement for an actress she sent her photograph which led to an interview and later an engagement. She showed marked histrionic ability from the first and in the short time she has been playing has leaped to a place as one of the leading actresses in photoplays.

Her first play with the Eastern company is "A Daughter of the City," a five-act feature, which is released on the V-L-S-E program in December. Miss Clayton plays the lead, the part of a daughter of the city. E. H. Calvert plays the leading masculine role, that of the wealthy business man, who has become a vulture. The hero role is taken by John Junior, well known for years on the speaking stage.

Miss Clayton is remarkably well fitted for her part, that of a young and innocent girl, poor and beautiful, who easily falls into the clutches of the vuture, but whose inherent goodness and horror of evil finally extricates her from the net set for her. The play itself is a strong morality drama and one that sounds a note of warning to all girls to keep far from the primrose path. The play is directed by E. H. Calvert.

Becky Bruce

DISCRIMINATING consideration was used in selecting a leading lady to support James J. Corbett and Paul Gilmore in the forthcoming Augustus Thomas production, "The Other Girl," which inaugurates the famous stage plays of the dean of American dramatists by the Raver Film Corporation. The role of Catherine Fulton required more than beauty, pulchritude and grace. It required intelligence and a natural artistry as well as versatility. Director of Productions Percy Winter considered many applicants for the role but after a painstaking process of elimination Becky Bruce was accorded the selection because she was "type" and enjoyed a reputation as well. Patrons of the original productions in New York of "Prunella," "A Pair of Sixes" and "The Show Shop" well remember her work in these vehicles and will realize how thoroughly the judgment of Director Winter will be sustained by her work in the Raver-Thomas production. Miss Bruce is pretty, as the screen will show. Her eyes are bright and snappy with a roguish twinkle. When she smiles, two dimples appear. When she laughs, a pearly set of teeth are exposed.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

CERTAINLY it is very nice to have a program, but what do you do with it when you get it? Do you use it to hold trade, or to make trade, or what? Do you spend say three dollars and a half on some programs and then shy on spending another dollar—perhaps in tickets—to get them where they can do you real good? The reason we ask is that the other day by accident we stumbled upon a program of the neighborhood house in our home territory. We saw that they had a series of stories that we had written and would like to show the family; not that they were much to brag about, but just because. Coming to town was too much of a gamble—also an eleven mile trip, and here they were being run off right under our noses and with never a smell because the distribution was inside the house and now and then to shops that would pass them out when they felt like it. More than that, we asked for a program at the Saturday matinee and were told they were not in yet.

In many ways the house is nicely run. You are made glad that you came, and they try to give you the best they can afford, but they seem to trust to luck to get you in instead of making a campaign. Of course not many patrons can be coaxed to a house because there is being shown a series of their own stories, but you can at least tell what you have and try to tell it in a way to make non-writing patrons want to see what you have. You don't have to be secretive. Get the broadest distribution you can afford. Do not trust to the grocer or the dry goods man to get your stuff out for you. Get reliable boys and see that programs are sent out. It pays if you have anything worth while showing.

Hustling in China.

The Arcade theater, Tientsin, China, is running the "Trey o' Hearts" series and booming it with accustomed thoroughness. Both the China Times and the Pekin and Tientsin Times carry the stories of the instalments and the former carries a full page advertisement. Moreover there is a sixteen page, wire stitched booklet giving the full story. And this is not a pamphlet imported from England with the film, but a home product from the Yung Hing Printing Company. Moreover there are nine dodgers for the two shops, the Arcade and Premiereland, which seems to be an airdome. They are running four reels at a time, with a couple of Keystones. For the matinees—which do not begin until half past five and end two hours later—they give a different program, with the first two instalments the matinee bill including Vitagraph's "A Regiment of Two" and our old friend, "One Round Obrien."

One of the advertisements reads oddly to we who are used to twelve and fourteen reels to a show. They offer 7,849 feet of film and ask: "Now what do you think of this monster program. EIGHT THOUSAND FEET of films right off the reel in one single show. Doesn't it take away one's breath." Even in China the film allowance seems to be going up.

It is no joke to make money in the Orient with a limited white population, but the Arcade early learned to hustle.

Going Down.

The Third Street theater, Easton, has reduced to four pages. We hope the cut down is only temporary, for the sheet has been one of the old reliables for a long time now. All foreign advertising has been thrown out.

Uses Two.

E. M. Simons, of the New Family, Adrian, Mich., uses two calendar programs, one for the home and one for the business office. The latter merely reads: "Hang this up for future reference." The other carries at the top the line:

> Hang me up in the kitchen where mother can see me and some day, when she cooks a particularly good meal, show your appreciation by taking her to the New Family theater and let her choose her own play.
>

The calendar, which is eleven by twelve inches, is made with two point rule and carries the title and star in the box with each date. Surrounding it are small cuts of Paramount players and corner cuts with legends. It makes a good monthly program, though the cuts might well have been left out to permit the use of larger boxes and consequently larger type.

Ware Cuts.

The Idlehour theater, West Chester, Pa., sends in a well laid out program, but the front page is spoiled by a cut of too fine a screen. Unless the cut will show up well, it is better to use type. The program proper runs inside and the two pages are connected by border into a complete frame. If you have a four-page program or a program on the center pages of an eight, make the printer enclose the entire program in one panel and you'll hold it together better. If he says that he cannot, it will be because he is too lazy to change his sticks, so make him. This program comes as a whole because the border work has been properly done. Three foreign advertisements are run, but the house gets the larger portion of the back page because it appreciates the value of its own advertising.

Little Things.

The Doan theater, Cleveland, managed by Walter L. Hill, sends in a four-page vest pocket that is very carefully gotten up. At the bottom of each day's program runs the times of showing. The front page carries the times of opening as well as the admission prices, but the information is repeated at the foot of each announcement partly for the benefit of the Saturday and Sunday matinees, but also because the program is carefully prepared. It would be better still to use a full face six-point line instead of the light Roman. Two programs are sent, one printed in brown on cream and the other done in blue on blue grey. In the latter the small lines sink in because there is hardly enough color contrast. As the stock is the better of the two it might be well to experiment with the brown ink on the grey stock unless a weekly change of color is contemplated.

Hurray!

The Circle theater, Easton, Pa., now prints the entire program on the front page, as we have been urging them to do. That is the place for the program.

Udells.

Dave Udell of Paxton, Ill., sends in another batch of advertisments. He repeats on the Theater for sale by offering Life Stock in the shape of laughs at Chaplin and then running a write-up about a new insurance company, with a reference to the ad. It is almost too soon to take an encore. It belongs in what one of the A 4 E league happily called "just once" advertising. Better is this:

IS SOUND SLEEP EVERY NIGHT WORTH 10c.
TO YOU?

People who attend our shows learn to sleep well. There is something in every picture that soothes the mind; makes it feel at ease.

The top lines should be in from 48 to 60 point with the lower bank in ten or twelve point.

An oddity is a good cut of Chaplin with a small "tonight" in a panel at the top and another panel below the caption, advertising Tillie's Punctured Romance. Mr. Udell overlooks a point when he fails to mention that Miss Marie Dressler also appeared in the picture. Her name is worth something even in the bushes. Another advertisement for the six-reeler runs:

Dan Patch —1:55

DePalma -Better than 3 Times

Resta Better Still

These three racers made good time. But "tick of the watch" and it was all over—there—here—gone. EXCITEMENT of course, but no comedy.

IT TAKES

Charles Chaplin

One and one half hours

FOR JUST ONE MILE

(BUT THINK OF THE FUN.)

Here the name of the subject might have been employed with advantage. It pays to keep the title, too, before the reader as well as the star.

Greet the Ballous.

Greet Helen and Harold Ballou as editors. The Olympian theater, Seattle, has again swung into the weekly program class. We are sorry that they do not take more of their space for house stuff, for the Ballous in their earlier advertising have shown themselves to be managers with a personality and they could make the Olympian News something that people would sit up for.

In the first issue we note a request that automobile patrons park their cars on the side street in response to the demand of the traffic police, and we also clip this:

> FREE TICKETS.
>
> The Olympian has never found it necessary to distribute free tickets of admission in order to obtain audiences.
>
> Earnest effort is made to present entertainment worth paying for.
>
> We will not admit that our performances are so lacking in merit as to be down to the free admission level and your loyal support indicates that you share our belief.
>
> Many free tickets distributed by another theater have been presented at the Olympian by mistake and instead of calling attention to the error they have been honored, and the practice will be continued simply as an act of courtesy.

This is unusual, but it is good business. It gets new people in, and when they discover the error they are apt to come back as a sort of conscience contribution. Presently they will have the habit.

Surcharged.

Recent programs for the Lehigh, South Bethlehem, Pa., have one announcement overprinted in red ink with the explanation that the film originally advertised will be delayed, as it has been held for full weeks elsewhere. This not only calls especial attention to an unusual program for that day, but it paves the way for the other story when it does come. It's good work; good enough to be used once, discreetly, for any program. Pick out something booked about four weeks ahead, then overprint with the actual bill. The Lehigh found this surcharge a necessity, but it can be used just as a novelty as well.

Already we have adopted V. P. as a brief for the vest pocket program and recently we had the pocket book V. P., but now comes James R. Somer, of the Orpheum, Gardner, Mass., with a Vanity Case and V. P. six-page folder that is only 1¾ by 3½ inches. It is about the smallest yet and we reproduce the three inner pages as a suggestion for the layout.

Mr. Somer wants some comment on his regular four-page program, but there seems to be nothing to offer other than the suggestion that some house stuff be used in addition to the film talk. The things about the house are just as interesting as the films if you write them up as interestingly.

Uses Cards.

J. H. Farrington, of the Colonial, Saranac Lake, N. Y., sends in proof of a display card and this letter:

> I am enclosing you a sample of our Programs. The large one is a reprint on paper; these we issue on cardboard, different color each week, and put them up in frames in every hotel, restaurant and barber shop in town. The small folders are mailed to every boarding house and a large number of individuals in and out of town. Would like to hear your opinion on these programs, as I am a reader of your valuable paper, and have been for the past six years, as I started in the show business six years ago last month, and can truly say that I could not run my business without The Moving Picture World. I started in a little hole in the ground, a basement seating 196, and stayed there two years, and then built the COLONIAL, seating 350 on the ground floor and 150 in the balcony. Our ceiling is 31 feet high, good comfortable seats, rubber matting on the aisles, making a perfectly ventilated, strictly sanitary place of amusement. Use a Power's 6A motor driven machine, which we think is the best made. Use a four piece orchestra—piano, violin, cello and drums and traps. We have one of the best men on effects that this state affords, never missing anything in a picture. I do not care particular for drums, but think that good effects just make the pictures. My orchestra takes lots of pains to select music that fits the picture, and if the music that they use at the matinee is not just suitable it is changed at night. We are buying new music every week and try to keep up on all good new music.
>
> I am a constant reader of all departments of your valuable paper and enjoy very much the discussion on programs, and so am very anxious to hear your comments on my program.
>
> Thanking you very kindly for any trouble I may have put you to in sending this letter, and trusting you will see fit to print your comments, I beg to remain.

In the matter of the card, Mr. Farrington has done better than his printer, except that he does not date his days. The program proper should be enclosed in border and run directly under the date, the matter now between the date and the program should go below and the underline below that still, being set in two columns instead of one. The printer has made up the copy the easiest way instead of the best, as country job printers will often do. It would be well if the copy were to be changed so that the title is used immediately below the date line, then a uniform type face, large enough to stand out should be used, even if the size of the other lines has to be reduced six points. As it stands, four of the titles are lost in the body of the matter on a card that must be read at a glance. We think these suggestions will makes a better balanced card. If Mr. Farrington will have these changes made, we will be glad to look over the bill again.

The smaller card is much better done. But we do not like the last line that reads: "These programs are ready every Saturday. Ask for one." Don't wait to be asked. Make them take them even if you have to go down to their house to do it."

Courtesy.

Here is a self explanatory letter from H. B. Gray, who manages the Royal, Carroll, Iowa:

> Enclosed find draft for $2.00 to cover cost of your new book, "Picture Theater Advertising." I read with much benefit your "Advertising for Exhibitors" and want to commend your article of Sept. 18 on "Houses." When we started here about two years ago, we made it a point to greet every patron with a 'good evening" and "thank you" for the ticket. As quickly as possible we learned many of the patrons by name and then used it in thanking them. For a time we followed this up by bidding them "good night" and a "come again"; in much the same manner that the enthusiastic revivalist greets the "sinner" who has moved up to the mourners bench. The effect was surprising and helped to popularize the place at once. A case of inexpensive business courtesy making money for the house.

Courtesy never hurts and sometimes helps tremendously. And sometimes a courteous greeting to a child counts for more than similar notice of the parent. Make people feel that you're glad they came and they'll be glad themselves that they came. It seldom fails.

A Condensed Program.

The Paramount exhibitors seem to be strong for the brief program. Scores have followed the Ralph Ruffner style and now comes an even more simple form for a single column calendar. It is sent in by the Olympian, Seattle, and gives this form:

For September

Mon., Tue., Sept. 6-7
When We Were Twenty-One
Star, William Elliott
Wed., Thurs., Sept. 8-9
Are You a Mason?
Star, John Barrymore
Mon., Tue., Sept. 13-14
Snobs
Star, Victor Moore

This can be set on the machine where the other required double measure and is also adapted for use in house programs.

Going Strong.

Ben Michaels is going strong with his North End News out in San Francisco. He is getting out a live wire that gets more aggressive each issue. He tells about his Verdi theater, but he gives more than plenty space to local issues and if he keeps it up he will have a first class locality paper—also a couple of libel suits—on his hands, but libel suits are a sign of enterprise and as the mouthpiece of the district the issue is doubly strong because it seems to be so little of a program. He has the right idea. We are still waiting for his Chinese supplement. He is sticking to his French, Italian and Spanish departments. Many other editors of house organs have the same chance, but few seem to possess the proper mixture of aggressiveness and journalistic sense.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

The Author's Status.

ONE of the foolish ones who dickered with a wildcat and got stung wants to know the legal status of an author. He wants to know if his claim for the manuscript does not constitute a lien upon that particular negative. He adds that local lawyers are unable to advise him.

We cannot quote a precedent, but in a general way, the status of an author seems to be that of any other creditor; particularly if he has signed a release slip. This slip makes over to the purchasing company all rights to the manuscript of a certain story. The legality of this assignment might be attacked—possibly could be, on the grounds that the assignment acknowledges receipt of payment where the accompanying letter distinctly states that a check will be forthcoming when the receipt is returned. This is so nice a point that a case would probably be appealed repeatedly for the sake of a decision to serve as a precedent. Granting that the release is legal, the script becomes the property of the company and ceases to be the property of the author. He has no further interest in that particular script but only an interest in a claim against the company for a cerain sum of money. He can, if the company has not gone into bankruptcy, attach the assets of the company as a whole, but he has no lien upon that particular script in any form. He is in the position of a man given a bad check. He has an interest in the check, but no claim for the goods or service for which the check was given, and cannot recover. If the company is bankrupt, he can only wait with the other creditors. If it is not in the courts, he can take the ordinary action but at a prohibitive cost.

Starting Right.

Roll your plot around in your head until it is just right and demands that it be written. Do not start with some factors that should make a good play and wrestle with them as you write the scenes or even the working scenario (using that word in its proper sense). Know what you want to do and how you are going to do it and it will be better for you than to waste half a box of paper and three days in time trying to get it to set right.

A Thinking Machine.

From Boston comes the report of a "thinking machine" for plots. Having been a "Sunday faker" in our own earlier days, we think that the story was written to sell rather than to instruct, but there is an idea back of the yarn. The essential part of the article, as printed in the Boston Post, runs:

> The device is a pasteboard box, three by six inches and two inches deep, containing six printed paper rolls, each wound on a pair of spindles. The ends of the spindles extend through the sides of the box and are turned by hand. In the upper side of the box, above each paper roll, is a slot, in which appears one word after another as the roll is turned.
>
> On the six rolls are printed respectively six groups of classified words and the rolls arranged in such a manner that, as they are turned, a story is unfolded and recorded on the face of the box. There are about 1,200 different words used, which, considering the surprising number of synonyms in our language, appear to be sufficient to describe any action between two individuals.
>
> Trying the device out on a few friends resulted in some curious effects. A confirmed bachelor seemed to have his mind still on the ladies, as he evolved the following two: Eccentric - Spinster - Adopts - Burglar - Excitement - Marriage," and "Wily-Spinster-Accuses-Churchwarden—Scene-Retraction."
>
> A lawyer who has protested that his talents did not run to fiction evolved a wild story: "Aged-Aviator-Discovers-Cannibal-Collusion-Feast." What grim humor in the "aged aviator," and also the suggestion that instead of being food for one cannibal, the aviator succeeded in entering into collusion with him and the two immediately proceeded to eat up the tribe. A man whose profession keeps him out of doors and close to nature the most of the time invented this royal thriller: "Passionate - Empress-Embraces-Diplomatist-Discovery-Double-Murder."

This sounds foolish, perhaps, but it is through just such a combination of words that a plot may be evolved. It is hardly likely that such a machine will be placed on the market, but a little experimenting might be done with a lesser number of cards. The late Paul Dresser used to compose his songs on the organ, holding down one note and trying up and down the scale for the note to follow. The thinking game could be played in some such fashion, taking a card arbitrarily and then running over the pack for the next card and so until the plot was ready for thanslation into a real synopsis. Frequently the accidental combination will yield an idea better than usual.

Plots Again.

Complains a correspondent "I cannot think the different things. The other day a tiger got loose here and the best I could get from the suggestion was a mouse scaring an assemblage of women."

Much can be gained from a tiger loose in a community. Some years ago a lion escaped in an amusement park and there was a wild tumult. Men braver than the rest followed the trainer with torches and the crowd followed them timorously, but persistently. Then, from the dark of a clump of trees came an irritable exclamation: "Go away, you're frightening the lion." We got two stories out of it and could get more. Suppose that the tiger was lonesome and merely wanted company. A story of its search for companionship would make a capital comedy ending with the weeping tiger creeping back into its cage, sure, at least of seeing its trainer.

But a tiger does not have to remain a tiger, nor yet a lion. Suppose it is a man known as "The Tiger," because of his ferocity, who escapes from prison and visits a town. The men and women take to the tall timber but a youngster, not knowing the reputation of the man, comes upon him asleep, binds him in play with his toy lariat and the men charge in and complete the arrest. Turning back to comedy, it might be a dog dressed up in a skin rug. It might be an alarm raised by the report of a tiger escaped from a circus plus a small boy making a lion roar out of a tin can and a rosined string out in the barn. The populace assemble with guns and pitchforks and open fire on the barn, scaring the small boy as badly as he has scared them.

There are plenty of stories to be suggested by a tiger either in a cage or loose, but imagination must be employed and if you have no imagination, the case is hopeless.

"Same As."

Here's one that an old timer propounds. He asks: If you are writing of a kitchen, first used as scene 10, you refer to scene 13 as "kitchen as in No. 10." But suppose that in scene twenty-three there is a terrific fight and that subsequent scenes still show the damage done during the fight. Are these latter scenes "as in No. 10" or "as in No. 23?"

This raises a nice point and one that may be settled either way according to the director. The idea of referring to a previous scene number is to indicate that this is the same and not another kitchen, and to ensure all of the scenes in that set being made before the scene is struck. The double reference would perhaps be confusing. Our own preference would be to adhere to the first number, writing:

63—Kitchen as in No. 10—but still wrecked.—Jane leads the constable in—he looks about—acts as he thinks Sherlock Holmes would—exits—Jane follows.

That will keep the reference to ten but still explain that the scene is upset as at the end of the fight. As a general thing the director will get the idea of the precise condition of the stage from the written scene and will not need the additional reminder, but it is better and more workmanlike to put it in. Just as a matter of fact, if you tell your story clearly it does not matter precisely how you get it down so long as you get it down. It does not matter, but it does pay to be precise if you can and if this precision is not gained at the expense of your freedom of thought.

Swindles.

"This is no worse than some of the Wallingford stories," defended a writer who was told that the censors would probably refuse to pass a story of a swindling scheme. He was correct in that it was by no means so daring a swindle as those George Randolph Chester loves to write of, but will you please turn your attention to the other side of the hall and look at the Wallingford series now running. Notice, please, that the schemes of Wallingford are not mere exhibitions of adept gold brick selling. Now Wallingford seeks to prey upon those who have preyed upon others. He is engaged in a sort of holy war against a certain clique. Even the great Wallingford has had to come under the rules and regulations. Take comfort in that, but take a lesson, as well, and do not write of swindles in such a way as to glorify the swindler.

Better Not.

The locally produced picture is becoming a popular scheme. Some man with a camera drifts into town and arranges to make a film for some local charity or theater or newspaper. Then the local writers are urged to prepare a script. Be one of the ones to stay out. Mostly the scheme blows up before the film is made and if you get into the row you have to stick. There is little glory and no fun in the local event. Keep off.

Concentration.

Evidently one author is less of an author than he thinks, for he complains that he cannot keep his interest in a story. He gets the plot down and then he loses interest. After that he wants to go out and catch another plot instead of working out what he has.

Lots of would-be writers find the same trouble, just as lots of would-be gardeners plant seeds and carefully watch them germinate, but lose interest when the plants show and neglect the weeding and irrigation that bring crops. They lack concentration. They cannot hold interest past the point of novelty.

As a rule it is impossible for a writer of this type ever to make much headway, but now and then it is possible for a plot writer to become a real author through practice. To do this it is necessary for a time to make it a rule not to take up a second plot until the first has been developed and revised. The plotter must resist all temptations to write plots and concentrate upon a single plot. If there is hope for a worker of this type, the enforced application will presently become a pleasure and what was once forbidding labor becomes a recreation. The man who simply presses the button and lets a professional photographer do the rest is not getting all the fun out of his camera, nor does the tank developer bring much more enjoyment. The real fun of camera work lies in seeing the white plate flash into a negative. That is where both the fun and the instruction come, for it is not easy to tell faults from the developed negative. You must learn from dark room work when you have under or overexposed.

It is the same way with writing photoplays. If you merely work out plots, you may be able to sell from synopsis, but you will never be a real author, nor will you be able to tell why this plot or that was taken, because you do not know enough about development to be able to see faults and benefits.

The only way to learn to concentrate is to practice concentration. And the only way to do that is to master your laziness.

Again.

Once again let it be said that polite comedy is not too polite. It is not slapstick, but that does not mean that it is the exact opposite. It merely means that the idea should not be grotesque and meaningless, but should tell a real story in lively action. Too many writers seem to think that to get away from slapstick they must go to the other extreme. This is not so. All comedy must show lively action but on one hand you supplement the action with falls and water-throwing and on the other you add plot to movement.

Sensations.

Almost any person can think of having an automobile fall over a cliff or can invent a falling airship, but the trick is to think of some new reason why an auto should do ground and lofty tumbling. The studios are full of men who can think of things to do, but one reason why so many of the mechanical sensations fail is that there is no real plot to back up the thrill. If you can get something better than an auto dive, then you are still more likely to be welcome in the studio, but the main point is to be able to give interest to the mechanical thrill.

As the Author Sees It.

It is our happy memory that once we saw a play of ours done by the Vitagraph without addition or subtraction. It was a novel and very delightful experience. The producer took the script and made it. It was a pretty fairly good play at that. Recently Clarence J. Harris wrote that it was bad enough to see his stuff butchered without being present at the vivisection. Most authors have had some such feelings when they saw their first plays screened and will enjoy this criticism from the Chicago Evening Post. It was written by Miss Penelope Knapp in reference to the visualization of her own play:

> A certain producer, not many moons ago, announced to the world, through the medium of the press, that he had unearthed a treasure; said treasure being "The Victory of Virtue" now running at a local theater.
>
> Said this producer: "I have read hundreds of plays and I consider 'The Victory of Virtue,' the very best it has ever been my pleasure or good fortune to read. If the play is not a success, the fault lies alone with yours truly, the producer."
>
> When the author of "The Victory of Virtue" saw the play upon the screen for the first time, it had been so padded, distorted and changed that she scarcely recognized her own idea, to say nothing of the beauties of the story, which were so hidden behind a mass of incongruities as to almost entirely obliterate them. All this was done without her knowledge or approval; done by one who, she is informed, was permitted to have free hand with her script.
>
> The original scenario was made in three reels only, and was pronounced finished by both author and producer. Three reels told the story, and told it well, making it intelligible even to a child, but with the enlargement and extra footage the trouble began.
>
> The author understands that the critics one and all ask, "Why the triangle?" "Why the cross?" "Why the so-called 'Seven Cardinal Sins?'" and that they one and all have pronounced them "old stuff." Old stuff or new stuff, not one of the above mentioned were included in the original scenario or story.
>
> The minister who forms the left-handed prong in the love triangle does not belong to the story, because there never was a triangle. He is the product of a brain as antique and worn-out as are the wings which he sports when transformed into the guardian angel. This does not reflect discredit upon the man who played the part as a man; it is wholly impersonal. The "Seven Cardinal Sins," so called, are indeed "old stuff," revamps from scripts and brains long since moldering in dust and ashes. Instead of the hideous creatures along the pathway leading from heaven to earth (as represented in the play), the author placed Cupids shooting darts at the unsophisticated young maiden as she picked her way along; also lovers and alluring beauties beckoned her to come to Daphne's Garden and become Queen of Love. Why should she be subjected to such indignities before she had even sipped the froth from the wine of pleasure? What connection have these beings to the theme of the play? What purpose do they serve? If anyone knows, I wish they would inform the author of "The Victory of Virtue," for she craves enlightenment upon the subject.
>
> The cross was never included in the original script and it was not the intention of the author to event hint at Catholicism; had she wished to do so, she would have written a Catholic play and labeled it as such. However, since the cross was introduced, it seems a pity that a 17-year-old girl should be so lacking in affection for the memory of her dead mother as to deliberately cast it from her when stealing away to meet her lover. Upon the very face of it it would appear that she was anticipating her own downfall. Even criminals regard tenderly the keepsakes of their mothers.
>
> The incident of the material body leaving the astral body and passing through a door without the door opening, and going galavanting through space, is an insult to an enlightened public. Such a thing was never heard of, so far as the author has been able to learn, until introduced into "The Victory of Virtue," but, then, this play has been such a revelation in so many ways that we must not be surprised at anything it portrays. However, in the original script the astral body left the material body and when its vacation was finished returned to it. If the author has made a mistake in this respect, she stands corrected.
>
> Dr. Dorsey, a critic and gentleman, suggested that we cut the film, and before it was shown a second time on the screen more than one thousand feet had been eliminated. However, that was not sufficient; it could easily stand cutting another thousand feet and be made better thereby. But why write more? There is but one way to restore the play to its original conception and that is to make an entirely new production, and no company would risk another $32,500 to do so.

Trying Again.

Many directors have a bad habit of using the back of a script for a memorandum pad and lately a correspondent got a story back with the memo that the story had some novelty but would require entire reconstruction into two reels. The recipient did not know whether the suggestion was intended for himself or not, but he took a chance, worked it into two reels and sent it back. He wants to know what we think.

As a general proposition we should say that the correspondent got only half the message. He should not only have expanded the story, but he should have looked carefully into the script to see what there was that needed reconstruction. It very probably was not merely that the story was too short. It is more likely that there were certain features of the story that needed to be completely changed to get over. Many stories offer novel themes but are so hopelessly untrue to probability that the work of making the story over and lining it with accepted facts would be greater than the return in novelty would bring.

A story may be novel and yet so filled with inconsistencies that it is almost hopeless. And in attempting to bring the plot into harmony with accepted facts, it may be found that the value of the story is gone. In such a case the reconstructive work will not pay, and it is probable that this script was returned because experiment showed that it would not pay to work it over—and if a trained writer gives it up, there is small likelihood that the author will see and correct the faults without elaborate explanation.

Beating You to It.

To forestall comment from those who purchase Mrs. Parsons new book, it is explained that the sample script of ours that she uses is a studio script written for the Lubin company in Jacksonville. Therefore scene 15 is described as "Street by Standard Oil," because the dock of that company is just a few doors from the studio and is the nearest gas station to the place where the rest of the picture was made. Such a location in a general script would never do, but being written for a specified location, that location was mentioned.

Going Down.

Money must be getting scarce in certain quarters. The Story Revision Company, of Smethport, Pa., now has a form letter that tells a dead prospect that they regret that he did not stick with the big show. To prove their interest they offer to waive their entrance fee and to "sacrifice" their revision and typewriting fees "in order to get the large commission" from selling, but you must send them seventy-two cents for postage, "to and from nine editors." This sounds logical and attractive, but seventy-two cents is within three cents of being six bits.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed, or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 112.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the "beater type" of intermittent? What are the points for and against it? Why was its use abandoned? What is the "Gripper type" of intermittent? Why is a large, heavy star, which would have ample wearing surface, not used instead of the smaller one?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 106.

The Roll of Honor on Question 106 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York, and M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida.

Incidentally, it is plain to be seen that these optical questions are too much for many of you. Well, that is not surprising. Frankly, I am free to confess that some of the optical end of it keeps me jumping sideways too, but we are forging ahead, and I hope within a comparatively short time the average operator will be able to answer questions of this kind at least with a reasonable degree of intelligence and accuracy. Heretofore there has been practically no procurable data on projection optics. It has all been very largely guess work.

Brother Solar has, I think, come as close to being correct as any of those answering question 106. In fact, I believe that is hardly a fair statement. I think I should say that Solar's answer is correct, and that is more than I could say of any of the others, though those named in the Roll of Honor have made a very close approximation to correct answers.

Reply to Question No. 106.

By John Solar, Watertown, N. Y.

The Question:

What is the effect of the following: (a) Condensing lenses not square with each other? (b) One set higher than the other? (c) Whole lens out of square with objective? (d) Whole lens higher or lower or out of line sidewise with objective?

The Answer:

In order to get the best result at the screen, the principal axis of the condensers and the projection lens must be in line. This in order to get equal illumination at the back of the projection lens, on all sides of the axis, and, most important, at such angles as will match the angles of the back focus of the lens. Under conditions a, b, c and d, with any condenser mount, the displacement would be small. The result under any of the conditions would be to give unequal angles at opposite sides of the axis at the back of the lens, consequently a loss of illumination at the screen, though the loss would be small. In some cases conditions may be such as to allow displacement, out of line, or out of square, sufficient to cause great loss of light at the screen, but in such cases the displacement would be great enough to be easily observed by inspection.

New Home Projector.

The Motion Picture-Scope Company is marketing a new projector styled the "Portoscope," designed for use in the home, in schools, lecture halls and by traveling salesmen. The mechanism of this machine is of the regular cam and star type; it has an upper, lower and intermittent sprocket, with the usual idlers and driving mechanism, and two aluminum magazines, each 11 inches in diameter. The whole mechanism is enclosed in a substantial asbestos lined fibre-board case 29 inches high, when in operating position, 10 inches wide and 7½ inches deep, or "thick." The weight is 35 pounds, including the lamp, which is attached to the outside of the case when the machine is ready for use.

Either incandescent or carbon arc illumination is provided. A 500-watt incandescent lamp, claimed to develop nearly 1,000-candle power, is regularly furnished with the equipment, which will project very satisfactory pictures over distances up to 40 feet. A 5 and 10 ampere pencil carbon light, having rheostat built into body of lamp house may be used with the projector, and will give very satisfactory results up to 60 feet. A still larger lamp, using standard sized carbons, in connection with any standard rheostat of 25 or more amperes capacity, may be attached to the portoscope, and the manufacturer claims very satisfactory pictures over a distance of 110 feet. All these lamps are interchangeable, being attached to machine case by a standardized bracket and hanger.

The claim of distance I do not agree with. Such claims should always be based on area of picture, if the machine will project a good 6 foot picture at 40 feet there is no earthly reason why, with proper lines properly adjusted it will not project the same size picture 100 feet. The lamphouse is, by means of two thumb screws, attached or detached from the outside of the case. The operating side of the machine consists of a door the full size of the case, in which is another door 4½ inches square, immediately opposite the mechanism. By opening this small door the operator can watch the film as it passes through.

By a very clever arrangement both the framing and focusing is done from the outside, the knobs used for this purpose being on the top—as the machine sets ready for work. Let it be understood that the case, which is the shape and size of a large suit case, and has a serviceable handle on one side, sets on end while the machine is ready for work, and in what would then be the front end, but when packed for traveling is the bottom of the case, is a door which drops down out of the way, disclosing the lens. The distance of the lamp from the condenser may instantly be altered at the will of the operator, thus controlling the size of the spot and the concentration of the light.

The whole thing is not only thoroughly practical, but is substantial and very well made. The corners of the case are metal bound, and there is no reason why the machine should not last, if given reasonable care and attention, as long as any standard projector. The driving crank s attached to a suitable knob on the outside of the case, and when the door is closed connection is automatically made with the crank shaft of the mechanism. For rewinding, the crank is removed from the driving knob and placed on the end of the upper magazine spindle on the opposite side of the case, the lens is lifted out of the way, and by releasing the film from the mechanism rewinding is accomplished without even so much as opening the door of the magazines—that is to say unless the film has been run clear through and the end carried down into the lower magazine, in which case it would have to be attached to the upper reel again.

There is a water cell which can be instantly shoved into place, and when this is done the film may be stopped and held in front of the lens for any desired length of time. A very convenient arrangement for a lecturer.

The machine is not designed to project a picture exceeding 6 feet in width, but up to that size the illumination is very good.

To put the whole matter in a nutshell I would say that the projector is perfectly safe so far as the fire risk be concerned; very practical, and will, I think, be found to be acceptable for use by traveling salesmen, and the other purposes named in the beginning. It can be set up and made ready for use in less than three or four minutes. It uses standard film and standard stereopticon slides, standard upper and intermittent sprockets and idlers. I can recommend the Portoscope to the favorable consideration of those seeking a practical home projector, and traveling salesmen demonstration outfits.

He Commits Matrimony.

Milton M. Moon, Gainesville, Texas, encloses a check for subscription and says:

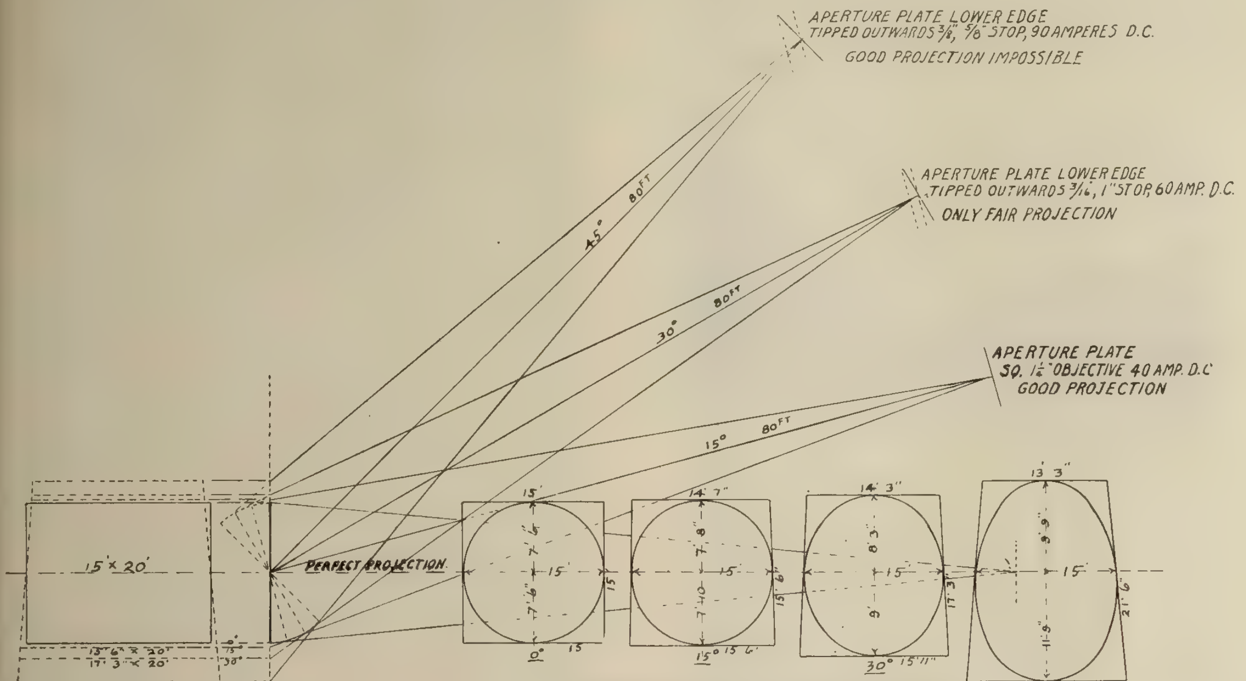
> I have a lot of trouble getting the World through the news agency here, so here is the money for subscription. The Honorable Joseph H. M. Smith, of Fort Worth, Texas, assisted me in committing matrimony two weeks ago. Went over to Fort Worth to get the license, and he was my witness. Well, he is a good fellow, and if I can ever do as much for him he has but to let it be known.

There you are, Smith! If you have not already done it, grab the girl and the Moon will do the rest. As to your remarks concerning the Vitagraph I have called the attention of that company to the same, asking them to see what is wrong.

Another Angle to the Lens Proposition.

H. W. Griggs, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, sends in an excellent drawing and says:

> After all is said and done with regard to the necessity for the best obtainable objective lens, it falls short of accomplishment if the angle of projection be not square with the screen, or at least not more than fifteen degrees away from square, especially from above. Slanting the screen to meet the oblique rays helps matters but little, and anything else than a vertical screen is a makeshift. Bringing the top forward to square with the lower angles convexes the screen the wrong way, and a concave screen badly distorts at the edge nearest the spectators in the side seats. A fifteen degree angle makes a 15 foot square picture 15 feet 6 inches high; a thirty degree angle makes it 17 feet 3 inches, and a forty-five degree angle makes it 21 feet 6 inches high.
>
> And all of this also gives us the inverted keystone effect. I enclose herewith a drawing showing that oblique projection should not exceed 15 degrees at the most. One vaudeville house on Grand avenue, this city, showing one reel of film has an oblique slant of apparently 30 to 40 degrees, making it necessary to focus separately on the three verses of a hymn as reached. Of course you know all this already, but it occurred to me as a good diagram would show it up better.



WHAT A 15FT. CIRCLE OR SQUARE BECOMES.
80FT. THROW.

H W Griggs
Milwaukee
Wis 9.16.15

What you say, Brother Griggs, is perfectly correct, as an abstract proposition, but I can show you right here in New York City a projection which has a slant of about 40 feet in 80 with a picture quite sharp all over the screen. How is that done? Well, frankly, I don't know. It has been accomplished by Mr. C. W. Johnson, who has charge of the projection in all the New York Fox theaters. I have not examined these machines closely, though I presume I should have, but I take it that Friend Johnson accomplishes the effect by a manipulation of the aperture plate of the machine. So much for the out-of-focus effect. The distortion of the picture cannot, of course, possibly be avoided, but one does not seem to notice the distortion so much after one becomes accustomed to it. When the picture is first thrown on, under these conditions, I notice it quite considerably, owing to the odd shape of the picture on the screen, but after a few moments the thing seemed to look perfectly natural, although, as a matter of fact, the distortion was rather terrific. The aperture plates of the machine had been filled in to compensate for the keystone effect, so that the sides of the picture were perpendicular.

Of course, I do not wish to be understood as saying that this sort of thing is at all desirable. It is not. It is far from being ideal, but the fact remains that you can, by the manipulation of the aperture plate of the machine and the gate, sharpen the focus pretty completely, even under very abnormal conditions, and the high grade lens will, it seems to me, operate comparatively as well under abnormal as normal conditions, that is to say the gain as against the low grade lens will be equally great under either condition. The diagram is excellent, and in the name of the fraternity I thank you for it. Of course what Friend Griggs says about the projection of a map or other diagram is quite right. A map or diagram projected from the machine having a steep angle of projection would be so badly distorted as to be entirely misleading. You would notice it in that sort of thing very quickly. I am not making the above statements dogmatically, but simply giving you my own impressions in the matter. I have not personally had much experience with correcting steep angles. Would be very glad to hear from operators on this very interesting and highly important subject.

The New Book.

L. T. Jones, St. Louis, Missouri, writes:

> I have used the old Handbook until it is nearly worn out. Can't you give us the dope on the new one? Wherein will it differ from the second edition?

Sure I can, and the difference is, as our friend the little girl would say, lots, and lots, and lots. Those of you who remember the little 175-page first edition can get a pretty good idea when I tell you that the first edition compares with the second edition just about as the second will compare with the third. The third edition is not a revised work, but completely new and up-to-date, and a work which I think will please you all. If the second edition was worth $2.50, then in my judgment the third is worth three times that sum, though you need not get the idea that we are going to charge you that. We cannot tell yet what the price will be, but it will be kept just as low as possible. We want to keep it at $3, and may be able to, though that is by no means certain in these days of high cost of paper and about everything else that goes to make up a book; it may be $3.50.

Those of you who have the old book will find the third edition to be even of greater value to you than was the second. The light ray experiments, carefully checked up and corrected, are incorporated, together with the entire series of illustrations that accompanied them in the department, as well as the tables.

Reason for Blue Ghost.

A. J. Mason, St. John, N. B., Canada, says:

> I have sometimes experienced trouble with blue ghost in picture. When this occurred the arc would burn very badly, and I finally discovered that the positive carbon (using 60 amperes, ¾ cored carbons) had a bad core. It looked as though the core was entirely gone, leaving a hole in the center of the crater, and until it burned down the blue ghost would be in evidence. Don't remember having seen this set forth in the department, therefore I send it in.

No, I have never seen ghost attributed to faulty carbon core, yet when you come to think of it, I guess that is about what would happen, since it would ruin the illumination of the center of the crater, and that could not well be done without showing its effect on the center of the screen. Anyhow a defective core in a carbon is a mighty bad thing, and brands of carbons which contain many defective cores are pretty good brands to let alone.

Criticism.

L. W. Carroll, Lancaster, New Hampshire, who recently paid a visit to Burlington, Vt., writes:

> After viewing the projection at Burlington I would like to offer a little friendly criticism. October 1 I went into the "Majestic," a beautifully equipped theater seating 800. They were running "Sold," a Paramount feature. Two machines were used, one of which produced very noticeable flicker, while the picture projected by the other was out of focus and did not register the same as the other on the screen. The light, however, was good. I also was in this house again on October 2, and found the same conditions, plus poor light, and once the show stopped, due to trouble in the operating room. I also visited "The World in Motion," October 2, where they had a rainy, nine-months-old General program. Projection was fast, and the pictures jumpy, with one reel out of frame about three inches, from middle clear to its finish, also the light from the lobby reflected on a space about 2 feet wide down the screen. The illumination was fair. From reliable sources I learned that these operators were pulling down $18 a week, and this in a city of 25,000. As to my own work here in Lancaster, while I am well aware there are many faults, I certainly try to give the best results possible.

Well, Burlington, what have you got to say to this? What excuse can there possibly be for a picture out of frame half way through the reel? Can't blame the manager for that, can you? If one machine was giving a flicker more noticeable than that of the other machine, it simply shows that the operator either does not understand how to adjust his revolving shutter to local conditions, or else has not done it.

I don't like to publish these criticisms, except where I am able to positively verify their correctness, which I am not in this case. But the letter is very mild in tone, and I believe is absolutely correct, therefore I am giving it space. If it displeases Burlington, why let the operators and managers of the theaters in question mend their ways.

I Apologize.

L. F. Guimond, Monticello, New York, says:

> It is some time since my last effusion, so I will write just to prove my continued existence, but I want to know what you mean by being in Liberty, only twelve short miles of state road away, and not shooting over to Monticello? I have read with a great deal of interest the article by Mr. Bennett on lenses. Well, if we gotta have anastigmats to get better projection, why then we gotta have them, but my acquaintance with the animal is so very slight that I don't know whether it is male or female. I have on hand three Bausch & Lomb, and one perfectly new Gundlach-Manhattan, making a total of four, with a combined value of some fifty-odd dollars. Query: What will I have to do with these if we get the twenty-five-dollar article? (I didn't say twenty-five positively. They go as high as eighty, Old Top.—Ed.) We have heeded the ring of the tocsin to the extent of reducing the picture from eighteen to sixteen feet, and this, too, with a rather wide house. We use the M-bi-C condenser combination; Brushelectricize our own direct current; watch the arc and the pictures; don't read newspapers during working hours and stay sober on week days. As we don't show on Sundays, have nothing to say about the seventh day. If we must excavate twenty-five perfectly good iron men for a new lens we will do it, but must we scrape our other perfectly good, but inefficient present lenses? In addition to all my other troubles, I ran pictures at a nearby summer resort for four weeks this summer. Huh! You had better not ask me to my face. Next summer I am going to open a peanut stand, and let the other fellow get all the summer resort trade. That's all!
>
> During the hot spell my operator hooked up a hickey which may be as old as the hills, but it worked, was harmless, and made life much more endurable in the operating room. He took the top of a tin film container, cut it with a cold chisel and bent out about twelve blades, fan-shape, and then hooked them on the main drive wheel; net results: as fine an electric fan as one would wish for, shooting ozone right at his head as he watched his picture. (Which drive wheel do you mean? The balance wheel of the projector or—what?—Ed.) This is good by itself or as an auxiliary to any other fan equipment the operating room may contain. Give it for what it is worth. It may have been done for years.
>
> What can you tell me of the Lubin projection machine? Are they still on the market? Do mirroroid screens deteriorate if properly cared for? It may be the latter question cannot be answered by you with due regard for ethics. If so, forget it. Please take my order for the new Handbook as soon as issued. Sold!—No I don't mean I am sold, but the book is. Am glad the condenser argument is being put into tangible shape, because I am free to admit that with my poor non-technical brain this Arkin-Griffiths-Wall-Richardson argument has left me hanging to a lamp post, murmuring brokenly: "Gee whish! zhe earth haz drifted out to shee." Seriously wish you could get up here some time, old man. We have oceans of room to put you up; credit is still good with the grocer and butcher. Yaas, and at Mike's place on the corner, too, if you wanta know. We will be more than glad to have you and the go-devil up here before we get snowed up, after which time no go-devil in the world can break through.

Huh! Huh! Huh! I suppose I am due to get my block knocked off, but I actually was not only in Liberty, but went through Monticello twice. However, I went through so darned fast, both coming and going, that I was not much of anything but a grey streak. The speed going was because it was nearly dark and I had just negotiated one of the worst mountain detours I had ever saw, and the speed coming was due to the fact that I was going to make another detour to Port Jervis, with miles of ? ? ? road in front of me. However, I will be up there again soon, always providing the weather holds good.

As to the lens matter, why I really don't know what to say. It surely does seem tough to throw away fifty dollars worth of lenses. Yet, possibly it may pay to do it after all. However, I do not think you can get a high grade lens until the war is over, so it is not time to worry yet. Evidently you did not accumulate wealth on the summer resort stunt. As to the fan, I don't quite understand what you mean by the "main drive wheel." Come across with a little further information please. Certainly the mirroroid screen surface will deteriorate. I don't know of anything in this broad, wide world that won't, but it is fully guaranteed for five years and—there you are. I have seen mirroroid screens that have been in use for as much as three years which appear to be still in good condition. However, I very much doubt if it pays to use a screen that long. Certainly any screen surface, with the single exception of glass, is bound to lose some of its luster with the passing of years. Your order for the Handbook will be taken care of. As to the Lubin machine, as far as I know they are no longer made. The last new one I saw was four or five years ago.

Live Ones.

R. E. King, proprietor Aster theater, Toronto, Canada, says:

> Just a few lines to the old reliable to let you know that we still have a few live ones left over here in Canada. Am enclosing photograph of the operating room of our theater, which I claim to be one of the finest in Ontario. It is 15 feet deep by 12 feet wide with a 9-foot ceiling. Has two 14-inch vents, one over each machine, direct to the open air, each flue being equipped with a damper. There are two Simplex machines and a Union electric reverse compound 35 ampere, 75 volt motor generator set, located in operating room in full sight of the operator at all times. The room also has two large windows opening to the street, and large port holes which give the operator a good, clear view of the picture.
>
> When building this theater I engaged one of the best operators I could get and left the designing of the operating room and the installation of the machines and equipment entirely to him, and I may say that I have never regretted the move.
>
> The picture is 16 feet wide, with a 98-foot throw, the screen being surrounded by a shadow box with a 3-foot black frame on a white plaster wall. We have been open for more than two years and have never found it necessary to shut down our show in all that time, and the machines are practically as good as the day they were installed. The projection room is in charge of Mr. D. L. Odette, the big fellow in the photograph, who has been with me since the house opened. He is ably assisted by Mr. Earnest Smithers, and I may say that our projection is as nearly perfect as human ingenuity can make it, being rock steady and flickerless. Delays are a thing unknown. The house seats 500, and is located in one of the best residential districts in the west end of the city. We are doing capacity business, using Universal program with Broadway Features once a week.

It is indeed gratifying to receive a letter from a manager who has advanced to the point of understanding and considering the importance of the work of the operator, and who is willing to encourage good work by giving the man due credit. Mr. King has, it seems to me, taken precisely the right course all the way through. First, he got the best operator obtainable, and then left the designing of the operating room to him, depending upon his superior knowledge of operating room requirements, and his ability in applying that knowledge. My own plan has always been: get a competent operator, and turn the operating room over to him with the single instruction: "It is results I want, not excuses. Produce the goods or get out."

It is astonishing how many managers who, even when they get a good operator, proceed to make it utterly impossible for him to deliver good results by scrimping on current and operating room supplies. Friend King is a live wire, and a manager with the right kind of ideas.

Trouble With the Camera.

A western cameraman, who wishes to remain anonymous, has sent in a list of his troubles all of which are so liable to happen to any camera operator that the questions and answers are appended below. They are:

> 1. Our machine, a Model No. 5 Prestwich, is equipped with 330-ft. magazines. At no time have we been able to load with even a 300-ft. roll, since the film always binds after running from ten to twenty-five feet, and this obtains without the core or bobbin on the spindle. The same condition exists with 200-ft. rolls. In fact, we cannot run with the spools on the spindle. Furthermore, the machine runs very hard, as compared with other models or makes which we have used; we can find no way to adjust or reduce the tension, without spreading spiral spring belts.
>
> 2. Static and plenty of it. We recently applied a remedy used to prevent static in electric mimeograph machines, viz: That of placing Xmas tinsel in the magazines above the outlet, and near the sprockets and film gate; this seemed to reduce the amount of static, but it still appears, particularly when we use film which has been unpacked, perforated and repacked. We noted recently, that a correspondent to your department, advocated the use of "brass or metal handle." It is assumed that he replaced the leather carrying handle on his Pathe with a brass handle. As you are aware, the Prestwich is equipped with a brass tripod plate both top and bottom, which in our opinion, would surely take as much static movement as a brass handle on a machine built like the Pathe.
>
> 3. What is the exact distance for placing the Pathe finder? That is, how far from the front of the lens, considering the peculiar design of the Prestwich, and the fact that a 3-inch lens may be used? What should be the size opening on the ground glass of the finder, for the Zeiss 2-inch and Goerz 3-inch? We find that the negative size does not show the exact field of the 2-inch lens.
>
> 4. The Prestwich brings the line opposite the perforation. Can any adjustment be made which will bring the line between the perforations?
>
> 5. Would you advise removal of cotton velvet from film gate? We note that some claim the plain brass gate gives best results.
>
> 6. Would you consider it possible to equip the Model 5 Prestwich with the Goerz double exposure box? We have ordered the Goerz dissolving device.
>
> 7. Do you consider silver aperture plates as good as brass? One dealer, handling supplies for our make machine, quoted a price of $2.50 net for plates (brass) while a local firm quoted 85c. each for plates of silver. In replacing the lower film race gate, that which guides the spring fingers, and through which the film punch works, would it be advisable to have it made of silver?

Your first question is very hard to answer without seeing the camera. Look for trouble as follows:

Are retort outlets free?

Are retorts held firmly in alignment?

Are retort spindles free from play and perpendicular with bottom of retort? Does cover of retort permit film and spool to revolve freely when tightly closed?

Are retorts, sprockets and gate in perfect alignment?

Do you allow sufficient loop between sprockets and gate?

Are the movement fingers directly across from one another so that they engage equally in the perforations?

Does the film crawl and lose the loop?

Does the film ever ride the sprockets instead of the perforations engaging?

Does the film run freely through the gate?

Is the take-up belt too tight? It should not be tighter than is necessary to take the film up tightly.

Are all bearings oiled and free running but without play?

Do you remove the plate where the claws engage and clean the rack frequently?

Do the retort spools fit the spindles without play?

Is take-up pulley worn smooth so that the spring belt does not grip or bite properly? Or, is pulley groove so sharp a V that it binds the take-up belt?

Are you sure that closing the door does not bind the film in some way?

Are you sure that film punch does not stick in film or make a burred perforation which catches in the retort traps?

Are your sprocket rollers free running and adjusted so that they just clear the sprockets without touching?

Do all rollers over which the film passes revolve freely without binding?

If camera is fitted with automatic reverse take-up is the film in the feed retort rewound so as to feed with and not against the clutch rachets?

2. In the altitude in which you live you should use X back or so-called non-static stock all the year around. You must have read very carelessly not to have understood that the handle of the turning crank was what was meant and not the carrying handle. The idea was to give a continuous metal contact from the operator's bare hand and that the operator's body would carry the static discharge to the ground.

In your high and dry climate extreme care should be exercised in every rewinding operation to do it slowly and carefully and, if possible, in a small room where the humidity has been raised by boiling water in it for some time previously. If you do your own perforating you will have to do it where you can install some method of raising the humidity of the atmosphere. Make a comparative test of your film by developing a piece of unexposed stock from the roll and one that has been run through the camera with the lens capped.

3. Place view finder on side of camera at same height as lens and not too far back for the camera to obstruct the image in the finder. Set the camera up in a room facing a window 15 or 20 feet away and turn it until the image of one of the vertical parts of the window sash coincides with the edge of the aperture plate opening when focused, then place a mark on the ground glass of the finder directly over the same line of the image in the finder. Swing the camera to the other edge and repeat—then, with a horizontal line mark the top and bottom; now, with these guide marks, make a rectangle on the ground glass of the finder and you will have the field of the lens you used. The Pathe finder should show practically the same field as the 3-inch lens and the field of the 2-inch lens makes a line about one-third the distance from the edge to the centre of the finder.

4. Frame line may be changed in a Prestwich by having a mechanic shift the aperture plate or by shortening the claw arms. This should only be done by a competent workman.

5. Yes, velvet has no place in a motion picture camera where it can possibly be avoided as it collects dirt and causes scratches and static. In the gate it should be replaced with hard polished metal like steel, hard brass, or coin silver or Monell metal.

6. Yes, it is possible to equip almost any camera with the Goerz double exposure box.

7. Any hard metal capable of retaining a high polish could be used and hard silver seems a very logical substance to use as being immune to ordinary corrosion. The prices you quote seem very low for good work—mechanics here charge from $18 to $80 for removing velvet and putting in Monell metal or silver tracks on Pathe cameras. All gate parts in contact with the film should be relieved or milled out .002 to .01 inch except along the perforation edge so that only the edges of the film come in contact with the metal.

The Only Universal Standard.

C. Francis Jenkins, one of the pioneer inventors in motion picture photography and projection, addressed the University Club of Washington, D. C., recently.

Among many interesting things related from his long experience in the industry he called attention to the fact that the motion picture ribbon is the only unit that is standard in every country. Railway gauges, for example, vary in different countries; units of value, volume, weight and length differ; but the motion picture film is the same the world over.

After all, there is only one moving picture paper that you really need, and this is IT. Conducted by the largest and most experienced staff of editors and correspondents.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

THE ORGY (Lubin), Nov. 8.—The orgy shown in this one-reel drama never really takes place. It is the creation of a dream, brought about through the study of hypnotic influence. John Pemberton imagines that he obtains control over his ward and involves his household in serious trouble. Matters are more than mildly exciting while the dream lasts. Bernard Siegel, Ethel Clayton and Frances Joyner make the film interesting.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 89, 1915 (Selig), Nov. 8.—A struggle between college boys, Troy, N. Y.; trial trip of the U. S. S. Nevada; unveiling monument at White Plains, N. Y.; training Junior Police, Berkeley, Cal.; Serbian war pictures; Turkish town captured by Russians; Gov. Whitman's daughter christening flying boat, N. Y., and newsboys at the Chicago Zoo, are the news items in this number.

NO TICKEE, NO WASHEE (Vitagraph), Nov. 8.—The Irish and the chinks become engaged in a comic war in this one-reel comedy, written by Frederic Chapin. The fun is of the wildly hilarious sort, William Shea and Kate Price leading the hosts of the Emerald Isle. A short educational picture, California Scrap Book, is on the same reel.

THE HOODOO'S BUSY DAY (Kalem), Nov. 9.—Bud Duncan, Charles Inslee, Owen Evans and Ethel Teare are the victims of the hoodoo in this one-reel comedy. The laughs occur with agreeable frequency, the comic business on the painter's scaffold being an important factor in the chuckle making.

HALF A MILLION (Lubin), Nov. 9.—A married man who leaves his wife at home and runs after a burlesque queen is the leading character in this one-reel comedy. His son, who is something of a stage door Johnnie himself, discovers what his father is up to, and blackmails him out of half a million. Mother also takes a hand in bringing about this transaction. An average good farce, neatly played by D. L. Donn, Eleanor Blanchard and John J. Delson.

THE CHEF AT CIRCLE G (Selig), Nov. 9.—Tom Mix is the chief fun-dispenser of this one-reel western comedy and ladles out his usual supply of wholesome amusement. The Mix pictures of ranch life are always replicas of the real thing.

CARTOONS ON A YACHT (Edison), Nov. 10.—This number of the Animated Grouch Chaser is devoted to the doings of "Kid Kelly" and amateur theatricals in "Silas Bunkum's Boarding House." Reoul Barre's cartoons are as amusing as ever. Herbert Prior and George A. Wright are the leading members of the human cast used in introducing the cartoons.

THE FABLE OF "HANDSOME JETHRO, WHO WAS SIMPLY CUT OUT TO BE A MERCHANT" (Essanay), Nov. 10.—The doctrine expounded by Elder Ade in this one-reel fable is strongly in favor of the "back-to-the-farm" movement. A country chap deserts his birthplace for the city and his stay-at-home brother beats him out when it comes to garnering the kale. Another of Elder Ade's excellent preachments in slang. Albert Martin, Charles J. Stine and Royal Douglas are a competent cast.

HATS IS HATS (Vitagraph), Nov. 10.—Ellis Parker Butler, who wrote "Pigs Is Pigs," is the author of this one-reel comedy. Mr. Butler hit upon a novel theme, containing good comic possibilities, and Hughie Mack makes much of Mike, the expressman. Edwina Robbins and Donald MacBride complete the cast.

CUPID'S BATH (Essanay), Nov. 11.—A number of well-fitting bathing suits figure in this one-reel comedy. An over-confident lady killer is given a much-needed lesson during the action of the reel. The offering is an average good comedy picture. Carl Stockdale, Bonnie Leonard, Marjorie Reiger, Lee Hill and Leo White comprise the cast.

AN EYE TOO MANY (MinA), Nov. 11.—Margot Williams has the leading female role in this one-reel comedy. The inspiration of the scenario writer was a happy one, and the efforts of the cast have resulted in a laughable photoplay.

SIS (Vitagraph), Nov. 11.—A neat one-reel comedy-drama, the country boy hero getting the better of the city chap in a race for the hand of Sis. Arline Pretty realizes the title role in every way, and Thomas Mills and Garry McGarry are excellent foils as the rival lovers. George Ridgwell made the production.

THE INDIAN'S NARROW ESCAPE (Essanay), Nov. 12.—G. M. Anderson does a very creditable piece of character work as a good Indian, in this one-reel drama. The heart interest is strong and owes much of its appeal to the clever acting of two little girls—if their work can be called acting.

THE KIDNAPPED HEIRESS (No. 3 of "The Ventures of Marguerite"—Kalem), Nov. 12.—Marguerite gets into serious trouble by trying to assist her maid, in this one-reel episode of her adventures. A band of kidnappers furnish plenty of excitement for the young lady and keep the interest at high pressure. Miss Courtot has the support of Richard Purdon and a good cast.

A NIGHT IN OLD SPAIN (Lubin), Nov. 12.—This one-reel drama is a dream play, and the past and present are pleasantly blended in the story, which was written by Julian Louis Lemothe. The dream is made up of richly colored romance, noble lords and ladies moving grandly through it. Helen Eddy, Jay Morley, L. C. Shumway and Adda Gleason have the leading roles.

ROMANTIC REGGIE (Vitagraph), Nov. 12.—The humor of this one-reel comedy does not always hit the mark, in spite of the fact that it is directed by Sidney Drew. The part played by Mr. Drew offers but little change in expression, although the situations promise plenty of fun. Mrs. Drew makes all that is possible of her part. The finish is the best thing in the picture.

ROSA AND THE AUTHOR (Biograph), Nov. 11.—The leading role in this one-reel drama gives Augusta Anderson a chance to appear as an Italian girl—a novel character for her. The story is a soulful little romance, and is made convincing by the acting of Miss Anderson, W. J. Butler, Charles Perley, Laura LaVarnie and Hector V. Sarno.

A BROTH OF A BOY (Edison), Nov. 13.—Andrew J. Clark is the star of this one-reel comedy, and the author, Felicia Blake, has supplied him with a rattling good part. Andy fits the character perfectly, and the reel tells a simple and direct story that has many entertaining qualities. Mrs. G. Clark, Frank A. Lyon, Florence Stover and Olive Wright complete the cast.

THE GIRL AND THE SPECIAL (Episode No. 53 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Nov. 13.—A leap from a bridge to the top of a speeding train is one of the thrills of this one-reel sensational drama. Helen Gibson does other daring deeds during the action of the reel, and maintains the reputation of the series, with no apparent shock to her own nerves.

HIS THREE BRIDES (Lubin), Nov. 13.—Mark Swan wrote this one-reel comedy, and the star role has been intrusted to Billie Reeves. The photoplay is decidedly different from the ones in which Mr. Reeves has been seen lately, but it has merit and the fun is kept moving at a lively pace. Any one of the three brides is worth the winning.

THE WHITE LIGHT OF PUBLICITY (Selig), Nov. 13.—Edward Peil, Bessie Eyton and Cecil Holland are prominent in the telling of this one-reel drama, which concerns an actress, a newspaper woman and a clever advertising scheme. The plot is novel and the photoplay well acted.

General Film Company Specials.

TWICE INTO THE LIGHT (Essanay), Nov. 8.—The incidents and surroundings of this three-reel photoplay are distinctly out of the beaten track of screen drama. The plot has to do with modern life and, although melodramatic at times, is free from exaggeration. The locations are well chosen, and the acting of John Lorenz, Harriet Notter, Charles Racy and the other members of the cast is entirely satisfactory.

THE WOMAN FROM THE SEA (Kalem), Nov. 8.—This picture is exciting enough to hold interest well. What is more, the leading woman, Jackie Saunders, fills the heroine's role with personality and good acting. There are also many pretty sets and scenes. The other players are only so so, and except for its able handling, there is little to especially commend in the story. The picture was reviewed at length in Moving Picture World of Oct. 30a, on page 984.

THE COME BACK OF PERCY (No. 3 of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center"—Selig), Nov. 8.—The basic idea of this two-reel comedy is original and delightfully humorous. The situations, during which Percy returns to his home town and thrashes everyone against whom he has a grudge, are the essence of good fun. The handling of the material is very skilful and the cast, led by Wm. Scott, enter heartily into the humor of the photoplay.

WEAVER OF CLAYBANK (Biograph), Nov. 9.—This two-reel drama presents an interesting picture of lowly life. The characters are aptly drawn and the producer has been mindful of his local color. A quickening of the action would improve several portions of the play. Ivan Christy would have gained additional sympathy for the exhorter if he had endowed him with a little more backbone. Mary Malatesta, Joseph McDermott and Charles H. Mailes invested their respective roles with vitality.

WINE, WOMAN AND SONG (Essanay), Nov. 9.—In this two-reel drama G. M. Anderson illustrates, in a very realistic manner, the truth of the old adage, "A fool and his money is soon parted." As the hero of the play, Mr. Anderson is left a fortune and proceeds to waste it on the three expensive articles mentioned in the title. The production is thoroughly in keeping with the subject, and the acting well up to the mark.

FOR THE HONOR OF THE CREW (Vitagraph), Nov. 9.—A big regatta day at Poughkeepsie is reproduced in this three-reel drama without one detail lacking. W. P. S. Earle is the author and producer and his efforts are responsible for a very enjoyable photoplay. The cast, a well selected one, consists of James Morrison, William B. Davidson, Muriel Ostriche, Hattie De Lara, Edward Elkas and Charles Cook.

THE LAUREL OF TEARS (Biograph), Nov. 10.—Human appeal in story and acting is the distinguishing feature of this three-part Biograph picture, produced by J. Farrell Macdonald with Vera Sisson, Jose Ruben, Madge Kirby, Raymond Nye and Charles Mailes in the cast. It is a story of present-day commercial and artistic life very well handled in every respect. A stenographer with literary ambitions is told that she must live and suffer before she can hope to write convincing fiction. In these three reels she gains the experience that sooner or later, in one form or another, comes to every woman.

THE DREAM SEEKERS (Kalem), Nov. 10.—A two-part offering of exceptional interest as well as merit. It is the last picture that William Herman West, who recently died of heart disease, made, and it shows his fine power of human interpretation at its best. The humanity of the picture will make a strong appeal and it is one of those pictures that the reviewer can recommend to the exhibitor without reserve. The picture was reviewed at length in the issue of October 30, 1915, see page 809.

THE SECRET ROOM (Lubin), Nov. 10.—Julian Louis Lamothe has written a two-reel mystery drama that holds the interest to the end. The story is rather improbable, but its hold on the attention is a firm one, and it has been capably produced by Paul Powell. Melvin Mayo, L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Velma Whitman, Sidney Hayes and Robert Gray make the performance of decided merit.

THE GHOST OF THE TWISTED OAKS (Lubin), Nov. 11.—Valentine Grant is the star of this three-reel drama and Sidney Olcott the producer. It is a story of the South, and the ghost plays an important part in the action. An interesting picture. A review appeared in the issue of Nov. 13, page 1317.

THE TRUTH ABOUT HELEN (Edison), Nov. 12.—Grace Williams and Robert Conness are the stars of this four-reel drama, written by William Addison Lathrop. It deals with love and politics and has the benefit of a large and competent cast. A review of the picture appeared in the issue of Nov. 13, page 1322.

THE SECOND SON (Essanay), Nov. 13.—This three-act drama, written by Charles Bradley, is a story of English life, a proud old general and his two sons being the leading characters. One brother tries to ruin the other. The plot is dramatic and the character drawing skilfully done. Nell Craig is her thoroughly reliable self as the sweetheart of the hero, and Edmund F. Cobb, Cecil Yapp and Thomas Commerford are excellent as the three Trevors.

THE WOMAN'S SHARE (Vitagraph), Nov. 13.—A strong plot, with a timely thesis underlying it, and opportunities for varied and striking locations, and forceful acting, are found in this two-reel drama, written by Rev. C. J. Harris. Rollin S. Sturgeon has given it a careful production, and it is most ably played by George Holt, Anne Schaefer and George Kunkel.

Fox Film Corporation.

CARMEN, Nov. 1.—This film version of Carmen with Theda Bara in the leading part is a very strong production. The settings are exceptionally fine. The play has the true Spanish atmosphere and the errors of direction are greatly overshadowed by its merits. Theda Bara is in her favorite role as a home destroyer and does not show any new wrinkles. Her support is good and the realism of the play expressive. This subject was reviewed in last week's issue on page 1319.

THE BLINDNESS OF DEVOTION (Fox), Nov. 8.—Robert Mantell and Genevieve Hamper make their first photoplay appearance in this five-part Fox drama, a rather morbid, but strongly presented story of a wife's unfaithfulness. Mr. Mantell, in particular, gives an interesting performance.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE WOMAN PAYS (Rolfe), Nov. 15.—Produced by the Columbia Pictures Corporation under the direction of Edgar Jones, "The Woman Pays" is a convincing drama that holds the attention. Valli Valli, in the role of an extravagant woman who pays dearly for her folly, gives an able performance and is adequately supported by John E. Bowers, Edward Brennan and others. Several scenes have unusual dramatic power.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS (Rolfe-Metro), Nov. 22.—This five-part story features William Faversham in a fanciful melodrama the locale of which is India and New York. It is reviewed at length on another page in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 45, 1915, Nov. 11.—In addition to interesting war pictures, this issue contains views of the Harvard and Penn battle at Cambridge, Mass.; ruins of the school at Peabody, Mass, where 21 pupils were burned to death; Mrs. Tom Thumb unveils memorial tablet in honor of her ancestors at Middlesboro, Mass., and an enthusiastic welcome given to the Jackson Highway Pathfinders at Huntsville, Ala.

TO RENT, FURNISHED (American), Nov. 12.—This is an attractive and well-produced comedy with Vivian Rich in the feminine lead. The story is of the renting of a country bungalow to two different parties by mistake. Both of these parties are friends of the proprietors, and being former lovers who have only recently quarreled, the situation is especially funny. The young woman, reaching her destination first, has that night what she believes to be a terrible experience with burglars. The truth of the matter becoming known, the other tenant has been making desperate attempts to get to his room. A wedding ceremony next morning places a happy climax on what must be termed an excellent comedy offering.

BEAUTY IN DISTRESS (Casino), Nov. 14.—An eccentric comedy number, featuring Harry Vokes, Dorothy Powers and Bud Ross. Mrs. Devere sends for the beauty doctor, portrayed by Vokes. He arrives and the angry husband comes home and raises a rough house. The situations are largely of the knockabout order and contain considerable amusement.

JOHNNY, THE BARBER (Beauty), Nov. 16.—A comedy of rather ordinary merits. It is based on the old story of the young man trying to make good in order to prove himself worthy of his sweetheart's hand. Some amusing situations occur in the barber shop opened by Johnny, and his prospective father-in-law is treated to rough handling before his identity is discovered.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (Gaumont), Nov. 16.—The Mutual Traveler in this number visits Portland, Me., and vicinity. Waterfalls, woods, rocky seacoast and views in the city itself make this an interesting half reel.

A CUNNING CANAL BOAT CUPID (Falstaff), Nov. 18.—An amusing story in which the canal boat captain's daughter inherits a fortune if she marries her elderly cousin. The cook on the canal boat masquerades as the girl and gives the suitor such a series of unpleasant happenings that he gladly renounces the girl's hand. This has some good humor in it and is well presented.

THE FIGHTING FOUR (Cub), Nov. 19.—This is one of the best of the George Ovey comedies, and depicts two sides of a story very cleverly. The convict who tries to keep his sweetheart in ignorance of his whereabouts, and the innocent girl who believes firmly in the statements of her lover that he is a soldier at work in the trenches. The escape of the fighting four, and the theft of an automobile and costumes belonging to a moving picture company lead up to a thrillingly amusing climax.

BENEATH THE COAT OF A BUTLER (Thanhouser), Nov. 21.—This contains a good plot, in which a young college graduate learns that he is the son of a butler. He gives up his girl and remains true to his father; then the girl in turn renounces social position for him. The father later proves to be a millionaire instead of a butler. This is well constructed and enjoyable.

THE POSTMASTER OF PINEAPPLE PLAINS (Falstaff), Nov. 22.—A rural comedy in which the postmaster, bearded and gray, loves a young woman of the village with her father's approval. A younger lover wins the girl and elopes with her. Some of the comedy of the picture is gotten out of the postmaster's addiction to reading other people's mail.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

MAN TO MAN (Mustang), Nov. 12.—A commendable two-reel feature produced by Donald MacDonald, with Jack Richardson and Anna Little in the principal roles. The production is semi-western, and gives fine opportunity to Anna Little for displaying her charming personality in various garbs. Jack Richardson, contrary to the usual, has been given the role of the hero, which he plays with the daring spirit of the cattle man. The production pleases from start to finish.

THE CREST OF VON ENDHEIM (Reliance), Nov. 14.—A two-part story of the days of Maximilian in old Mexico. The picture is in many ways creditable. It is of course romantic in type, but suffers somewhat from over-sentimentalism where the shepherd hero, who afterward turns out to be the Count Von Endheim, persists in carrying a young lamb about with him on his worshipful visits to the grounds of the home of the Mexican maiden whom he loves. This is really the only severe point of criticism that could be offered.

CHAMPIONSHIP BASEBALL SERIES (Novelty), Nov. 15.—A two-reel number, giving some excellent flashes of the world's series games, the pictures being taken in both Philadelphia and Boston. Close-ups of the famous players are shown, views of President Wilson and Mrs. Galt, the league presidents and others of prominence. Scenes from all five games are shown. There is no continuity in the playing, but all sorts of snappy work is pictured from the various contests. The big crowds are also given good attention. The number is a very successful one of the kind, particularly as regards good photography.

A POLAR ROMANCE (Centaur), Nov. 18.—A two-reel production that is fashioned after the manner of an adventure. Some real polar bears cavort about in a few scenes of the picture, and some fairly thrilling atmosphere has been obtained. The production is not one of high standard, but will prove fairly entertaining to the average audience.

A ROMANCE OF THE ALPS (Reliance), Nov. 21.—An attractive two-reel offering, featuring Marguerite Marsh, Wm. Hinckley and Alfred Paget. The scenes are presumably in the Alpine country and some good settings do much to carry out the illusion. There are some good mountain climbing incidents and certain scenes are taken above the clouds. The young mountaineer and the visiting army man are rivals for the girl's hand. After many difficulties the former wins her. An exceptionally appealing out-door number.

THE VALKYRIE (Than-o-play), Nov. 27.—This three-reel production has many charming points, and is based on the belief of the peasantry of certain parts of Europe in the power of these fairy creatures. In the play a young woman who loves to desport on the green in the lightest of attire, becomes the terror of the peasants round about, who believe her to be a valkyrie girl. A love story is brought in, and a duel is fought between two rivals for the hand of the girl. The production is of medium quality.

North American Film Corporation

A DEAL WITH DESTINY (American), Nov. 15.—Chapter XXIX of "The Diamond from the Sky." This number is alive with developments. Blair marries Vivian and goes to England, where he lays claim to the earldom and the big estate. Arthur falls in an aeroplane and lands among Esther's gypsy friends. He is restored to health and later marries Esther. The gypsy wedding was decidedly picturesque and artistic. They agree to give up all thought of wealth and to enjoy life together, but Tom Blake is still working on the case, and it seems that they may yet find justice. The reel closes with a new theft of the diamond during the coronation ceremonies in England.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

CARMEN (Lasky), Nov. 1.—This film version of Carmen is a production of unusual supplement and excels with Geraldine Farrar occupying the center of the stage as Carmen. She is well supported by a capable cast. The photography and settings are exceptionally fine. The realistic bull fight is one of the features of this production.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 89, 1915 (Pathe), Nov. 6.—Two of the most interesting items of this issue are views of a speed test trip made by the "Nevada," and scenes in an American munition factory, showing the testing out of big guns, etc.

OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS AT DINNER (Globe), Nov. 20.—An interesting series of illustrations of how and where our feathered friends such as the tomtit and the bullfinch feed, their choice variety of menu, etc.

BAMBOO AND ITS USES (Indio-China—Photocolor), Nov. 21.—This is an intensely interesting industrial subject, showing the methods of dealing with the bamboo from its cutting to its conversion into houses, water pipes, umbrellas, hats and other useful articles.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

A BOLT FROM THE SKY (Balboa), Nov. 8.—This drama in three parts features Jackie Saunders. The story introduces a crooked gang who send one of their number to get acquainted with the daughter of a mining man who is a millionaire. The girl learning that her father is nearing bankruptcy accepts the young crook's offer of marriage and later makes her escape from his house with her maid, when she discovers what manner of man he is. The man, following her to her father's home, is shot and killed by her former lover, who is tried for the murder and acquitted on the ground that he has rid the country of a criminal. The inserts and sub-titles might be more carefully worded and placed, which would add a great deal to the enjoyment of the picture.

NEAL OF THE NAVY, NO. 11 (Panama Films), Nov. 11.—"The Dreadful Pit" proves quite as dreadful as its name implies, and turns out to be a panther trap, into which Ponto, the tool of Hernandez, falls and meets his death. This episode is a good one. Annette reaches the Californian mission just in time to hinder Hernandez and Inez from getting from the monks the grant for Lost Island. There are thrilling situations, and fine dramatic opportunities in this number. The brute man still holds the admiration of those who admire clever impersonations of unusual types.

NEDRA (Gold Rooster Play), Nov. 12.—An excellent five-reel adaptation of George Barr McCutcheon's novel, featuring George Probert and Fania Marinoff. Many of the scenes of this feature have been taken on the Bahama Islands, and introduce spectacularly hundreds of natives. A full review of the production will be found on another page of this issue.

A GENTLEMAN'S AGREEMENT (Balboa), Nov. 22—A three-part production with a rather unusual story which carries considerable interest. A man who has been saved from drowning by his chum promises above his own signature that he will give his chum anything that he possesses at any time he may ask it. An unusual sort of a love story follows in which the man gives up the woman he loves to the other man, finding that she loves the other man and not him. A criticism which may be trivial, but at the same time carries weight on the artistic side, calls attention to the makeup of the leading lady which destroys to a large extent the beauty of the upper part of her face, a narrowness between the eyebrows being unpleasantly accentuated.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 192 (Universal), Nov. 10.—A diversified number showing an airship christening, California water carnival, university football game, factory fire in Brooklyn and some good war scenes. Hy Mayer drawings conclude the number.

READY FOR RENO (L-KO), Nov. 21.—A lively burlesque number beginning with the usual park flirtations and winding up with a bed falling out of a house onto some telephone wires. The closing scenes are laughable and novel. Peggy Pearce, George Gebhardt, Fatty Voss and others participate.

WHEN FATHER WAS THE GOAT (Nestor), Nov. 22.—A comedy number featuring Neal Burns, Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rottenberry. Father is caught in a gambling raid and the son gets his honeymoon expenses in squaring things. This is well-pictured and quite amusing.

WHEN WILLIE WENT WILD (Imp), Nov. 23.—Once more the perennial story of an English gentleman and his valet in the West. The incidents are amusing throughout, and in spite of the trite subject matter, this will bring laughter. Victor Potel plays the valet.

THE TRAP THAT FAILED (Big U), Nov. 24.—An original story, by Ben Cohen, featuring Murdock MacQuarrie, Edna Payne, Duke Aldis and Arthur Moon. Some clubmen decide to test the honesty of the first man they meet on the street. One of them tries to frame up a theft for him to commit, with surprising results. This is a good number.

LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK IN "KIDNAPPING THE KING'S KIDS" (Powers), Nov. 25.—Another amusing number of "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" series. This is a costume burlesque, picturing the efforts of Black Rudolph to carry off a pair of royal children. Detective Duck substitutes a pair of goats. This is laughable and well presented.

SAVED BY A SKIRT (Nestor), Nov. 26.—A comedy number featuring Ray Gallagher, Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes. The plot, in which the brother represents his sister in a marriage ceremony, is preposterous, but has amusing features. This is fairly strong.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE WINGED IDOL (Kay-Bee).—The story of a wealthy young drunkard who drifts into the influence of a fanatical woman who resolves to cure him, and she does—for the woman to whom he is married. A well-pictured story of unusual interest and rather abrupt conclusion.

A SUBMARINE PIRATE (Keystone).—In many respects the most remarkable Keystone ever shown on the screen, in which Syd Chaplin can be seen doing a lot of reckless as well as amusing acrobatic feats on an actual submarine, one having every appearance of belonging to the U. S. Navy.

JORDON IS A HARD ROAD (Fine Arts Film Co.).—A labored and loosely made adaptation from a novel, containing some bright spots and fair acting, but so badly put together that it drags along like a two-reel play stretched to five. The least interesting Triangle yet shown.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

THE FRAME-UP (Broadway Universal Feature), Nov. 8.—A five-part subject written and directed by Otis Turner and featuring George Fawcett, supported by Maude George and Harry Carter. It is a good, strong picture. It was reviewed at length on page 1155 on November 6.

COLORADO (Broadway Universal Feature), Nov. 15.—Hobart Bosworth is featured in this good five-part adaptation of the melodrama by Augustus Thomas. The picture, which is of outdoors, has many moments that thrill. The subject was reviewed at length on page 1154 on November 6.

AN AMERICAN QUEEN (Universal Special Feature), Nov. 15.—This final instalment of "The Broken Coin" serial brings the story to a very interesting denouement. Kitty and Frederick put the coin together in the torture chamber of the palace and locate the missing treasure. Count Frederick is found to be the rightful king of Gretzhoffen and he dethrones the puppet king, Michael, in a dramatic way. He then lays claim to the throne and to Kitty's heart. The construction and action are good and some excellent night photography is shown.

THE MYSTERY OF THE LOCKED ROOM (Rex), Nov. 21.—A three-reel number, written by Wm. A. Lathrop, with Ben Wilson, Joseph Girard, Dorothy Phillips and Ned Reardon in the cast. This pictures a mysterious murder, the girl's father being killed in a darkened room while quarreling with the hero. Porch climbers, a crooked butler and a broker who owes him money complicate the situation. The mystery is practically cleared up at the close of the second reel, but the subsequent events are full of interest. This is well constructed and makes an entertaining offering as a whole.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF TERENCE O'ROURKE, NO. 1, "The Palace of Dust" (Universal Special Feature),—Nov 22.—This two-reel number is the first of a new series of adventures of Terence O'Rourke. It features J. Warren Kerrigan as the bold young soldier of fortune, whose heart and sword are at the disposal of any just cause. In this particular number he is called on to perform distasteful service and escapes the clutches of his enemies in a dramatic way. This sort of role is particularly adapted to Mr. Kerrigan's personality and the new series promises to afford good entertainment. Carmen Phillips and George Periolat are in the supporting cast.

IN SEARCH OF A WIFE (Gold Seal), Nov. 23.—A two-reel number, by Robert F. McGowan, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, Agnes Vernon and others. This is a Thanksgiving story of a delicate, pleasing sort, not very strong in plot but quite entertaining. It tells of a young man who leaves home for the city, where he searches for a wife. Eventually he returns home and marries his father's ward, whose charms he has just learned to appreciate. The Thanksgiving dinner makes a timely touch.

STOLEN HEARTS AND NICKELS (L-KO), Nov. 24.—A two-reel low comedy, featuring Billy Ritchie, Louise Orth and Reggie Morris. Billy apepars as a street car conductor, who gains prosperity at the expense of his passengers. There are numerous flirtations, much of the action centering about a bracelet he purchases for his girl. The humor in this number seems forced in many instances and is never very strong. It is, however, free from any objectionable features.

MAN OR MONEY? (Imp), Nov. 26.—A three-reel number, featuring King Baggot, Edna Hunter and Ned Reardon. The story is very conventional and leaves little to the imagination. The young girl marries for money. Later she and her husband meet her first lover in the Canadian woods. There is a clash of interests between the men. Friendship is restored through the generosity of the hero, but later comes another fight in which the husband falls over a cliff and is killed. Some of the scenic effects are pleasing. A familiar plot, well handled but lacking novelty.

A DESPERATE LEAP (Bison), Nov. 27.—A two-reel number, featuring Helen Holmes, L. D. Maloney and G. F. Cummings. This is an extremely lively railroad yarn, picturing the manner in which some hoboes grab a mail sack from a moving freight train. The wife of the station agent catches them when they try to repeat the trick. They tie her in an attic, but she jumps from the roof to the freight train they are on and the thieves are rounded up with the help of the train crew. The story contains much exciting action and is a good offering of the type.

World Film Corporation.

HEARTS OF MEN (Harris), Nov. 8.—Produced by the Charles K. Harris Feature Film Company, under the direction of Perry N. Vekroff, this five-part picture tells an interesting story and gives a sympathetic interpretation of child life. It is altogether a wholesome and entertaining photoplay very well acted by Beulah Boynter, Arthur Donaldson and the juvenile players cast in important roles.

A DAUGHTER OF THE SEA (Equitable), Nov. 22.—This five-part subject is reviewed on another page in this issue.

Miscellaneous

THE GRANDEE'S RING (Interstate), November.—This five-part picture, produced by the Interstate Feature Film Company, is being handled on the state rights plan. The story is simple and clearly told with scenes about equally divided between the Mexican border and a New England college, where the hero of the tale is a student. Helene Wallace makes an attractive heroine.

THE CONCEALED TRUTH (Ivan Film Productions, Inc.), Nov. 10.—This five-part subject is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE—FOUNDER OF THE RED CROSS (Ideal Film Service).—The career of Florence Nightingale is accurately and thoroughly portrayed in this four-part picture produced in England. The life of the famous woman is shown from childhood to death. The audience sees how she came to found the Red Cross Society and something of the great work that she accomplished.

Two More Experts for Horsley

Ulysses Davis, Director, and Frank Crompton, Technical Director, are Signed to Contracts.

DAVID HORSLEY has added to his staff at the studio in Los Angeles two experts whose servies are sure to be favorably reflected in future Horsley releases. The two additions are in the persons of Ulysses Davis, director, and Frank Crompton, technical director, both prominent in their respective vocations.

Mr. Davis was born in South Amboy, N. J., in 1872. He was educated in the public schools of Chicago, to which city his family had moved, and later took up elocution. His first public appearance was in 1889 as a member of the Boston Concert company, with which he remained for several seasons touring mostly the middle west. His introduction to film work was made in 1909 at the Centaur studios in Bayonne, N. J. He played leads and heavies in the Centaur pictures for three months and was then made director. After nine months he left and since then has been associated with different producers as director, notably the Champion Film company, the Vitagraph company and Bosworth, Inc.

Mr. Davis is now at work on his first picture for Mr. Horsley. It is to be a two reel Centaur feature entitled "The Hindoo's Way," and was written by Miss Theodosia Harris, coauthor of "The Martyrs of the Alamo" and other successes, who is now a member of Mr. Horsley's scenario staff. The picture, which will be played by a large cast of principals and the Bostock animals, will be released in December.

Frank Crompton, Mr. Horsley's other acquisition, has for the past eight years been accepted as one of the best authorities on technical construction in the motion picture business. He will supervise the technical direction of all the Horsley productions made in Los Angeles.

Mr. Crompton was born in Manchester, England, in 1859. At the age of three his parents moved with him to Australia, where he was educated. After mastering the profession of architecture and upon acquiring a practical experience as a contractor he went to Africa. In 1906 he returned to London and three months later came to the United States. After traveling throughout the United States to perfect him for the course he had mapped out, he presented himself to the Edison company and was engaged. There he supervised the construction of sets for many pictures and when it was decided to produce in Cuba Mr. Crompton was sent along with the company. He made two trips to Cuba with Edison, and upon the return from the second he was approached by the Imp company with a most flattering offer which he accepted. For three years he remained with the Imp. In 1911 he was sent to the Universal plant in Los Angeles and remained there for some time, giving splendid service.

Mr. Crompton's first effort with Mr. Horsley is in the construction of sets used in "Could a Man Do More?" a three reel Centaur Star Feature, with Crane Wilbur, which is to be released November 24 on the Mutual program.

"See America Now" Lesson in Films

Arthur J. Aylesworth, Sporting Authority and Crack Shot, Takes Trip with Gun and Camera.

"SEE America First" is an admonition which, though dinned into our ears for some considerable time, has had little effect upon the chronic European traveler till recently, when two things conspired to keep him on this side of the water and to awaken his interest in the great country of his birth. They are: The greatest war of history and the greatest invention of the age—the motion picture. "See America Now" is the invitation held out by the Aylesworth Wild Animal Pictures, which are now being booked through the Paramount exchanges.

Arthur J. Aylesworth, the crack shot and sporting authority, secured animated photographs of every variety of North American big game in their native haunts, in order that the views might be presented to the patrons of moving picture theaters and preserved for the edification of posterity and the United States Government's records.

The pictures of the impressive big-horn mountain sheep are said by Mr. Aylesworth to be the only ones in existence. The camera man was "in at the death" of one of these remarkable creatures.

The sportsman, however, will find more than this one scene to appeal directly to him: The views of camp life, the dog sleds, trout fishing, the pictures of bears, deer, bison, and other animals in their homes will delight his soul as well as deeply interest the many who love the great outdoors.

From a purely scenic standpoint the films are remarkable. Jagged, snow-covered mountains, reminiscent of the Alps, greet the eye in the sheep country. Deep valleys, lakes, swiftly rushing torrents, broad plains and dark woods are brought from the little known country of the Far Northwest.

More War Pictures

WHAT is pronounced to be the most remarkable set of war pictures ever exhibited in this country will be shown at the Park theater, Columbus Circle, beginning Monday, Nov. 15. "The Battles of A Nation" is the title of the new production, and its sponsors are the American Correspondence Film Co. Tom Bret wrote the scenario. There are six reels of vivid action, the scenes for which were taken on the Eastern front by A. K. Dawson, the intrepid A C F correspondent, who has already gained a world-wide reputation for being one of the nerviest men who ever turned a camera crank.

"The Battles of a Nation" depicts every phase of the great European struggle, from the amusing pranks of the soldiers during their "rest periods" to the awful misery and destruction caused by modern warfare on a tremendous scale. The new feature presents at close range the dominant figures who are shaping the national and military policies of Germany and Austria-Hungary, and affords a striking insight into that wonder of wonders, Teutonic efficiency and organization. The keynote of the entire production is action. Events which are so thrillingly interesting as to be almost incredible follow upon each other in bewildering succession.

Reviews of Current Productions

"Nedra"

Five-Part Gold Rooster Play Produced by Edward Jose, Features George Probert and Fania Marinoff.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald

GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON'S novel has been converted into a most delightful comedy drama for the screen, and was released on the program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., on Nov. 11th. To gain the atmosphere required for the latter half of the story, Edward Jose with his company of players, which included George Probert, the well-known Broadway star, Fania Marinoff and Margaret Greene, spent some time on the Bahama Islands. Needless to say, the scenes filmed on these islands are singularly attractive, and hundreds of natives have responded with remarkable intelligence to the disciplining of Director Jose. The successful attempt of Ridgeway, the "white god" of the natives, to train a picked army from among their midst, affords considerable room for spectacular results. The staging of these scenes has been done with an eye to the artistic, and it is distinctly impressive to view the apparently endless procession of armed blacks coming toward us from a deep vista that loses itself back in a hazy perspective.

But this is only a part of it all. The real comedy of the play occurs more largely in its earlier stages, when to escape the eager attentions of their friends the two young people decide to elope. Mistaken for burglars, they escape with difficulty the clutches of the police, and later are treated on a boat they have boarded to the startling news that they are on their way oceanward, headed for Manila. Neither is there a clergyman aboard the boat, hence an even more serious situation faces the unfortunate pair, and in presenting his fiancee as his sister, the plot thickens and Ridgeway discovers to his sorrow the limitations of a brother's influence.

The shipwreck, later, bares another difficult situation, for on the barren island to which he manages to swim with one who is supposedly his wife, he discovers that he has rescued the wife of another man. Reconciled to their fate, the two decide to make the best of it, and are believed by the natives to be white deities. Here again it is impossible to lose the comedy of the situation when the natives decide that to insure themselves against a future wherein their white deities may die and there shall be no more white gods, their god and goddess must marry. The wedding ceremony is interrupted by the arrival of an American vessel, and the pair live to find that they are really in love with one another. Ridgeway arrives at the home of his fiancee just in time to see her joined in holy matrimony to his old chum, after which he decides that his pride and not his heart has been hurt, and returns to the widow whom he has rescued and all goes humming.

The Drews in "Is Xmas a Bore?"

Mr. and Mrs Sidney Drew, assisted by Mary Maurice, are busily engaged in the production of "Is Xmas a Bore?" the second story from the pen of James Montgomery Flagg to be produced by the Vitagraph Company.

"The Hungarian Nabob"

Biograph Players in Four-Part Adaptation of Novel—Griffith's "My Hero" Reissued.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig

THE illusion of reality is not an attribute of this four-part picturization of a novel by Marus Jokai. Evidently the author of the scenario was content to find material for an odd, romantic and somewhat old-fashioned story—the kind of a story that may entertain even if it taxes the credulity. It is a bit difficult to take the Hungarian Nabob and the other characters in this picture seriously; but one may accept the author's situations and enjoy them without inquiring too closely into their likelihood. The production is prettily mounted and acted in an appropriately romantic spirit.

Scene from "The Hungarian Nabob" (Biograph).

Charles H. Mailes plays the aged Nabob whose early death is eagerly waited by his nephew, a reckless young count whose fortune has been dissipated in riotous living. Franklin Ritchie acts the fastidious count and Louise Vale is the very correct young woman with whom he falls in love. Her name is Fanny and she is grievously tried by the indiscretions of her two high-spirited sisters. These sisters side with the count in his efforts to win Fanny, who springs a surprise by marrying the Nabob. When we last see the count he is penniless and well started on the road to ruin. The picture has a number of good points and should be well received.

"My Hero" is an early Griffith single-reel production of a quality hard to match in current releases. It presents a dramatic story laid in a western settlement menaced by unfriendly Indians. Admirers of Henry B. Walthall will find him in an unexpected role, that of Indian Charlie, a warrior who flinches under the first test of his physical courage and plans to redeem his reputation by leading a massacre of the whites. He ends by saving the lives and promoting the love affair of two very natural young people, played by Dorothy Gish and Bobby Harron.

"Hearts of Men"

The Harris Feature Film Company Produces an Excellent Picture for Release on World Film Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE first title selected for this five-part photoplay, directed by Perry N. Vehroff for the Charles K. Harris Feature Film Company, was "School Bells," suggested, no doubt, by Mr. Harris' popular song of that name. In changing to "Hearts of Men," the producers found a stronger title for advertising purposes, but not one that suggests the outstanding elements of this very attractive photoplay. "Hearts of Children" would come nearer to the mark in indicating the spirit, the appeal and the real charm of as wholesome and interesting a picture as the most exacting exhibitor need desire.

Without being a child's story, "Hearts of Men" is essentially a story of children. They figure prominently from first to last; in the second reel they have the screen practically to themselves and the solution of the plot is entrusted to the author's youthful hero and heroine. Quite unconsciously they become the reconciling influence which wipes out a grievance of years' standing between their elders. The story is logical and sympathetic without once verging on sentimentality. The treatment is original, even if the theme is not, and the acting of Beulah Poynter, Arthur Donaldson and the youngsters, so vital to the production, is in all respects adequate.

The plot development is to be commended for its clearness and its avoidance of the non-essential. In the first reel we see the treachery that led the inventor of a valuable perfume to harbor a bitter hatred for the man who proved false. The second reel introduces the second generation, presenting the son of the disappointed inventor as one of a large class of school children, among them the daughter of the man who made a fortune out of the perfume formula. Incidents in the school-room are humorous in the extreme without burlesque exaggerations, and the types of boys are finely contrasted.

Scene from "Hearts of Men" (Harris-World).

This tone of accuracy, of fidelity to the character and spirit of youth, is equally well maintained throughout the subsequent action that ends a feud of long standing. "Hearts of Men" proves that Mr. Harris can live up to his promise, that of producing clean, wholesome, entertaining photoplays.

"The Concealed Truth"

Gertrude Robinson and James Cooley Featured in a Five-Part Subject of Ivan Film Productions, Inc.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "The Concealed Truth," a five-part drama issued by Ivan Film Productions, Inc., Ivan Abrahamson, its writer and producer, aims to show the misfortunes that fall to a whole household following a marriage that is based neither in love nor in reason. The picture is frankly revelatory of domestic skeletons and makes no attempt to call things by other than their right names. One brother marries the secretary of his father; the other brother is deeply in love with her, but has not declared his regard. The wife is lonesome and longs for children. The husband knows her wish is hopeless; he received first-hand information to that effect from a doctor before the marriage took place. He was told one other thing as a result of a bacteriological examination the nature of which will puzzle medical men as well as laymen. The subject is well staged and well photographed, but the situation just described may cause hesitation on the part of those managers who are considerate of their younger patrons.

Scene from "The Concealed Truth" (Ivan).

Gertrude Robinson has the role of the unhappy wife. Miss Robinson has had a wide experience in screen work and her performance is that of the player who knows her camera. She is the real center of interest in the story. James Cooley is the younger son, the one who fails to declare his love and loses out to his brother, or rather he does until after his brother is shot and killed by a deserted paramour. This killing, by the way, is an important factor in the story.

The shot is fired through a window, much like a well-remembered event on Long Island a year ago. Victor, accompanied by Robert's wife, has just come from a hospital, whither he had been taken suffering from starvation. As the crime is committed he is alone with Robert in the room. Victor goes to the window, picks up a pistol and is found with it in his hand when the household rushes in. He is condemned to die for murder. The governor, even, denies clemency, stating the evidence is overwhelming. No account is taken of the fact that no man will starve with a pistol in his pocket when pawnshops are doing business, not to mention the further fact that if Victor possessed a weapon the hospital would have a record of it.

Frank Whitson is Robert, the elder son. His work is good, barring a tendency at times to the melodramatic. Carrie Lee, as the adventuress, is excellent, and so is Frank De Vernon as the elder Gilmore. While the story is in color gray, undoubtedly it will have interest for many picture patrons. The denouement is satisfactory—the adventuress who committed the murder confessing her crime and saving the condemned man just as the march to the chair is begun. The end is the marriage of Victor and Dorothy, and of course there is a "later" scene that contains a baby.

"Buck Parvin and the Movies"

Third of the Series, "This Is the Life," Affords an Excellent Sample of Entertaining Multiple-Reel Comedy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE time is ripe when a word of praise is due the three-reel comedies being made at the studios of the American Film Co. and released under the Mustang brand. The comedies referred to are adaptations of the Chas. E. Van Loan's "Buck Parvin and the Movies" stories, well known to readers of the Saturday Evening Post, and which are now being published in book form by the George H. Doran Co.

The first of the series "Man Afraid of His Wardrobe," was a side splitter, and the second, "Buck's Lady Friend," followed closely the lead of the first. The third stands well by comparison with the other two, and presents many truly amusing situations.

The Mustang comedies serve two purposes: they give an insight into the making of a moving picture, comic though the incidents portrayed may be, and they supply clean, wholesome comedy features. Arthur Acord as "Buck" is one of the finest as cowboy types go, and never fails to bring with him that breeze from the cattle country that fascinates the rest of us.

In "This is the Life," Buck's picture experience gains in variety, and he is out-distanced as a shining star by the new feminine lead, who happens to be a wife looking for a career, and whose moving picture career her husband has decided to cut short through a conspiracy with the director. The lady's trials are many and will find little sympathy and much laughter in the moving picture audience.

Scene from "This Is the Life" (Mustang).

Playing the feminine lead is Adele Farrington with John Gough as the conspiring husband. Others of the cast are Lawrence Peyton, who does duty as the over-wrought director, Sylvia Ashton, Harry Gibson, Joe Mackey, D. Stratton and others.

"The Ghost of the Twisted Oaks"

A Three-Reel Tale of the South, in Which the Supernatural Plays an Important Part—Produced by the Lubin Co.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel

VOODOOISM and a real ghost which appears to several characters in the drama, have been employed to advantage by Pearl Gaddis in her three-reel play, "The Ghost of the Twisted Oaks." A profound respect for, if not an absolute belief in, the supernatural, is necessary to the full enjoyment of the story. The opening scenes are laid in the North. Mary Randall and her widowed mother are released from poverty by the death of the girl's uncle, who leaves her his plantation in Florida. Mary and her mother go to "Twisted Oaks," and, eventually the young girl becomes engaged to her neighbor, Jack Carlton.

Scene from "The Ghost of the Twisted Oaks" (Lubin).

The "Blue Gum" negroes who work in the turpentine forest of the plantation are controlled by a Voodoo priest. Mary has the man driven off the place, and he vows to get even with her. The "ghost" then appears to Mary and Jack, and the action cuts back to disclose the history of the perturbed spirit of "Twisted Oaks," an unfortunate young belle of antebellum days who was killed while trying to save her lover during a duel. After the action shifts back to the present, Mary stumbles upon the Voodoos at worship and the priest determines to use her as a blood sacrifice, but the ghost again appears to Jack and leads him to the rescue. The stories of Caroline Lee Hence, familiar to a past generation, were made up of the same admixture of the weird, the real and the supernatural.

Sidney Olcott is accountable for the production of this photoplay. He has shown excellent judgment in his choice of locations and reproduced the ensemble scenes of the Voodoo worship with uncanny effect. In achieving this result, he has received great assistance from the actor who plays the Voodoo priest and the ambitious and energetic rattlesnake who impersonates himself. The scenes where the priest captures the snake and where Mr. Rattle bites the hand that made him a prisoner are startling in their realism. Valentine Grant is winsome and capable as Mary Randall, and James Vincent makes a gallant Jack Carlton. The minor roles are satisfactorily played.

"The Blindness of Devotion"

Robert Mantell Makes First Photoplay Appearance in Intense Melodrama Produced by Fox.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AUDIENCES that have become accustomed to associating Robert Mantell with Shakespearean drama may be a trifle surprised at the material selected by the Fox Company for his first screen performance. "The Blindness of Devotion" is modern melodrama, rather Frenchy in tone, and at times undeniably intense. It is an appropriate addition to the Fox program of sensational pictures, and interesting to followers of screen acting because of the performances given by Mr. Mantell and Genevieve Hamper.

The part of Count de Carnay, played by Mr. Mantell, frequently demands a display of strong emotion. The Count is a deceived husband, who, blinded by his devotion to his wife, is slow to recognize the liaison that is being carried on in his own house. Even after he has had visual proof of the faithlessness of his wife and the perfidy of the youth whom he adopted, de Carnay is ready to accept a rather weak explanation. Once more he sees Renee in the arms of her lover and this time there is no possibility of a reconciliation. Renee is tricked into drinking the poison she had prepared for her husband and the young army officer shoots hmself. The closing scene shows the two bodies stretched side by side on the floor.

Mr. Mantell acts the Count with sincerity and power; he rises to the big scenes of the picture in a masterly fashion and at no time is there any suggestion of a lack of familiarity with the requirements of photoplay expression. Miss Hamper photographs well and puts plenty of feeling into her interpretation of a seductive woman, whereas Stuart Holmes is well cast as the victim of her wiles. Director J. Gordon Edwards supplied an artistic production for an unpleasant story that is not without power.

"Florence Turner Impersonates Film Favorites"

A Single Reel MinA Offering—Miss Turner's Idea of Well Known Screen Players Makes Excruciatingly Funny Film.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WHAT the more than leading lady, Florence Turner, being as she is the doyen of the film business, does in this single reel of remarkably funny film, is primarily for the amusement and pleasure of those who not only know her, but others, like Ford Sterling and Broncho Billy, whom she impersonates in it. Yet any one at all who sees it will have to laugh—it's a sure-fire laugh getter.

The curtain rises on her as a slavey in a kitchen. The slavey is film crazy and soon has a dream in which we see snatches, first of a scene in a French Pathe picture. This is followed by her idea of Ford Sterling, which made this reviewer ball right out with laughter, although it is not so compellingly funny as her idea of the early Biograph method; at this we had to wipe the tears from our cheeks. Her impersonation of Broncho Billy is also good and her Mabel Normand will more than pass muster. She closes the picture with the last scene in Sarah Bernhardt's "Queen Elizabeth," when she falls on some piled up cushions and bounces from them to a more comfortable position. Then she wakes up in the kitchen.

It is a picture that ought not to be missed. It is rich and the spectators will count it a privilege to see it. We have told the whole story, though it is worthy of a much more extended space than we give it.

"One Million Dollars"

William Faversham Is Starred in Finely Staged Rolfe-Metro Subject Containing Exciting Moments.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

METRO'S release for Nov. 22 is "One Million Dollars," a five-part subject from the studio of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. William Faversham is starred in this picture, the action of which opens in mystic India and is very soon transferred to New York. Mr. Faversham has the role of a criminologist who through his chance prevention of a murder is rewarded by the narrowly escaping high priest with a wonderful crystal globe, which enables him to project his astral body unseen into places where his body in being would be extremely unwelcome.

So it is that "One Million Dollars" is a fanciful melodrama, and an exceedingly good one. John W. Noble, who directs the picture, has employed large and artistic settings. Those shown at the opening, of the Indian plaza, are impressive. Those of the interiors in New York are luxurious. Not many of the scenes are of outdoors, but such as there are are picturesque.

Scene from "One Million Dollars" (Metro).

Mr. Faversham gives a good impersonation of the unemotional, cold-blooded crime detector. His business is a serious one, and his portrayal of Richard Duvall contains no lighter touches, if we except that moment at the denouement when Duvall declares his love for the client to whom he has been instrumental in restoring a fortune. Carlotta De Felice has the role of the niece of Count D'Este. The count poisons his wife and forges a new will, which is in his favor and against the niece. Grace, suspicious, appeals to the chief of police, and this official calls in Duvall.

Exciting scenes ensue after Duvall begins work. In an ingenious way the crime is uncovered, an accomplice confesses, and the air is cleared. There is an excellent cast. Among the players are Henry Bergman, George Le Guere, Mayme Kelso, Camilla Dalberg, Arthur Morrison and Charles Graham.

"The Woman Pays"

Valli Valli Plays Leading Role in Strong Picture Produced by Columbia Corporation for Metro.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ONCE more we have the story of the extravagant wife who pretty nearly becomes the ruination of her husband, but "The Woman Pays" is enough unlike other photoplays based on the same theme to escape being a mere repetition of something that has been done in the past. Edgar Jones directed a decidedly interesting picture in which there are many effective scenes, from a dramatic as well as a pictorial standpoint, and a picture in which Valli Valli shows herself to be an accomplished photoplay actress. In the character of Beth Coventry she acts with discrimination and feeling. Moreover, she is admirably supported by Edward Brennan, John E. Bowers and Marie Empress.

The opening of the picture immediately catches the interest. Beth is confronted by a problem, that of selecting a husband from three eligible suitors, one offering high social position, another wealth, and the third happiness, for Bettie is in love with Langton, a bank cashier of limited resources. After an elaborate wedding, beautifully staged, the coming of trouble is foreshadowed in a scene between a jealous woman, who wanted Langton for herself, and the wealthy Murdock, whom Beth had rejected. The plot is deftly developed to show how the bank cashier becomes more and more deeply involved in debt, how he ventures securities belonging to his wife's aunt and how he gradually becomes estranged from his extravagant wife.

Scene from "The Woman Pays" (Metro).

Probably the most impressive scenes in the production are those at a ball attended by Beth. While the festivities are at their height, a thunderstorm rages around the building; a bolt of lightning tears a limb from a tree and sends it crashing through the roof. Beth is caught under the falling timber and her face is badly cut. The scar disfigures her beauty and believing that her husband's interest in her is dead, she leaves to live in seclusion with her aunt. It takes about one more reel to settle misunderstandings and effect a permanent reconciliation. Finely staged, intelligently acted and reasonably developed, "The Woman Pays" is a very satisfactory offering.

"The Black Hole of Glenranald"

Third Number of Kalem's Series of Hornung's Australian Gentleman-Bandit Stories Will Interest and Amuse.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE third release of the Kalem Company's series of pictures adapted from E. W. Hornung's "Stingaree" stories will be "The Black Hole of Glenranald." As it was the first of these stories to be seen by this reviewer it gave him an opportunity to appraise the statement of the company that each "Stingaree" subject is of independent interest. He so found it.

Stingaree is played by True Boardman. Mr. Boardman fits easily and naturally into the part of the gentleman-bandit. He seems a master of that particular degree of insolence "which comes only from good breeding." Then, again, he possesses the physical qualifications and the horsemanship to make convincing and realistic his portrayal of the bandit. Paul C. Hurst, as Howie, Stingaree's "pardner," makes an interesting foil for his more polished confrere. Howie makes up for his lack of the graces of ultra-society by his direct methods of doing business—and one of the principal of these is his quickness in reaching for his light-triggered weapon.

"The Black Hole of Glenranald" contains more of the comedy element than that of the straight dramatic. It is this phase of the story that tends to obscure in the mind of the beholder the fact that Stingaree really is holding up a stage and robbing a bank. Somehow in smiling at the turning of the tables on the banker and his assistants, who get dumped into the very pit they had digged for Stingaree, we forget to commiserate with the men who have been held up and robbed. From another angle, it seems to be a fact that apparently it is less an offense to hold up a man if at the same time by utilizing and turning against him his own contrivance you also hold him up to obloquy.

James W. Horne has given us a story of picturesque outdoors that will make two reels of entertainment.

"The Grandee's Ring"

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE story in "The Grandee's Ring" is quite simple. There is no effort to expound a theme, nor is subtlety of characterization attempted, nevertheless the picture makes very fair entertainment, better entertainment, in fact, than many photoplays that aim higher and fall short of their mark. Produced by the Interstate Feature Film Company and handled on the state rights plan "The Grandee's Ring" should find a profitable market, especially among exhibitors in the smaller towns.

Scene from "The Grandee's Ring" (Inter-State).

If one enjoys the thrills of cowboy life, just across the Mexican border, the taste is gratified in the early scenes of the picture. Ranch life is given a convincing enough depiction and there is plenty of excitement in the escape of Carlos from Mexican bandits and his subsequent rescue of the eastern girl who is looking for thrilling experiences. She almost finds more than she bargained for.

Contrasting with the western scenes and equally interesting in their way are those at a New England college where Carlos acquires an education. Of course, he falls in love with the girl he saved from the bandits and, as not infrequently happens, he is seriously troubled by a rival suitor. When his rival bats out the winning run in an important baseball game his case looks quite hopeless; but in the end one is not surprised to find that the girl decides in Carlos' favor.

Especially noteworthy are the scenes of college life on a picturesque campus with the college buildings for a background, and those on a baseball field during a critical game. One sees genuinely enthusiastic students in the cheering sections and is made to feel something of the spirit of college rivalry. Helene Wallace makes a very attractive heroine, whereas Carlos is forcefully portrayed by Kenneth MacDougall.

"A Daughter of the Sea"

Equitable Five-Part Subject Contains Picturesque Backgrounds of Village and Ocean, But Lacks Dramatic Quality.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Equitable Company will release on November 22 "A Daughter of the Sea," written by Frances Marion, adapted by Russell Smith and produced by Charles Seay. The subject is in five parts. The story, as its title indicates, is of the sea and shore—of a motherless girl brought up by her father in his fisherman's hut. Muriel Ostriche has the part of Margot, the maid, who, through reading magazines, becomes excited over the limelighted doings of persons of means and who later is given an opportunity to live with and to try to be of them. Miss Ostriche's part is of the ingenue sort. The little player tries hard to make an impression, but it must be said she is unsuccessful. She is handicapped on one side by a story that lacks depth—that fails to stir.

The cast is a good one. William H. Tooker has the role of the father. He makes much of the part. Catherine Calhoun is Mrs. Rutland, a society woman, who, when Margot saves her life, in gratitude carries her home with her that the girl may have an education. Clara Whipple is the daughter of the young matron: it is her infatuation for Gibson, a married man, that impels her, when thrown over, to kill him. Clifford Gray is young Rutland, against the wishes of his mother in love with Marget. Roy Applegate is Gibson. The work of these players goes far to vitalize the story.

"The Palace of Dust"

First of a New Series of Adventures, Featuring J. Warren Kerrigan as an Intrepid Soldier of Fortune.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is always a wide public for the romantic type of story in which the hero is a gentleman of parts, ready to serve any form of human need. Louis Joseph Vance has created such a character in the role of Terence O'Rourke, already featured in one series by the Universal Company, with J. Warren Kerrigan in the leads.

Mr. Kerrigan is particularly fitted for the part of a soldier of fortune, both in appearance and style of acting. He has the requisite dash for such a character, and when the redoubtable Terence declares "My sword may be for hire, but I have yet to draw it in an evil cause," the words carry conviction.

The new series, like the former one, is to picture certain detached episodes in the life of Terence, each complete in itself. There will be three altogether of two reels each. The first number, under the above title, has its scene laid in Egypt, where Terence is approached by the friends of Princess Constantine, in an effort to get him to lead the Egyptian army against the English. He refuses to do this, and it is decreed that for this refusal his life must be forfeited. Princess Constantine is a party to the original agreement, but when the time comes for Terence to die, her love for him leads her to shield him from death. His escape, with the would-be murderers at his heels, is a dramatic one.

The settings are adequate in this and the atmosphere pleasing. Carmen Phillips and George Periolat also have leading parts.

"The Raven"

Poe's Immortal Poem Finely Filmed in Six Reels by Essanay, with a Remarkable Characterization of the Poet by Henry B. Walthall.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE filming of "The Raven" is a most exacting task for the most talented producer, one that might well cause the fittest to fear and hesitate before undertaking it; but Charles J. Brabin was strengthened in his purpose and work by the knowledge that he had in Henry B. Walthall an ideal personality for the impersonation of America's gifted erratic genius, if not her greatest poet.

Director Brabin wrote the photodramatic adaptation himself, and he has my sincere congratulations for the delicacy and nice discrimination shown in his treatment of the subject. He has not harrowed our feelings by holding up in lurid hues the deplorable moral failing of the great poet and short-story writer; but he has accomplished his aim just as significantly, and infinitely more artistically, by lifting the veil only at times so that we can view the tragic weakness of the author of "The Raven."

One of these occasions is a scene showing Poe, after a night of revelry with some fellow students at the University of Virginia, in his room next morning. He is sitting at a table asleep, with his face buried in his hands. He has a dream in which he sees the figure of himself, playing cards with his friends, in the act of cheating. Immediately he challenges his dream self to a duel and, in the vision, kills him. Then one is nervously affected by the sleeping man's fearful tremors as he slowly awakes, with a look of horror on his face. In his trembling hand he unconsciously grasps tightly a glass half full of ale. He stares fearfully at the empty chairs around the table, and staggers to his feet. His clenched hand shakes so vibrantly that the ale in the glass splashes over, and the cold sensation causes him to look at the glass. The sight brings memory back, and we shudder at the smile on his face as he clutches the glass with both hands, raises it to his lips with palzied effort, and drains it to the last drop.

Surely this is sufficient indication of Poe's besetting sin, and Mr. Walthall's realistic acting—realistic to the point of dread in the spectator's mind—makes one remember it all through the six reels, and for a long time afterward.

I must compliment Mr. Brabin on another nice point in his adaptation of the Hazelton book and play. It will be a gentle reminder to the good people, who refused the immortal Poe a niche in the Hall of Fame, that with his great fault he was a man in whose heart the good strove against the evil, and sometimes prevailed!

This scene occurs in the fifth thousand feet—I do not say reel, for the filmed story is not divided into parts, but is given continuously, thus preventing gaps that would distract the attention—where Poe in fancy sees the spirit of the lost Leonore beckoning him up to the height on which she stands. He is seen climbing one almost insurmountable peak, on which there suddenly flashes, in letters of fire, the word, "Wine." Poe is at the door of his room, in answer to the "tapping," and, in the words of the poem:

——long I stood there, wondering, fearing,

He stops peering into the darkness, closes the door, and rushes wild-eyed to a chair, into which he sinks distraught. Then he fills a glass to the brim and is about to drink when a death's head appears behind it, and he crashes it to the floor.

I could fill many times the space at my disposal in writing about this story and its talented production, so I shall dismiss further reference to the narrative by stating that it opens with a prologue in which the ancestors of Poe are seen landing in Virginia, in 1745. As the reader will recall, Poe was a descendant of the famous De la Poer family, of Ireland. We are introduced to David Poe, a revoluntionary patriot and grandfather of the poet; also to his father, David Poe, Jr., and his mother, who were actors, and next to the poet himself. Here a photograph of Poe is flashed on the screen and, as it fades out, that of Mr. Walthall takes it place. The spectator will be impressed by the singular likeness of the pictures. Poe's nose is more aquiline than that of Walthall; but the eyes, the forehead and the hair are counterparts.

The death of Poe's mother, his adoption by John Allan and his wife, his student life and the debts contracted, his lovemaking to sweet Virginia Clemm, his expulsion from his foster father's home, accompanied by Virginia and a devoted negro servant, the life of Virginia and himself in the Fordham cottage, near New York City, and her untimely death, take up about 4,000 feet of film. The remaining 2,000 feet are devoted to "The Raven," in which Mr. Walthall gives us the impersonation of Poe that always will be considered a classic—in my opinion. In these two reels he sounds the depths of terrible mental anguish, of despair, of disordered fancy, and of all the ills that a brilliant mind distraught is heir to. As we look, we pity, we sympathize, and at times are strangely moved.

Scene from "The Raven" (Essanay).

The realism of the scenes which occur in his lonely home, in the Fordham cottage, cast a spell on the spectator. Not least is the uncanniness created by the use of a real, live raven, which takes its part in the action, all through the poem. It flies in through the window, when he opens it, and perches on the bust of Pallas, just as naturally as one had outlined in imagination.

And it stays there until the end, in true conformance with the lines:

And the Raven, never flitting, still is sitting,
On the pallid bust of Pallas, just above my chamber door;
And his eyes have all the seeming of a demon's that is dreaming,
And the lamplight o'er him streaming throws his shadow on the floor.

The death scene will be remembered long by all who see it, as his soul is lifted "from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor."

Mr. Walthall totters to the chair in his lonely room, now and then casting a sorrowful look at the raven, always perched on the bust, peering and croaking. His face gradually assumes a look of peace and his head lies far backward. Behind his chair the figure of Death appears. At the right an angel comes into vision. He touches the reclining body with his sword and, by the magic of double exposure, we see the spirit depart from it. The spirit casts a lingering look at its late habitation, then passes out with the angel. Our eyes, still fixed on Poe's dead body, see it relaxing and finally roll to the floor, where the shadow of the Raven falls upon it.

The acting of the people in the cast throughout is worthy of unstinted praise. Miss Warda Howard appears as Virginia Clemm, Helen Whitman, the Lost Leonore and a Spirit. In the first-mentioned character she is given a good opportunity and takes full advantage of it. In the fine character part afforded by John Allan, Ernest Maupain, as is his wont, is thoroughly at home, and Harry Dunkinson is equally happy in the part of "Tony," Poe's chum while in Virginia. A commendable characteristic of the acting is that every small character part is well sustained. Among these may be mentioned old Billy Robinson as Joseph Reed, Burt Weston as the negro, purchased by Poe with an I. O. U., and Grant Foreman as John Allan's secretary. It must not be overlooked that Misses Eleanor Thompson and Marion Skinner give becoming characterizations of Mrs. John Allan and Mrs. Clemm.

"The Heights of Hazards"

A Vitagraph Blue Ribbon in Which Charles Richman Is Featured.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE theme of this feature is not strikingly new. It is a clever variation of the winning of a woman by masculine mastery. Charles Richman is in his element as the masterful man. He is in turn bold and chivalrous, domineering and tender, daring and timid. He commands and entreats, but whether commanding or entreating he makes it plain to the object of his devotion that love for her is the motive and mainspring of all his actions. His acting throughout is of the highest quality. Equal praise is due to Eleanor Woodruff. To make an old theme like this acceptable to audiences nothing less was required than such a perfect couple, giving their best artistic skill.

Scene from "The Heights of Hazards" (Vitagraph)

It will readily be seen that a story like this required little more than one reel. Indeed the real story does not take much more than one reel, the rest is filled up with episodes, which are quite diverting and are all in good Vitagraph style, but not one of the episodes has any but the most remote bearing on or connection with the main theme. The audience is kept guessing and wondering too long before the story proper begins to unfold itself. There are prolonged social festivities which retard rather than advance the development of the plot. It is needless to lay stress on the photographic excellence, on the choice of the settings, on the thrilling and impressive realism and on the superb acting of every man and woman in the cast. The Vitagraph trade mark guarantees all that.

"The Winged Idol"

Five-Reel Triangle-Kay-Bee Featuring Katharine Kaelred With House Peters.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS no easy matter to find a suitable medium for stars who have lost youth in gaining reputation on the stage, though voices help there, whereas the screen is merciless, but "The Winged Idol" does very well. It affords Katharine Kaelred all the opportunity her heart could desire, but it unconsciously sends the gentleman she is with, the versatile House Peters, very much to the front. His, the characterization of deep significance, on which all interest centers, and his performance contributes materially to the enforcement of a fine theme, the idea that a man can only release the finest capabilities of his soul when untrammelled by the emotional, even including sex impulses. He must dominate all feeling, keeping it well in hand, if he would give the best that is in him adequate expression.

A great deal of this splendid purpose is submerged to give the star's role prominence by stretching the time accorded to the scenes in which she appeared. The psychology of the part given Peters, that of a man in desperate self-struggle, now failing miserably, now mastering his weaknesses contains what grips and holds attention. The subtitles are also a strong contributing factor in "The Winged Idol," lending it dignity and dramatic value. The story holds well, but there is a lack of finish at the abrupt conclusion that is possibly the fault of bad editing. That the man who has been struggling upward achieves nothing to win sympathy is an artistic error and affords the audience no satisfaction.

"Florence Nightingale"

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

PRODUCED in England with Elisabeth Risdon, a capable actress, portraying Florence Nightingale from childhood to death, this four-part picture is of particular interest in that it shows the inspiration and early days of the Red Cross Society—the society which is working so heroically to alleviate the suffering in Europe today. The photoplay serves a double purpose, it entertains and it must give to many a more personal interest in the life of a self-sacrificing, noble woman, the one English woman to be awarded the Order of Merit by the King.

It may be superfluous to note that the picture is biographical, rather than dramatic. It opens with the birth of Florence Nightingale in Florence in 1820, gives a few scenes of early childhood and shows by means of several spontaneously charitable acts the development of a strong, unselfish nature that almost from the first finds its natural expression in helping others. The audience sees how the beautiful young woman—a social favorite—overcomes all opposition to her becoming a nurse, an unheard of thing for a lady in those days, and even convinces the secretary of state that she is needed at the front in the Crimean war.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE
FOUNDER OF THE RED CROSS

Scene from "Florence Nightingale" (Ideal).

The most effective contrasts in the picture show conditions in the Scutari hospital before Florence Nightingale took charge and after she had inaugurated a regime of system and cleanliness. Obvious care has been exercised in making the production historically accurate. Sub-titles are sufficiently explicit and Miss Risdon displays a knowledge of the art of make-up in changing from a radiant girl to a venerable woman. Some of the settings will appear rather artificial to audiences accustomed to American methods of production; but technical shortcomings are overbalanced by the educational value of the subject.

"The Forbidden Adventure"

HIDDEN away in one of the Arabian deserts are communities so intent on preserving their integrity that outsiders are forbidden to intrude, and one of these excites the adventurous spirit of a young American, Cicil Weatherby, roaming at large with a boon companion and an extensive suite of native servants and guards. Cecil visits the forbidden city alone and out of sheer perversity, no other reason being shown, though he might have in mind the fact there is at least one pretty girl in every self-respecting town on earth. She is there, cooped up in Oriental fashion, nothing to vary the monotony of existence except an occasional dance with others of her order—she is a priestess—in the temple, for she can not speak to a man under penalty of the "Living Death."

She takes a chance when the young American invades the city and both are condemned to die the living death. They are conducted with due formality across a rope bridge to the edge of an inactive crater, tied back to back, let down into the pit and the rope thrown after them. Now begins a real struggle that must have caused fascinating Louise Glaum to long for minor roles. The young American refuses to die. Inch by inch he cuts his way up the precipitous sides of the crater, hauling the girl after him. At the edge of liberty there is a villain waiting to cast him back, but he and the lovely creature he has rescued from eternal boredom kill the villain, reach the desert just as his boon companion and the servants happen to pass that way, and all ends well.

"Keep Moving"

A Five-Part Comedy Produced by George Kleine Featuring Bickel and Watson.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE is very little to review. The production is very fitly characterized on the program, which tells us that "it is adapted from nothing, founded on fancy, produced with one ambition only—to make you smile."

If the response of Sunday night's specially invited audience in the Candler theater is any criterion the ambition announced by the producer has attained its object. Harry Watson is very funny as a tramp and he is responsible for a good many of the laughs. Bickel has many funny scenes likewise. Some of the things, notably the happenings in the cheap lodging house, will always be sure of a laugh. The "humor" of the production is frankly on the slap-stick order and folly is enthroned. The team work of Watson and Bickel is excellent, the dream of Watson is an honest provocation to laughter.

Scene from "Keep Moving" (Kleine).

A five reel slap-stick comedy presents, of course, considerable daring on the part of the director and producer. Not all the parts are of equal merit. To concentrate the fun a little cutting here and there might not be amiss.

"The Danger Signal"

A George Kleine Production in Which Arthur Hoops Represents Two Different Characters.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS production consisting of five reels is a film adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story entitled "Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way." The story is by Rupert Hughes. The theme of the story consists of "The Life, the Fortunes and Adventures of Danny Canavan" woven into light dramatic form. Danny Canavan is a wretched poltroon when the story opens. Though of the best Irish stock and the son of a sturdy blacksmith Danny is afraid of everybody and of everything. His own father, Dennis Canavan, also portrayed by Mr. Hoops, is heartily ashamed of him. Poor Danny is even afraid of his wife. Kicks and cuffs are his daily portion. There seems no hope for Danny until a political boss, answering his wife's request, gives him a job on the subway. Danny is intrusted with a red flag to warn the traffic and the passengers against imminent blasts. The possession and the use of this flag works a profound and marvelous change in Danny's character. He knows that all must respect his flag and presently the authority of the flag is embodied in its wielder. The consciousness of power grows in Danny. His political boss takes an interest in him. Step by step he advances in social and in political life until all his ambitions are gratified. Canavan's luck is the strongest dramatc element in the play. Much of the merit in the play is due to the acting of Hoops and in an even greater degree to the splendid work of Ruby Hoffman.

Scene from "The Danger Signal" (Kleine-Edison).

There are fine spectacular features, there is an English Derby, a polo match, a political riot, there are most realistic and finely chosen scenes along the subway. The details in the blacksmith's shop were particularly fine.

The opening and the closing were the strongest parts of the feature. "The Man Who Had His Way" is there at the rising of the curtain holding a flag of genuine red in his hand. He is quickly followed by Hoops in his other part Dennis Canavan, the father. The opening scenes and indeed the whole first reel promised well. The finish was strong as logical climaxes always are.

There is no doubt that a little cutting will improve the film. There are digressions and prolongations which have a tendency to weaken rather than to strengthen the dramatic character of the play. There is an underlying current of humor throughout the play cleverly sustained through almost every situation.

"The Mummy and the Humming Bird"

Charles Cherry and Lillian Tucker Have the Leads in a Finely Acted Famous Players Subject.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

GOOD drama and strong is "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," the five-part subject released by the Famous Players, November 11. The picture marks the screen debut of Charles Cherry. Beyond question Mr. Cherry's welcome will be hearty. His performance is marked by a spontaneity, a wholesomeness, and above all by a naturalness that will insure it. His is a "speaking" portrayal, the winning quality that is the product of a blending of personality and art.

Lillian Tucker has the role of the wife who accepts attention from Signor D'Orelli when she feels her husband is neglecting her for his inventions. Miss Tucker makes a splendid coworker for Mr. Cherry. She, too, creates a character that portrays a woman of rare dignity, of impressive appearance, a high mark indeed for the aim of a man like D'Orelli.

Arthur Hoops is D'Orelli, who in Italy breaks up the home of a peasant and later in England continues the practice of the gentle arts of the humming bird. Mr. Hoops gives to his interpretation an admirable and a self-sacrificing touch of the unspeakable and the repugnant. William Sorelle is Giuseppi, the man who follows D'Orelli to England in pursuit of the vendetta he has declared. Mr. Sorelle completes the fine quartet of principals.

James Durkin is the director. He has done good work. The picture is staged in a manner commensurate with the acting and the story. There are dramatic situations and they are treated with skill. One of the strongest of these is the visit of Lady Lumley to the home of D'Orelli and the call of her husband following the revelations of the watchful Giuseppi. There are big moments before the Lumleys are out of the house and Giuseppi has immediately afterward executed his vengeance.

There is a happy denouement—one, by the way, in this instance characteristic of the stage play. So far as the action shows Lumley was the last person seen by the butler with D'Orelli before the Italian was found dead on the floor. The butler, too, knew of the presence in the house of a woman he had a right to assume was Lady Lumley. Yet nothing happens after the murder to disturb the happiness of the Lumleys. For the disregard of the probabilities we may blame the license that is given to the stage and which we are more and more inclined to deny to the screen.

Scene from "The Mummy and the Humming Bird" (Famous Players).

"Bella Donna"

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

STRONGLY dramatic is "Bella Donna," the five-part Famous Players production released November 15. The name role is carried by Pauline Frederick, and carried in a manner worthy of the best traditions. She is given skilled support, as witness: Thomas Holding, Julian L'Estrange, Eugene Ormonde, George Majeroni, Edmund Shalet.

Scene from "Bella Donna" (Famous Players).

There was pronounced applause from a great house at the Strand Monday afternoon at the conclusion of "Bella Donna"—by no means an every-day occurrence. Three thousand persons by their deep silence had attested the dramatic quality of the Hichens-Fagan story. There is in "Bella Donna" little pathos; there is no comedy. It is a straight tale of a woman who sees only herself, who has eyes for no one who stands in the way of her ambition, who hesitates not to sacrifice her best friend, her husband, when she thinks her fortunes will be furthered by attaching herself to the Egyptian Baroudi.

It is a stern role that falls to Miss Frederick in this subject and a difficult one. To portray a woman lacking apparently a redeeming trait, a cold-blooded courtesan, and yet retain in a measureable degree the sympathy of her house, is a real achievement.

Mr. Holding as Nigel Armine, the Englishman, who marries Bella Donna in spite of the warnings of his friend Dr. Isaacson, with the doctor divides the sympathies. Mr. Ormonde has the role of the authority on poisons, the friend who brings back to health the husband who is dying by inches of the poison administered by his wife. The friendship of the two men is one of the bright sides of the story. Mr. L'Estrange is Baroudi, the Egyptian, one of whose chief fascinations for women is said to be his direct, brusque, even brutal manner of manifesting his attentions. Baroudi and Bella Donna have the same code of morals, using the expression advisedly and for want of a more apt term.

The interest is steady and cumulative, from the opening where Bella Donna meets Armine at the hotel at Nice to the end in the desert, where the raging, disappointed woman throws herself into the sand to die. The picture is staged in the manner of Messrs. Porter and Ford. The exteriors are of the far south, with a hotel surrounded with tropical luxuriance; with a great houseboat; a river running between banks of sand, the lone palms standing like sentinels; and the desert. One of the most striking scenes of the latter is at night, Armine by his campfire, a number of Egyptians at another a dozen paces away, and the black night in the background.

Of tense situations, especially in the last third of the story, there are many. "Bella Donna" is a subject of unusual power.

Thrills in Centaur Features

Bostock Animals Take Part in Unusual Scenes Before Camera in the Stanley Series.

AN INSTANCE of the thrills provided in the Centaur Features, which are animal subjects in an advanced form, is shown from the following reproduction of a scene from "Stanley Among the Voo Doo Worshippers," the sixth episode of the "Stanley in Africa" series, which is founded on the Stanley expedition sent into Africa by the New York Herald to recover Livingston, the lost missionary, and which is to be released December 2 on the Mutual program.

The story, in brief, concerns the efforts of the Stanley party to rescue Ada, the sweetheart of Wilson, the reporter, who is a member of the expedition, from the Slave Traders into whose hands she has fallen. A guide attempts to effect Ada's escape, but is caught by the King of the Traders, who condemns him to die. A particularly savage elephant is brought forward and, encircling the man's body with his trunk, throws him into a tree. Stunned and weakened the man falls to the ground and as he lies prostrate the elephant walks over his form as if to crush him.

Scene from "Stanley Among the Voo Doo Worshippers" (Centaur).

Later in the story Jack causes Ada's release. With Ada and her companions he makes into the jungle, which offers a degree of safety against discovery. Jack goes in search of food and during his absence a lion appears over a rocky ledge immediately in back of Ada. Before she has a chance to heed the warning cry of her companions the lion springs upon her, bearing her heavily to the ground.

While the scenes are staged, the effect is made realistic through the excellent training of the Bostock animals, which assist in playing these scenes under the direction of Captain Jack Bonavita.

Mark Twain on Screen for First Time

Marguerite Clark Starred by Famous Players in Humorist's Beloved "Prince and Pauper."

FOR the first time in its history the motion picture screen is to reflect the humor and pathos of the incomparable Mark Twain, when the Famous Players Film Company stars Marguerite Clark in its superb adaptation of "The Prince and the Pauper," through the Paramount Pcitures Corporation, on November 29th.

Though "The Prince and the Pauper" has frequently been seen on the stage and in this form of public presentation has been extremely successful, the limitations of the theater made it always necessary to so construct the story that only each of the characters—either the prince or the pauper—should appear on the scene at one time, as both roles were invariably played by the same person, due to the necessity for the resemblance between the two characters, so vital to the story.

Scene from "The Prince and the Pauper" (Famous Players).

In the film version this difficulty is entirely obviated by the use of the double exposure, Miss Clark appearing on the screen in both characters simultaneously. Realizing that the double exposure, merely for its own sake, has long since ceased to interest the public, Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, who collaborated in the screen production, have introduced the trick camera work only where Mark Twain's story makes it absolutely essential. In these instances, however, it has been used with rare effect and has given Miss Clark one of the best opportunities she has ever had of displaying her remarkable versatility under the most exacting conditions.

The production is conceived and executed in the same spirit that so distinguished Mark Twain's tale, the delicious descriptive qualities of which have been adhered to as accurately as human ingenuity renders possible. It is sumptuously exquisite and yet rarely simple, playing over the lights and shades with the master's touch.

Col. Draper, Famous Type, Is Dead.

Old Colonel Draper has heard for the last time the studio call of "Lights!" The most famous "Type" actor of the pictures, after a brief illness, departed to the great beyond on November 8, and his many friends of the screen were shocked by the news.

Colonel T. Waln-Morgan Draper was an American by birth, but received his education abroad, being a graduate of the Royal Polytechnicum in Munich, Bavaria, and the Royal School of Mines, Frieberg, Saxony, from where he graduated in 1875. He fought in the Franco-Prussian War as a volunteer, and returned here in 1876. He was in charge of the Mineralogical Collection at the Centennial Exposition and then went to Colorado and the Western States, where he made exhaustive studies of the Toqui and Zuni Indians, in addition to taking charge of a number of mines and engineering tasks. In 1882 he returned here and practiced his profession; but a few years ago he happened to be visiting the Thanhouser studio and while there was invited to appear behind a desk in a scene. Other producers seeing the picture, inquired as to the identity of the distinguished-looking six-footer, with the result that within a short while the Colonel found a great demand for his services in pictures. At first it was merely a lark, but when he saw that he was able to draw very satisfactory compensation, he took up the work in earnest. In the past two years every fan in the United States has come to know the Colonel, but it has been mostly in Thanhouser pictures that his services were utilized; in fact his last picture was at the New Rochelle studios under Director George Foster Platt, in which he played with Gladys Hulette, Arthur Bauer, Bert Delaney and Morgan Jones.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"A ROMANCE OF THE ALPS" (Reliance).

"A Romance of the Alps," Reliance feature, is a charming blend of love and adventure, with some exquisite mountain scenery as a background.

As befits such a photoplay, the cast is a strong one. Marguerite Marsh and William Hinckley head it, while the principal roles other than the two "leads" are taken by Carl Formes, Jr., Charles Gill, Alfred Paget and Kate Toncray.

The romance lies between Wally (Marguerite Marsh), a young girl of the Tyrol and Andreas, a chamois hunter. The young people are bound together by more than ties of love. A strong psychic unity enables one to know when harm threatens the other. Each is able to call the other at will, though they may be miles apart.

Though Wally is betrothed to Andreas, she is annoyed by Captain Vollenberg, who forces his attentions upon her and follows her to the shrine in the mountains at a great height, where she usually meets Andreas. When Captain Vollenberg tries to take the girl into his arms she summons Andreas by means of her psychic force. He arrives. In a struggle between the Captain and the chamois hunter, the former falls over the ledge and hangs in mid-air, clinging to scanty vegetation which threatens to give way at any moment. Andreas rescues him at Wally's urging.

Shortly afterwards Andreas is drawn for military service. He deserts when Wally, from her old trysting place summons him.

He is about to be shot for his military offense when Wally goes to General Count Vollenberg, father of the captain. On the Captain's appearance in his father's quarters, she makes him tell of his rescue by Andreas at the risk of life. For this service to his family the General pardons Andreas.

V-L-S-E BRANCH HAS REMARKABLE COLLECTION RECORD.

What is probably one of the most efficient reports ever made by a branch office to the home organization, has just been submitted to the Big Four by C. W. Sawin, manager of the Minneapolis branch office of that organization. This report shows that that office has not a single dollar outstanding, and that it has not charged off a single account as uncollectable.

Mr. Sawin has been able to make such a showing by reason of his frank, open avowal as to why he will not extend credit. He takes the position that the exhibitor who is lax in his payments, injures all his fellow exhibitors, because he increases the exchange's cost of doing business, and thereby forces the exchange to increase their prices to prompt-paying exhibitors.

ROSENTHAL WITH ALL FEATURE.

After seven years of activity in the motion picture affairs of Chicago, Al Rosenthal has yielded to the call of Broadway and joined the forces of the All Feature Booking Agency at 71 West 23rd street.

Starting with the Virginia Amusement Company of Chicago in 1908, Mr. Rosenthal was connected with the successful establishment of the Jefferson, Arch and Virginia theaters, later managing the Apollo theater for the Louise Amusement Company. When Warner's Features came into being, he joined forces with the Chicago branch of that organization, being one of the first feature road men to cover the territory of the Middle West. From the Warner Exchange Al Rosenthal moved to the World Film, later becoming identified with Metro. He is now receiving a royal welcome from his many friends in New York and meeting for the first time scores of business associates with whom he has had a phone, wire and mail acquaintance for many years.

"RIGHT OFF THE BAT" INTRODUCED BY PERCENTAGE BOOKINGS.

The practice of introducing a feature picture by booking theaters on a percentage basis throughout the territory controlled seems to be rapidly gaining in favor. Several productions recently launched by independent manufacturers have been handled in this manner with marked success, and have created a demand for themselves by proving their box office value beyond question to the theater managers in the sections of the country played. Mike Donlin in "Right Off the Bat," which is now being sold to the state rights' buyers by the All Feature Booking Agency, was launched in New York and New England by only booking certain theaters and playing them on a percentage basis.

The All Feature Booking Agency is preparing to launch five new features in the same way. Pawnee Bill in "The White Chief," Pawnee Bill in "The Frontier Detective," Pawnee Bill in "The Buffalo Hunters," May Lillie in "Queen of the Buffalo Ranch," and "The Fire King." Each of these productions is in five reels and will eventually be sold to state rights' buyers and booked to theaters on a straight rental basis.

"THE LOSING GAME" (Essanay).

This is a strong photoplay, full of action and thrills. Darwin Karr takes the leading part and portrays the character he represents with a skill that clearly brings out all the fine shades of emotion. He is the favored son of a rich father, but his rascally brother prejudices the father against him by stealing from him and placing the blame at his brother's door. The supposed thief is cut off in his father's will, but he does not betray his brother because of his mother's love for him. He fights manfully but rather unsuccessfully to make his own way in the world as the stigma of thief creeps up constantly to balk his efforts. Years later the father discovers who the real thief is and cuts off the rascally brother in his will. When the father dies the son creeps into the house with the intention of destroying the will. The two brothers meet and there is a battle for the will that makes an intense scene. The hero triumphs, however, and not only secures the estate, but wins the hand of the girl he has loved since his early boyhood.

Scene from "The Losing Game" (Essanay).

EDITH STOREY IN "A PRICE FOR FOLLY."

In "A Price for Folly," a powerful five-part dramatic screen story, announced as the first Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature release for December, Edith Storey plays the part of a ballet dancer. As is usual when this Vitagraph star is to appear in an unusual and novel dress, she designs the costume to the worn, and in this instance exercised more than usual care in drawing designs for the creation of the ballet costume and in selecting material for the making. It not infrequently happens that Miss Storey turns her home into a dressmaking establishment, and not only supervises every detail but does the actual work. The ballet costume in which she is seen in "A Price for Folly" is a creation from a composite design elaborated from more than a hundred costumes collected and tabulated by her from those worn by celebrated ballet dancers of the principal musical centers of the world.

Scene from "A Price for Folly" (Vitagraph).

In "A Price for Folly" Miss Storey, Antonio Moreno and Harry Morey play the leading roles in a list of characters enacted by such prominent players as Louise Beaudet, Charles Kent, Ethel Corcoran and Arthur Cozine. The scenes of the story are laid in France and admit of exterior and interior backgrounds that are exceptional in beauty and artistic completeness.

"THE ALTERNATIVE" (Clipper.)

The "business-man" husband and the society wife are offered in a remarkable story, "The Alternative," an American-Clipper feature released Nov. 20. Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude assume the leads and present virile interpretations. Miss Crawley as the wife who spends all the income her husband is enabled to rake together, gives a deft dramatic performance, and in the moment she realizes her husband has given his all to her and is on the verge of ruin, the real womanhood in her asserts itself and the superficial society cloak is cast aside.

Scene from "The Alternative" (American-Clipper).

The husband, Mr. Maude, for the first time realizes it was not his lavish display of wealth that made him dear to his wife, but that she loved him for the manhood which was his. Both Miss Crawley and Mr. Maude develop to the fullest the tense situations carrying the drama of the story.

"The Alternative" is in three reels.

"ROSEMARY" (Metro).

"Rosemary, That's For Remembrance" has as its co-stars Marguerite Snow and Paul Gilmore, and was made in California at the studios of the Quality Pictures Corporation, and will be released on the Metro Program about the first of the year. The cast includes Virginia Kraft, William Clifford, George F. Hernandez, Frank Bacon and Maurice Cytron, and William Bowman directed the taking of the picture.

Scene from "Rosemary" (Metro).

"THE REFORM CANDIDATE" (Pallas).

Closely following its initial release on the Paramount Program, "The Gentleman From Indiana," by Booth Tarkington, starring Dustin Farnum, Pallas Pictures announces as its second release, "The Reform Candidate," written by Maclyn Arbuckle and Edgar A. Guest, and starring the former.

"The Reform Candidate" is a screen version of Mr. Arbuckle's former stage success of the same name and presents a sparkling comedy of human interest such as the popular Maclyn has made famous on both the stage and screen. Outside of its humorous theme, the play carries a dramatic touch that makes it of more than ordinary interest and tells a story of home and politics.

Supporting the star in this play are such popular film and stage players as Myrtle Stedman, Forrest Stanley, Charles Ruggles, Howard Davies and others of equal ability. Under the direction of Frank Lloyd, the play has been given effective backgrounds and judging from this producer's work in "The Gentleman From Indiana," a realistically staged film may be expected. The camera work has been entrusted to the expert care of Fred Dobson, who has taken over 50,000 feet of film up to date for Pallas Pictures without a single re-take. Mr. Arbuckle's characterization in "It's No Laughing Matter" has made many new friends for him among the motion picture public and even greater success is predicted for him in "The Reform Candidate" than was accorded him in his last film subject. December 16th is the date set for the release of his new photoplay on the Paramount Program.

Scene from "The Reform Candidate" (Pallas).

"MARY'S LAMB" WITH RICHARD CARLE.

Pathe will release on Nov. 26 Richard Carle's well known play "Mary's Lamb," which Donald Mackenzie has produced for the Gold Rooster program with Mr. Carle himself in the lead. That Mr. Mackenzie can make first class comedies is attested by the success of "The Galloper." In "Mary's Lamb" he has turned out a picture which is full of laughs and furnishes amusement out of the ordinary. Jessie Ralph, a comedienne of the first rank, does some excellent work in the picture, and with Mr. Carle dominates the entire play.

Scene from "Mary's Lamb" (Pathe).

"Mary's Lamb" is sure to meet with a hearty reception from all lovers of pure comedy. It is pleasingly free from slapstick and the sub-titles, which are well chosen, help to bring out the comedy.

VICTOR MOORE IN "CHIMMIE FADDEN OUT WEST."

Victor Moore's third Paramount photoplay, produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and his second appearance as the Bowery boy, "Chimmie Fadden," will be shown Nov. 22, when Mr. Moore will be seen in "Chimmie Fadden Out West." Pursuant to announcement made some months ago, Mr. Moore will do series of Chimmie Fadden photoplays following his enormous success in his first experience in the role.

Cecil B. DeMille and Jennie MacPherson wrote the comedy and Mr. DeMille personally directed it. The Lasky Company was fortunate in being able to retain for the principal roles all the players who took part in the original "Chimmie Fadden," which was released on the Paramount program last July. In the cast are Miss Camille Astor, Mrs. Lewis McCord, as Chimmie's mother; Raymond Hatton, as the brother; Ernest Joy, Tom Forman, Harry Hadfield and Miss Florence Dagmar.

Scene from "Chimmie Fadden Out West" (Lasky Paramount)

For this comedy they have taken Chimmie Fadden far from his old haunts on the Bowery and placed him in a western environment. Chimmie leaves New York for the gold mining district of Nevada for the purpose of making an announcement that he has found gold and starting an advertising propaganda for the railroad which runs through the territory. All this he manages to do, but not without difficulty. It happens, however, that his employers, seeing the opportunity to capitalize on Chimmie's publicity, issue stock for the fictitious mine. Chimmie turns on them in time to save hundreds of persons from financial ruin.

"Chimmie Fadden Out West" is Victor Moore at his best.

V-L-S-E ADOPTS UNIT SYSTEM FOR PAPER.

The latest innovation in the general movement for better posters is the division of twenty-four sheets into units, so that any part or the whole of the sheet may be used by the exhibitor as he chooses.

This new idea was conceived by Albert E. Smith, treasurer and general manager of the Vitagraph Company, for the Blue Ribbon Features released through the V-L-S-E.

Commencing with "The Cave Man," which is scheduled for release on the 29th of the month, this company will put out a twenty-four sheet made up of three separate eight-sheets, and lithographed in such a way that the exhibitor can utilize any one of the three by simply pasting a strip across the top or the bottom. For instance, on "A Price for Folly," which will be released on December 13th, the twenty-four sheet is arranged in such a way that there are two three's and six-sheet available for separate use. This gives the exhibitor three three's, two six's, a one, half and twenty-four sheet on the same release.

"THE WARNING" (Equitable).

For the production of "The Warning" in which Triumph Film Corporation will offer Henry Kolker on the Equitable program, Director Edmund Lawrence and a company of sixteen players journeyed to The Mammoth Caves of Kentucky and while there staged a number of scenes representing the experience of the victim in Hades.

Stalactites, stalagmites, grotesque land gyrations and the myriad queer freaks of underground tunnel and grottoes, all lend their enchanting atmospherical detail to a series of weird and startling climaxes and dramatic situations which more than accomplish the unusual.

Scene from "The Warning" (Equitable).

"The Warning," delivering a powerful moral, yet none of the preachy type, represents the best work of the young director, Edmund Lawrence. The story, in itself a powerful affair, from the pen of Julius Steger, who protrayed the principal role on the speaking stage for several years, winds itself about the lives of a man, his wife, a siren and a steadfast boy.

Four hundred grotesquely costumed players were used in a number of the big scenes. Henry Kolker, the star of the piece, creates a vogue in that he insisted on short, terse scenes, and proved by his work that sufficient lucidity and understanding could be conveyed in short scenes to carry out the story without protracting and elongating.

"The Warning" will be released December 6 through the World Film Corporation, on the regular Equitable program. It is in five acts, three hundred and seventeen scenes, and required nine weeks to complete.

SLIDES FIFTY YEARS AGO.

An interesting Exhibition of Lantern Slides used about half a century ago will soon be opened in New York City. One of the foremost pioneers in the business in those days was Emanuel L. S. Hart, whose office was then in a small building on the site of what is now known as the Flatiron building.

Mr. Hart was famous as an inventor and was granted several patents for stereopticons by the U. S. Patent Office. He also gave church and other entertainments illustrated with lantern slides. These are the slides that the Novelty Slides Company have obtained possession of. They consist of lectures, travelogues, astronomical subjects, etc.

The entire collection will be arranged, catalogued and indexed, and put on exhibition at the Novelty Slide Company's offices early in November.

UNIVERSAL PLAYERS AT BEAR LAKE.

The Bear Lake Region, seven thousand feet above sea level, is where William Worthington went with his company of Universal players to produce the exterior scenes in the production of Walter Woods' three-reel story of the northwest, "Bloodhounds of the North." Herbert Rawlinson is featured in the production, with Agnes Vernon playing opposite him.

An interesting feature of the company's stay in the mountains is the narrowness of their escape from being snowed in and forced to remain away from the studio for a week or more after they had finished their production.

"JANE" NEXT OLIVER MOROSCO RELEASE.

As its next release on the Paramount Program, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces a screen adaptation of Charles Frohman's greatest comedy success, "Jane," in which Charlotte Greenwood and Sydney Grant share the stellar honors. Charlotte Greenwood portrays in the film, the ludicrous character of "Jane" orginally created by Miss Johnstone Bennett, the first of the hundreds of "Janes" that played the part in this country for five seasons.

Charlotte Greenwood and her comical little partner, Sydney Grant, have established an enviable reputation among patrons of the big-time vaudeville and musical comedy theaters throughout the country and make their first motion picture appearance in this film.

Replete with comical situations and a mass of laughable complications, "Jane" is most effectively turned into a model film comedy at which advocates of the non-slapstick photoplay may point with pride. In the title part of the maid, Miss Greenwood displays her side-splitting antics with remarkable result and is ably supported by her partner, who presents an excellent foil for her comedy. A splendid supporting cast includes Forrest Stanley, Myrtle Stedman, Howard Davies, Herbert Standing, Syd de Grey and Lydia Yeamans Titus. The play has been staged under the direction of Frank Lloyd, and will be released on the Paramount Program December 6.

Scene from "Jane" (Morosco).

"THE TAINT" (Lubin).

In "The Taint," the Lubin release of December 1, Pearl Gaddis, the little lady of the south who is fast jumping into the first rank of scenario writers, has written a three part subject of considerably more than the ordinary type and style, and Director Sidney Olcott once more accredits himself with glory in its production.

Scene from "The Taint" (Lubin).

Dealing with the tremendously dramatic subject of a girl accused unjustly by an insistent lover of being of colored blood, the writer has handled the theme in a manner inoffensive to any race or color and yet forcefully telling her story in a way which grips the interest through every foot of the film's unwinding.

Valentine Grant, the dainty ingenue and leading lady who has been appearing in this series of three reel subjects produced by Sidney Olcott, is again seen in the leading role and in her support are Roy Sheldon, P. H. O'Malley and James Vincent.

NAVY MEN SEE "THE NATION'S PERIL."

Lieut. Commander Frank Taylor Evans of the Newport, R. I., Naval Training Station, was the guest of Director Terwilliger last week at a private showing of Terwilliger's latest feature, "The Nation's Peril." With him came a number of his fellow-members of the Training School, all of whom made the trip from Newport especially to view the picture, being interested both in the subject matter of the picture, depicting as it does the U. S. Atlantic Fleet in action, the men of the Training School and the War College at Newport, and also the personal appearance of most of the audience which assembled at Mr. Terwilliger's invitation.

The officers were especially impressed with the marvelous record of gunnery of the fleet demonstrated in the sinking of the ship which the Lubin Company bought for the purpose of being sunk by the fire of the battleships, and also by the innovations shown in night photography in the burning of "Lubin Village" after the artillery bombardment.

Commander Evans and his colleagues were enthusiastic in their praise of the bearing and portrayal of the young naval lieutenant as portrayed by Earl Metcalfe, who is featured in the play.

HARMO ORGAN AT BIG HOUSE.

The use of pipe organs for "playing the pictures" is growing in popularity with up-to-date exhibitors and theatrical managers. This is evidenced by the increased demand for instruments of that nature and for that purpose, not only in the city proper, but also in the adjoining territory and throughout the country. These facts are highly appreciated by the many patrons of the photoplay houses, and deservedly so, for a good pipe organ played by an intelligent musician, lends itself admirably to the depiction of the silent drama. The management of the Broadway Photoplay Theater at 103rd street and Broadway, this city, has recently installed one of the Harmo pipe organs, much to the pleasure and satisfaction of themselves and their patrons.

Boston Fire Rule Case

New England Universal Exchange Takes Its Test Case to the Superior Court—Was Arraigned by Fire Commission—Fined $50 on Each of Four Counts—Manager Eslow Making Fight for All Exchanges.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN a test case the New England Universal Film Exchange, with offices on Boylston street, Boston, was fined in the Roxbury district court $50 each on four counts of violating the fire prevention rules, as laid down by Fire Prevention Commissioner O'Keefe. The decision was appealed and will be heard in the Superior Court.

The company was charged with having a door "not sufficiently closed," in a room where combustible and inflammable materials were stored; with having combustible materials in a room where films were stored, and on two counts of keeping films exposed without metal containers.

Following the reading of the complaint and the testimony the attorney for the film concern presented to the court a motion that the case be quashed, alleging that the commissioner had no legal right to make rules and regulations regarding the storing, keeping and handling of moving picture films.

When this case is heard in the Superior Court, every film exchange man in the state should assist Mr. J. Arthur Eslow, manager of the Universal, in his efforts to overrule the decision of the lower court. If this decision is upheld it means that stricter rules and regulations will be enacted by the fire prevention commissioner against every film exchange.

Of course there is a great doubt regarding the legality of the right of Commissioner O'Keefe to enforce the regulations of his office. These regulations have never been enacted into the statutes of the city or state, therefore there ought to be a very good chance of reversing the decision on this contention. The commissioner is appointed to office by the governor and legally ought to have no right to enforce regulations of his own making.

Film Men Should Fight This Together.

If the film men do not band together in a fight against such treatment they will only suffer more as the result of these rules.

It has been rumored that a representative of the fire prevention office has been calling on every exchange manager lately and ordering them to use a certain type of can for their film. These cans cost 30 cents each. The cans that they are using at the present time meet every requirement of the law, and it appears as though the film men are in for some persecution at the hands of this office.

"THE MELTING POT" CONTEST.

In an effort to prevent the exhibition of the moving picture "The Melting Pot," at the Royal theater, Worcester, William C. Mellish, as coulsel for E. W. Lynch, of Worcester, appeared in the jury waiver session of the Superior Court and asked for a restraining order. An order of notice was issued by Judge McLaughlin. Mr. Lynch contends that he holds an option for the purchase of the New England rights of the picture and that the showing of it in another house would work an irreparable injury to him. It is believed that the case may be later tried on its merits.

Manager Vine Back from Chicago.

Manager Frank H. Vine of the New England office of the World Film Corporation, is back at his desk after a week's absence, during which time he was attending the World's managers' convention in Chicago. Mr. Vine reports that the Equitable features are proving most popular in this territory. "Trilby," featuring Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, played to capacity during the past week at Loew's St. James theater, Boston.

New England Business Notes.

Manager Harry F. Campbell of the Boston office of the World Film Corporation is elated over the success of the Fox feature, "Carmen," during its recent Boston run. Mr. Campbell reports that "A Fool There Was" is still playing to capacity houses throughout this territory. This film has been exhibited over six hundred times in the city of Boston alone. He claims that this is a record for the exhibition of any one photoplay in the city.

The Eastern Consolidated Amusement company, of Springfield, was incorporated during the past week with a capitalization of $125,000. The incorporators are Harry W. Stacy, Harry C. Shaw, Herbert G. Farquhar and Burdette M. Bancroft.

Manager Samuel Bernfield of the Pathe Exchange reports that the Gold Rooster features are meeting with tremendous success in this territory. The Boston theater (a Keith playhouse) is running one of them three days each week.

New Strand at Steelton, Pa., Opens

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

THE new Strand, located at Front and Pine streets, Steelton, Pa., opened its doors to the public on Monday, Nov. 8, under the management of Harry L. Sellers, who also manages the Standard, in Steelton. This new home of first class moving picture films occupies the first floor of a brand new structure erected for Robert M. Frey, a retired business man of that locality. It is a handsome structure, absolutely fireproof in construction and occupying a plot of gound 45 by 100 feet in dimension.

Mr. Sellers announces that only first-class pictures will be exhibited and that the program will be changed daily. Five hundred and eighty-one seats have been put in, and each chair has been placed so as to afford the most comfort possible and allow an unobstructed view of the screen. The ventilation system is the most modern obtainable, consisting of the admittance of fresh air by means of a suction fan and the expulsion of air that has circulated through the theater by means of an exhaust fan. Two of the latest model Simplex machines have been installed. The house will be thoroughly illuminated with three dome electric lights of 200 candle power each and eight side lights, also electric, of smaller candle power. Gas fixtures have been installed to be used in cases of emergency.

Mr. Sellers' first venture in the show business took place nine years ago, when he, in partnership with Samuel Couffer, Sr., purchased the Standard theater from the Orner Brothers, of Altoona. Later on he purchased the Couffer interests and is now the sole proprietor of the theater, which has been greatly enlarged over its former capacity.

THEATER EMPLOYEES' BALL.

More than 1,500 employees of the various theaters scattered throughout this city attended the theatrical employees' ball, recently held at the Eagles' hall, Broad and Spring Garden streets. The program for the evening was opened with several vaudeville turns which brought forth much applause. Following this came a cabaret which was of a most pleasing nature. Everyone then repaired to the dance floor, where the festivities commenced in earnest.

Music for the occasion was furnished by two orchestras, one of these being a real innovation in this section in that it was composed of four real old darkies, all of whom call Memphis their home. The dancing continued until the wee small hours of the morning and a remarkable fact was that almost everybody present stuck until the finsh. The affair was unanimously voted a huge success, both socially and financially.

VANOSCOPE COMPANY INCORPORATES IN DELAWARE.

The Vanoscope Manufacturing Company was recently incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware for the purpose of engaging in the manufacture and sale of mechanical devices to be used in connection with the moving picture industry. The new company has a capital stock of $3,500,000, William J. Robinson, Robert C. Mayer and Thomas C. Meadows, all of New York City, being the principal incorporators.

METROPOLITAN BOOKING MOVES

The Metropolitan Booking Office has moved from 1316 Vine street to new headquarters in the Kriterion building, 1309 Vine street. Harry Bryan, manager of the local branch, reports business as being of a most satisfactory nature and declares that they were forced to seek larger headquarters in order to acquire better facilities for the further continuance of business.

A SUCCESSFUL SUPPLY MAN.

Lewis M. Swaab, proprietor of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa., represents one of the most successful motion picture men in the east, having been engaged in the business longer than the owner of any other supply house in this section of the country. Mr. Swaab was one of the first to recognize the wide field offered by the moving picture industry and immediately prepared to take advantage of the opening offered by opening an establishment in a private house, at 338 Spruce street, which was subsequently altered into a store front.

L. M. Swaab.

Business increased and it became necessary to seek larger headquarters. A site was selected at 129 North Eighth street, at the time the center of the moving picture industry in this city. As the tide of business began to move in a northwesterly direction toward Thirteenth and Vine and Race streets, Mr. Swaab again searched for other quarters.

The establishment was moved to 1327 Vine street, where it has remained ever since. Business-like methods and honest trading have been good for business until it now represents a most lucrative and praiseworthy establishment. Mr. Swaab has represented the Nicholas Power Company for the past twelve or fourteen years, having started with their No. 1 machine, a model that is by no means familiar to the operator of today, and a model that has never been seen by two-thirds of modern supply houses.

The Swaab Film Service are now jobbers in Power, Simplex and Baird machines, Kleegl spotlights, Caille Brothers ticket choppers and the Minusa Gold Fibre screens. Lenses of every foci are carried in stock, as well as rheostats for any voltage, pianos, organs, Columbia graphophones and thousands of parts for every type of machine used in the moving picture business. Mr. Swaab is now treasurer of the Interstate Film Company, distributors of the Universal program.

In speaking of the success of the Swaab establishment, mention must be made of Mark L. Swaab, son of the proprietor. The younger Mr. Swaab, who was recently married, has been very industrious in his endeavors to insure the success of his father's enterprise and has spent practically all of his time in this field.

Triangle Films at the Belmont.

The Belmont theater, Fifty-second above Market street, West Philadelphia, formerly operated by Mr. Wheeler, recently opened its doors to the public with an exhibition of Triangle pictures. The first week was reported as entirely successful and an effort will be made to keep the citizens of that locality interested in the theater by the extra fine quality of the pictures exhibited.

The Grand Has Grown Grandly.

It is remarkable when one remembers the initial appearance of a moving picture theater in the vicinity of Fifty-second and Market street. The first theater in that neighborhood was known as the Grand and occupied a small store. Mr. Brown, proprietor of the Overbrook theater, now owns the Grand and has converted this house into one of the most beautiful in West Philadelphia. The theater has been greatly enlarged and enjoys the patronage of many people.

Philadelphia Business Notes.

For the second time in less than two months D. W. Griffith's magnificent historical spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be offered at the Trent theater, Trenton, N. J., beginning with the week of November 15.

Mr. Swaab, proprietor of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, announces the sale of several Newman ticket choppers to the Strand theater, Norfolk, Virginia. He reports having experienced a large demand for this machine during the past several weeks and is of the opinion that every exhibition should become acquainted with the benefits to be obtained from the use of this labor saver.

It is reported at the home of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, that they have recently sold much new equipment to Higgins & Son, proprietors of the Majestic theater, Pottsville, Pa., and the New Majestic theater, Shamokin, Pa. It is the intention of Mr. Higgins to make their establishments absolutely modern and first class throughout and to invite the patronage of many folks by the excellent service and quality of all pictures shown.

The Superior Theaters Corporation has recently been incorporated under the laws of Delaware for the purpose of conducting places of amusement. Writing Censor Bill

District of Columbia Local Censorship Bill Being Prepared for Presentation to Congress—Censors May Have Absolute Authority to Ban Films—Local Organizations That Will Push Along the Measure.

IT is pretty generally believed in Washington that a bill providing for the establishment of a motion picture censorship for the District of Columbia is now in the process of preparation and will be presented at an early date in the coming session of Congress. This bill is to be framed so that the board of censors will have absolute authority to bar the exhibition of not only immoral, suggestive and sacrilegious films but those which would be particularly offensive to any race or creed. It is understood that the outlines of the bill have already been prepared by a high official in the Anti-Defamation League of America, a national organization of leading Hebrews. A number of organizations of Washington have already indorsed the plan for a motion picture censorship law for the city, among these being the Young Men's Christian Association, the Washington Truth Society, and the International Reform Bureau of which Dr. Wilbur Crafts is the head. It is believed that many of these have already appointed committees to urge the adoption of this legislation.

LIEUT. JIM P. ANDERSON GOES TO NEW YORK.

It was with no little regret that the members of the motion picture industry in this territory received the announcement that Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, manager of the local office for the Fox Film Corporation, has been assigned to special work in New York under the direction of General Manager W. R. Sheehan. When seen by the correspondent of the Moving Picture World, Lieut. Anderson stated that he was unable at this time to say definitely what his future work will be. Nevertheless, his new duties are in the nature of a promotion. He has gone to New York to consult with the firm.

Succeeding Mr. Anderson is Carl F. Senning, who has been traveling through this section as a representative of the Fox Film Corporation since the opening of the local office with the exception of the short time he spent attached to the Atlanta office. Mr. Senning is a man who is pretty generally well liked by all with whom he has come in contact and he is being congratulated on his promotion.

This story would in no wise be complete without a word or two about Miss Mary Jeffries, who has been given entire charge of the booking and bookkeeping work of the office. This also comes as a promotion, for with the added responsibilities comes added remuneration, it is said. Miss Jeffreis is one of the best known film executives in the city. She is extremely popular and holds the confidence of her employers and all others with whom she comes in contact. During the three years she has been in the film business she has established a record for efficiency that would do credit to the most experienced man. Although very young, she has had thrust upon her a very large amount of responsibility. This has given her a good opportunity to display her capabilities, and all those who knew her are of the opinion that the promotion is one well deserved.

ADVOCATES A LAW AGAINST FALSE ADVERTISING.

In light of some little advertising in the local newspapers which has been more or less open to criticism, the motion picture exhibitors of Washington are greatly interested in the plans of the local commercial organizations to investigate the question of "false" advertising. The Retail Merchants' Association has recently appointed a very active committee, which will endeavor to devise a plan for discouraging the making of misleading or false statements in advertising, and will report to a special meeting of the association to be held the latter part of the month. It is expected to recommend a suitable measure to be introduced in Congress at the coming session to make those who persist in such a practice amenable to law.

Many extravagant statements have appeared in the press, and at times there have been announcements that have been decidedly misleading and subject to comment. A "false" advertising law would apply to the theaters as well as to the stores of Washington and the more conservative of the exhibitors feel that such a law would be very desirable.

"I am for such a law from start to finish," said President Harry M. Crandall of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, "and I am sure it will be generally favored by the members of the craft here. I will certainly do all that I can to aid the different committees in their work looking to secure the passage of the law."

M. J. Sonneborn Has Headquarters Here.

M. J. Sonneborn, of the Kriterion Film Service, of Baltimore, Md., is making his headquarters in this city in the Film Exchange building, on E street, near Ninth street, Northwest. In this building is also located Sidney B. Lust, who some time ago purchased the business in this city of the United Film Service.

Capital City May Have Big New Hall

Immense Building to Seat 15,000 Persons May Be Erected with Stage for All Kinds of Entertainments—Primarily an Auditorium.

ANOTHER proposition is under consideration in Washington which may bring an additional motion picture theater into the local field. For many years past it has been the ambition of the National Capital to have a convention hall of sufficient size to accommodate a large number of people. Plans have been drawn for a building to cost $400,000 which is to be located on M street, between Third and Fourth streets, Northeast, near the Union Station. The property is said to have been purchased at a cost of an additional $150,000. The building will be of brick, with Indiana limestone trimmings, and one-story high with the exception of the front, which will be three stories so as to provide for committee rooms, cloak rooms, lobbies, lavatories and quarters for the officials. The wings will contain sixteen stores. The building is to have a seating capacity of 15,000. The stage will permit the largest known amusements and allow for a large number of dressing rooms on both sides. Primarily a convention hall, this huge building will be suitable for the staging of all sorts of amusements.

IMPORTS OF UNEXPOSED AND OF RAW FILM.

American importations of sensitized but unexposed films for the month of August, representing the latest statistics just issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce, show an increase of almost one and a half million feet over the same month of 1914, when there was brought into the United States 3,141,304 lineal feet to the value of $78,081. According to the figures given the price of raw stock has declined considerably, for the 4,607,220 lineal feet imported in August, 1915, is listed as of a value of $57,885. Our total imports for the year ending with August (eight months) show that in 1914 we purchased from Europe 38,708,695 lineal feet of a value of $735,963, while in 1915 we bought 31,239,446 lineal feet of a value of $409,364.

Less Exposed Film Imported.

In the tabulation furnished by the bureau is evidence that the growth of production and the popularity of American films, as well as the difficulties experienced by the foreign manufacturers in producing by reason of the European war. In August, 1914, we brought from the other side 1,101,488 lineal feet of positive film, valued at $50,549, and negatives to the value of $21,957, while in that month this year the figures are for positive films, 435,884 lineal feet, valued at $11,019, and 79,641 lineal feet of negatives valued at $12,368. In preceding years the figures for the eight months ending with August for positive films were, 1913, 8,809,579 lineal feet, valued at $483,029; 1914, 14,657,952 lineal feet, valued at $716,718, and 1915, 6,020,693 lineal feet, valued at $193,919. The values of the negative films imported during the years named were $350,134, $311,076 and $133,113 respectively.

Exported Raw Film Successes.

Our exportation of raw stock during August, on the other hand, shows a very marked decrease over the same month of 1914. This year we sold to other countries 496,100 lineal feet, of a value of $30,962, while last year there were 2,420,390 lineal feet, valued at $92,444. The figures for the eight months ending with August during preceding years were as follows: 1913, 53,610,277 lineal feet, valued at $1,509,165; 1914, 87,403,734 lineal feet, valued at $2,532,987, and 1915, 105,565,571 lineal feet, valued at $2,517,850.

Big Jump in Exposed Film Exports.

Our exports of exposed film for the eight months ending with August, 1915, almost exceeded in quantity the entire export in value of the same commodity during the preceding two years, the figures being as follows: 1913, 21,034,877 lineal feet, valued at $1,486,369; 1914, 20,307,482 lineal feet, valued at $1,490,884, and 1915, 43,976,253, valued at $2,378.368. The figures for the month of August were: 1914, 1,872,180 lineal feet, valued at $137,297, and 1915, 4,616,358 lineal feet, valued at $322,723.

Abe Dresner Stops Over.

The first thing that Abe Dresner, the genial manager of the Kriterion Film Service of Indianapolis, Ind., did when he dropped off the train from New York at the Union Station, was to heave a sigh of regret that he was no longer a resident of The City Beautiful. Mr. Dresner had been in New York for the purpose of arranging to increase the activities of his exchange and passing through stopped over in this city to renew his acquaintance with the local exhibitors. Mr. Dresner was formerly the manager of the Universal Film Exchange here and also president of the Screen Club. A popular vote would have awarded him the prize as one of the most popular exchange managers the city has ever had. Washington is still hopeful that he will return and sort of wake things up, for he is a live wire of a type it is desired to keep within city limits.

BALTIMORE NOTES.

Rush to See Popular Players.

THERE was a hot old time at the New theater, on Lexington street, last week, when crowds of men and women assaulted that house in the effort to get a glimpse of Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Lester Cuneo, who were the guests of the management. The women were apparently worse than the men. Several panes of glass were broken and the ticket booth with the girl cashier still inside, was pushed back a distance of ten feet. The selling of tickets had to be discontinued for an hour and a half, and for half an hour the crowds were so great as to tie up the Lexington street cars. The management of the theater were forced to send the S. O. S. signal to the Western district police station, and Captain Cole and a valiant company of seven policemen answered the cry. They had about all they could do to keep the mob from pushing in the front of the theater.

Inside the house the three popular moving picture stars viewed themselves on the screen in "Pennington's Choice," in which they appeared. After the show each made a short talk to the audience.

THE Low Moor Iron Company, of Low Moor, Va., have adopted motion picture exhibitions as a means of keeping their men contented and to do away with the constant changing of employees. This concern operates a very large place and have a thousand or more workmen constantly employed. It found that it would have to do something to keep efficient employees constantly on the job and has found that motion pictures are a tremendous factor in welfare work. It has taken a house that had previously been used for school purposes and has moved it to a new location, put in a concrete flooring, erected a small stage that may be used for lectures, and has made other improvements that has turned the building into quite a motion picture theater. A band has been organized and this plays during the exhibitions which are given every other night. The company maintains plants in two other cities and contracts for its pictures on the basis of three shows weekly. In the summer time an airdome is maintained at each place.

A nominal admission charge is made and the box office receipts are devoted to the renting of films and similar expenses. No charge is made for rent nor for electricity. That the employees of the company have welcomed this form of diversion for entertainment in the town is something of a novelty.

The concern gave considerable attention to building a perfect ventilating system, and the house is heated by means of a gas furnace.

The bills will be changed daily. The South Side of Chattanooga has been in need of just such a theater for some time, and the new house should prove a successful venture. On the opening day at the theater free toy balloons were given to every woman and child who attended. J. P. Wilhoite, a local contractor, built the theater. New Electric Bulb as Bright as an Arc Light

National Electric Light Association Has an Incandescent Bulb to Serve in Picture Projectors—Tested in Cleveland.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A POWERFUL incandescent lamp, invented by the National Electric Lamp Association, East Cleveland, O., promises a revolution in the projection of motion pictures upon its further development. The lamp has been tested in several Cleveland picture theaters and declared an unqualified success, eliminating the use of a carbon light and eliminating the hazard of film fires.

The discovery and invention of this lamp undoubtedly means much to the progress of motion pictures. Nela Park laboratories have been at work on its development for several years and have perfected what the experts of the plant believe a positively safe equipment for projecting machines. It is necessary to use a specially designed lamp house which is large enough to hold two bulbs. When one burns out a switch is thrown and the other bulb sends its glare through the shutter.

A three-day test was made at the Home theater, Cleveland. The lamp was 300 candle-power, with the special lamp-house and reflector. The amperage was reduced to 15, alternating current, giving the same light as previously used with the arc light at 42 amperes. The new light, it is understood, will throw the picture at varying distances successfully, but with best effect in the Home theater at 65 feet. It eliminated the flicker on the screen and, according to officials of the National Electric Lamp Association, reduces the expense of projecting pictures more than half.

CLEVELAND'S TWO FINE NEW THEATERS OPEN.

Two new photoplay houses were opened in Cleveland—the Strand, an unusually pretty downtown house at Prospect avenue and East Ninth street, and the Y theater at West Thirty-fifth street and Pearl road.

The Strand is owned and operated by Friedberg & Adler. It seats 600 people and its picturesque decorations make it a veritable palace of entertainment. An extremely high ceiling is cut off with a false ceiling of lattice work and provides advantageous air space, auxiliary to the ventilating system. The lattice work extends along the walls and around some panel painting. Japanese lanterns hang from the ceiling. The stage is set off with a flower garden effect, back of which the curtain stands.

The Y theater is owned and operated by C. G. Thompson and Max Schactel, of the Victor Film service, and is in direct charge of Fred E. Johnson, former manager of the Metropolitan theater. It promises to be one of the most popular photoplay houses in Cleveland and is filling a need in a new and growing neighborhood.

Early Morning Shows in Louisville Paying

Five-Cent Houses Get Profitable Business Before Ten in Morning—An Experiment That Panned Out Well.

WHILE Louisville has always been considered a poor town for showing pictures before noon, the 5-cent houses are now reaping a nice harvest on early morning business. The Star, one of the Kinney-Dittmar theaters, has been handling such a nice ante meridian business that the opening hour of the theater has been changed from 10.30 o'clock to 9.30, with the exception of Saturdays and Sundays, when the theater opens at 9 o'clock.

Morning business is picking up steadily, and has helped the box office receipts considerably, as the house has a rather small seating capacity, and even when playing to full houses in the evenings was unable to handle as much business as should be handled by a downtown theater. Interesting comedy material has aided considerably in building up the business of the Star.

POSSIBILITIES TALKED OF FOR MASONIC THEATER.

One of the most interesting prospective developments in moving picture circles in Louisville is that the big Masonic theater, at Fourth and Chestnut streets, may shortly be turned into a moving picture house. For some months the theater has been operating a film now and then, and a few big legitimate shows have also used the house.

Harry A. Bilger, formerly manager of Hopkins theater, a moving picture house at Second and Market streets, which burned about a year ago, and Prof. Ernest Natiello, leader of one of the leading concert bands, have a deal on to take over the house. Prof. Natiello confirmed the report, and stated that Mr. Bilger had taken an option on it. Mr. Bilger is visiting New York, Chicago and several other places where he is trying to obtain some high-class film service to offer.

If the proper arrangements can be made with film producing concerns, the deal will probably go over. It is understood that the theater will use a thirty-piece concert orchestra, which will be headed by Prof. Natiello. The musicians will come in on a co-operative basis, it is further understood. Since the moving picture theaters quit employing them there have been scanty pickings for local musicians. The Natiello orchestra has been heard several seasons at Fontaine Ferry Park, which has been under the management of Harry Bilger.

The park has been a losing proposition of late, it is said, and a deal is pending whereby it may be purchased as a public park by the city. The Park Circuit Realty Company, composed of A. C. Stuever and other St. Louis capitalists, purchased the park in 1903 from Tony Landenwich for $85,000, and spent several thousand dollars in installing amusement devices. Last season moving pictures were exhibited in connection with the open-air band concerts.

Back to Nature Films at Masonic.

Leslie Thurman, who succeeded E. H. Galligan as manager of the Masonic theater, of Louisville, has resigned his position, and G. E. Gaines, the treasurer of the theater, is temporarily in charge. The theater recently showed the Ruskin animated back-to-nature pictures. Prices were 10 cents for children at all performances. Matinees were 25 cents and evening performances were 25 and 50 cents. All seats were reserved. This is the first time on local records that seats have been reserved for moving picture exhibits. Dr. John Ruskin described the pictures.

Col. John T. Macauley Dies.

Col. John T. Macauley, proprietor of Macauley's theater, of Louisville, one of the oldest legitimate theaters in the South, died at his home in Louisville on Wednesday, Nov. 3, following an illness of several months. Col. Macauley was one of the best known theatrical men in the country and numbered his friends and acquaintances in the theatrical world by the thousands. The theater has on several occasions been used for moving pictures, but has stuck rather closely to legitimate productions. A. A. Bigelow, son-in-law of Col. Macauley, has been appointed administrator of the estate.

G. C. Reid, of the Singing Pictures Visits.

G. C. Reid, a representative of the Renfax Film company, of New York, manufacturers of singing motion picture films and devices, was recently in Louisville from the company's offices at Columbus, O. Mr. Reid travels Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia and West Virginia out of the Columbus office. He reports that business is opening up nicely over his entire territory just now.

William Zerr, of Cannelton, Ind., was recently in Louisville, where he purchased a complete outfit with which to establish a new picture theater that will have a seating capacity of 250.

Bradbury Brothers, of Louisville, who have established a number of moving picture theaters in Kentucky and adjoining states, have just purchased a piano and complete electrical outfit and will equip a picture house at Vevay, Ind., which will have a seating capacity of 275 people.

C. A. Wheldon, of Broadhead, Ky., is arranging to start out shortly with a traveling show which will travel Kentucky and adjoining states. An Edison machine and gas outfit has been purchased.

J. H. Keinner, of Webbville, Ky., is starting a small theater which will be operated by one of the old-style gas outfits. The town has no electric plant, but Mr. Keinner is contemplating installation of a small private plant a little later on.

A. G. Butler, of Gainesville, Ky., was recently in Louisville, where he purchased an engine, dynamo and machine and other equipment with which to start a new theater. A complete electrical plant will be installed, and power will be supplied to other concerns in the vicinity of the theater.

Council Snubs Musicians

Cincinnati Central Labor Council Refuses to Indorse Demands of the Musicians on Picture Theaters—Called Unreasonable and Discreditable to Organized Labor —Operators Will Not Strike.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE second chapter of the diplomatic negotiations between Cincinnati exhibitors and members of the Cincinnati Musicians' Protective Association, which came out last week, was even more thrilling than the first, because it marked, in effect, a decided victory for the exhibitors. The demand of the musicians' union for the employment of a greater number of men in the moving picture houses, whether needed or not, was firmly turned down by the exhibitors, as already reported. Following this, however, a number of union musicians employed at various houses quit work, and the slogan "Unfair to organized labor" was hurled at a number of houses, by the usual means of a parading union man carrying a large, conspicuous banner.

The fact that the unfairness lay the other way around, however, was clearly brought out at a meeting of the Central Labor Council of Cincinnati last Tuesday evening, in which the representatives of the operators' organization took a hand. They declared that the musicians had violated their pledge to take no action looking toward a strike without the previous consent of the operators, and it was further emphasized that the demands of the musicians were unreasonable, and discreditable to organized labor. A representative of the musicians' union made an effort to stave off action by the central labor body, by referring to the fact that the exhibitors and the union have agreed to a week's truce, during which it is believed the present difficulty between them will be adjusted.

In spite of this, however, the Council went on record, by practically a unanimous vote, as refusing to indorse the action taken by the musicians. The Cincinnati Central Labor Council has in several cases shown itself to be a body of unusual business sense and reasonableness, and its action, while not unexpected for this reason, was highly gratifying to the exhibitors. Incidentally, it makes it virtually certain that the musicians, in case the strike on account of the present controversy over their demands, cannot count upon a sympathetic strike on the part of the operators.

TRIANGLE'S CINCINNATI PLANS.

It is the intention of the Triangle Film Corporation, according to the local office, to arrange for the lease of a theater in the downtown section, if possible, in accordance with the company's policy in other cities. Downtown houses are scarce, and while it is understood the deal is already in sight of completion, those not "in the know" are wondering which house will be secured. A special exhibition of Triangle features, on Thursday afternoon of last week, illustrated, in a way, the difficulty of getting exhibiting facilities downtown, as well as the need for a home theater by the Triangle.

Under the auspices of Manager C. C. Hite, a private showing to exhibitors and special guests of two of the latest releases of the company was arranged, and it was originally understood that it would be held at the Grand. This house proved not to be available, however, and the exhibition was held instead at the Orpheum, in Walnut Hills. A considerable gathering of those invited attended, and thoroughly enjoyed the privilege of seeing in advance what promises to be one of the most successful productions under the young but famous Triangle brand. This was "The Coward," featuring Frank Keenan, and there was also shown a three-reel Keystone, "My Valet,"

COLONIAL'S NEW POLICY.

The Colonial theater, which has for several years been one of the most popular of the downtown houses in Cincinnati, has changed its policy, according to Messrs. Thomas A. Reilly and E. P. Bernardi, who have charge of the theater. For some time the house has been showing the popular serials, with one and two-reel pictures, and only an occasional lengthy feature. Hereafter, however, the same policy as most of the larger houses will be followed, and only multi-reel features will be shown, with two changes a week. So far the new plan has met with pronounced success, some excellent pictures having been shown to introduce the Colonial patrons to the progressive policy, and it is believed that there will be no reason to regret the change.

Theda Bara, a Cincinnati Girl.

While Geraldine Farrar, in the Paramount production of "Carmen," preceded the Fox production, featuring Theda Bara, to Cincinnati, by about a week, the return engagement of the Farrar film at the Strand the latter part of last week brought the two "Carmens" to the city together, as the Fox production held the boards at the Walnut at the same time. This coincidence, which has occurred in other cities, much to the benefit of both productions, caused quite as much discussion in Cincinnati as elsewhere, if not more so, by reason of the fact that Theda Bara is a Queen City girl, despite the creepy-crawly stories about her mysterious birth in the far Sahara, etc.

R. S. Shrader Visits Indianapolis.

Manager R. S. Shrader, the Cincinnati V-L-S-E manager, who is now well settled in his new quarters on West Seventh street, was in Indianapolis last week arranging for the installation of the Big Four program of features in the former Keith theater in that city, which has joined the vast and growing ranks of the houses turned over to the pictured drama.

Schaengold and McMahan Make Notable Advance

Will Build a Theater on Fifth, Near Race, Street—Also Have Taken Over the Forest Theater—Leading Factors in Local Filmdom.

CHARLES SCHAENGOLD and I. M. McMahan, prominent in moving picture business in and around Cincinnati, have been unusually active lately, with the result that they loom up as even more conspicuous figures in this vicinity. The proposal to construct a handsome photoplay house on the north side of Fifth street, between Race and Elm, which was reported some time since, took more definite form last week, when Mr. Schaengold and his associates in this enterprise placed on record a lease of the property intended for this purpose, measuring 30 feet front, 72 feet west of Race street, in the block containing the Lubin, the Alhambra, the Colonial and the Avenue. The lease is for 20 years, with a rental of $1,875 a quarter, and the privilege of purchase at $130,000.

A deal quite as interesting, however, and much less expected, involving the acquisition by Messrs. Schaengold and McMahan of the control of the Forest theater, followed this one. This property, which is one of the handsomest moving picture houses in the city, is owned by the Forest Auditorium Co., and has been leased by the gentlemen named for an extended period, at $5,000 a year. It was for some time known that Mr. Lee Ach, president of the company, found the call upon his time made by the theater very heavy, although the success of the house was such that a sale or lease was not thought probable by outsiders. With this house and the proposed downtown theater, Messrs. Schaengold and McMahan will be leading factors in the local moving picture field, even without reference to their other interests in the business, which are extensive.

Two Fire Law Arrests

Michigan Managers Arraigned by Fire Marshal's Deputies for Having Loose Chairs in Theaters—Stambaugh Exhibitor Pleads Guilty and Pays $10 Fine—Onaway Man Gets Suspended Sentence.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FOR not obeying an order issued by the state fire marshal of Michigan to comply with the law, the manager of a moving picture theater at Stambaugh was arraigned and pleaded guilty to a charge of allowing loose chairs to be used in his theater. He paid a fine of $10 and costs. The owner of a theater at Onoway was allowed his freedom on suspended sentence upon pleading guilty to a violation of the law and upon paying court costs. As we told exhibitors some months ago, the state fire marshal has given rigid instructions to his deputies that the moving picture law in its entirety must be complied with by exhibitors, in order to prevent so far as possible fires and loss of life and property.

JEAN DE CAUSSIN'S NOTABLE STAGE-SET WORK.

Jean De Caussin, stage manager of the Majestic theater, is given the credit for the handsome new stage setting recently installed at that playhouse. He designed, built and painted it, had the fountains made to his own drawings and specifications and installed eight sets of lights and individual motors, which provide a kaleidoscopic color scheme that embraces all the colors of the rainbow.

It is the largest stage setting in Detroit and one of the most beautiful. With its pergolas, giving an Italian garden effect, its electric fountains and a beautiful stained glass window with Tiffany mountings, visitors from other cities declare it to be the finest in America.

Mr. de Caussin is also responsible for other stage work that has been seen and favorably commented on in Detroit. He paints and arranges the posters which appear in front of the Majestic and which have received much favorable comment from local artists because of their daring and originality.

Detroit's New Theaters.

Answering the letter of M. T. R., of New York City, would say that the new theaters to be opened before the first of the year are: Drury Lane, Woodward avenue near John R. street, seating 600, owned by Frank Drew, lessee of the Avenue theater; Stratford theater, Dix and Ferdinand, seating 1,200, owned by Dix Avenue Amusement company; Duplex theater, owned by Grand Boulevard Theater Company, located on East Grand Boulevard near Woodward avenue, seating 750 people in each auditorium, or a total of 1,500, the most novel theater of its kind in the United States, Earl N. Henessy, manager, and Regent theater, Woodward avenue, near the East Grand Boulevard, seating 2,000, owned by William F. Klatt.

The Norwood Sold.

Charles F. Rall, owner of the Norwood theater, Woodward avenue near the Grand Boulevard, has disposed of the theater and the entire block. It is not definitely decided whether or not the new owners will continue the playhouse. Their intention is to ultimately tear out the theater part and make stores out of the front. The Norwood was opened only a few months ago and is one of the prettiest photoplay houses in Detroit. The new owners feel that with the Duplex and the Regent theaters as competitors within the same block, one of them is bound to get bumped, and they prefer to be on the safe side by making stores out of the front before the other houses are opened. However, as above stated, no definite action will be taken for a few weeks at least. Mr. Rall sold out at a handsome profit.

What John H. Kunsky People are Doing.

George W. Trendle, of the John H. Kunsky enterprises, was in Chicago and Milwaukee last week. It is understood that Mr. Trendle practically completed a deal for a new program for the Casino Feature Film Company, of which Mr. Kunsky is owner, and that he will shortly have an announcement to make of a sensational character.

Are Features or Short Films Wanted?

Detroit Exchange Man Supplements Recent Discussion as to What Is the Popular Kind of Picture Show—Gives His Experiences.

THE Detroit office of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, Free Press Building, was visited this week by the manager of one of the leading film exchanges, who said to our representative: "I noted with considerable interest what some of the prominent men of Detroit had to say about the film business, particularly relative to the features and the shorter reels. In this connection I want to say that nowhere in the country will you find the larger theaters playing anything but features, which shows conclusively that the big features are what the people want. For a small neighborhood house, short-reel films might be all right, but I have talked with small and large exhibitors in cities of all sizes, both in the downtown sections and the outskirts and I have found that all of them will frankly admit that their patrons want features and that their business is best when they have features to offer. Exhibitors have educated their patrons to big features and they will not go back to the shorter stuff. It may be all right to give a one of two-reel comedy in connection with the feature, but to go back to the early days of handing out a program consisting of short films would be a fatal blow to the moving picture industry. Let any of the theaters seating 1,000 or over that have been giving big features try a week of the shorter films and see how long they will last.

"Another thing. My experience with exhibitors shows that the female screen stars pay the best, and that with a few exceptions people prefer the screen stars to the stage stars."

WE WANT TO BE OF USE IN EVERY WAY.

To all Michigan Exhibitors: Make the Detroit office of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, 503 Free Press building, your headquarters when you are in the city. Back numbers of the magazine always on file; telephone, stenographer always at your free disposal. It is always welcome and will be greatly appreciated. The WORLD is your magazine and is devoted to your interests. Why not co-operate and help the good work along? Warns Local Censors Evanston Alderman Warns Municipalities League Convention of Dangers in Small City Censoring—Legitimate Businesses Are Hurt—People Are Not Pleased—Dangerous Situation Arises.

MUNICIPAL officials lift the lid of a Pandora's box when they touch the question of local boards of moving picture censorship. This was the warning given to the delegates to the Illinois Municipalities League in convention at Champaign.

It was Alderman W. F. Burns of Evanston, who came direct from a struggle over a just and fair method of regulating films, and sounded this warning to the assembled mayors and aldermen. He particularly warned against too ready acquiescence in movements of women's clubs for censorship.

Alderman Burns is not an advocate of unrestricted pictures. But he comes from a community which has taken up the censorship matter, and after starting with this task it has realized that it has attempted something too important for the ordinary routine of municipal government. It is now apparent to the Evanston officials that not only are legitimate businesses of the city affected, but that the people themselves are not all inclined to arbitrary elimination of certain classes of pictures.

Local censorship ideas almost invariably originate with well meaning women's clubs. Most of these clubs have records for doing constructive work in their communities. In this work in the past they have sought and have readily been given the aid of city officials. When the censorship matter is agitated, there is a tendency upon the part of unsuspecting city councils to view the whole thing as merely another worthy move to which it needs only lend its official sanction. Then too late it finds it is dealing with a matter which affects the rights of the majority of citizens. It is this walking blindly into a dangerous situation, against which Alderman Burns would warn.

CENSORING IDEA IN MAYWOOD.

In starting a movement for wholesome moving pictures, the Maywood Moving Picture Improvement Association announces to the public:

"One of the managers says he gives the people what they want. We want to prove to the managers of the picture houses that the Maywood public wants good, clean, wholesome pictures. If at any time in any theater you find you are not getting it, or you see anything objectionable, will you kindly call the attention of this organization to it?

"The organization consists of the pastors of the various churches, the presidents of all organizations, women's clubs, aid societies, parent-teacher associations—hence it is a thoroughly representative body of people and in no way wishes to condemn the places of amusement in question but realizes that the lessons taken in by the eye are more potent for good or evil than perhaps any other method."

ACTIVITIES OF CENSOR BOARD AT QUINCY.

Mayor Abbott of Quincy, upon whom has been bestowed the title of "moderator and advisory assistant" to the local board of censorship, would ban films of football games, holding they are more brutal than prizefights.

This opinion was made at a board meeting after Mrs. John T. Ingraham, a member, had outlined the following tentative policy for the board:

"It is the policy of the motion picture theater inspectors to be broadminded and liberal and to use suggestive guidance rather than coercion. The board will challenge all subjects that are immoral, indecent or innately criminal; the exploitation of unworthy reputations; the presentation of insane characters in an unwholesome or gruesome manner; the profaning of religious subjects; prolonged passionate love scenes; costuming in which convention is disregarded; underworld scenes produced for entertainment, not moral effect; vampire or 'wanton heroine' pictures; prize fights, and all that tend to offend public opinion."

This meeting, virtually a reorganization, developed that the board will follow closely Chicago and New York ideas. It admits the fallacy of censoring all pictures so children can see them and contemplates the "adult only" permits. It also wants to take up fire danger and health conditions in Quincy picture houses, although duties of board are not so defined by ordinance.

New Union Agreement

Indianapolis Picture Operators' Union Signs New Working Contract with Exhibitors—Will Last Till August, 1917—Some of the Leading Points and the New Wage Scale—Provides for Arbitration.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

REPRESENTATIVES of the local moving picture operators' union under the jurisdiction of the National Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees have just signed a new agreement with the Indianapolis Motion picture Exhibitors' Association. The new contract is effective until August, 1917.

Under the heading of house working rules "all operators are compelled to keep the operating room free from all accumulations of combustibles as far as possible, and the operator must clean the booth once a day." Smoking is positively prohibited in the booth, "and any operator having a fire while operating shall be suspended until a thorough investigation has been made by the board of arbitration and another competent operator shall be furnished in his place."

The new contract calls for increase of one dollar a day in the wage scale for night work and from $1.50 to $2 a day for day work, depending upon the hours and conditions of employment.

Under the terms of the contract, the operators working from 10 a. m. till 11 p. m. shall receive $23 a week and those operating from noon till 11 p. m. shall receive $21 a week. Operators working in vaudeville houses shall receive $21 a week. In houses open only during the evening the operators shall receive $13 a week, the same scale to be paid in airdomes.

The agreement contained a non-strike clause, providing for arbitration of any differences which may arise between members of the two organizations working under the contract. The agreement provides for a board of arbitration to be made up of two representatives from each organization with a fifth and neutral member to be chosen by the other four. The decisions of the board shall be final and binding on both parties to the contract.

TROUBLE BETWEEN UNIONS.

Trouble between the moving picture operators' union and the electrical workers' union has developed in Indianapolis over an alleged attempt of the electrical workers' union to infringe upon the jurisdiction of the operators' union. It is charged by the operators that the electrical workers' union had agreed to sign a contract with the exhibitors and to take the places of the operators in event of a strike. Henry Courtot, business agent of the electrical workers, said that he was acting under orders from the international headquarters and did not think such steps as he had taken to carry them into effect had been illegal. The operators recently signed a new working agreement, effective until 1917.

NEW REGENT TO OPEN THANKSGIVING DAY.

The New Regent theater, Indianapolis, which is to be managed by Bingham, Crose & Cohen, is to run high class photoplays exclusively, and announces that it will open Thanksgiving Day with "Damaged Goods," with Richard Bennet and the original cast as released through the Mutual Film Corporation.

The theater will be one of the most up-to-date theaters in Indiana. The interior will be decorated in old rose and two tones of gray. It will be of brick, steel and reinforced concrete, thoroughly modern and fireproof. The program will be changed three times a week and continuous shows will be run from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. The price will be ten cents, afternoon and night, seven days a week. The prices for "Damaged Goods," however, will be twenty-five cents. The Bingham, Crose & Cohen Company also manages the Colonial, running photoplays exclusively, and has contracts with the Metro, Kleine-Edison, V-L-S-E companies and the Pathe Gold Rooster companies.

NEW OFFICES FOR WORLD FILM.

The World Film Corporation office in Indianapolis is being remodeled, redecorated and new furniture set in. The company has leased the entire third floor of the building. The announcement follows the visit of Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, who was in Chicago to attend a meeting of branch managers and stopped off in the Indianapolis office for a conference with W. A. Ratz, the manager. The new exchange office will be one of the best to be found anywhere.

ROY BAIR BUYS THE LINCOLN.

J. F. Mackenzie, formerly manager of the "It Pays to Advertise" company, has joined the executive staff of the Strand Theater Company of Chicago, and will manage the Indianapolis Strand when it is opened. Mr. Mackenzie is well known from his nine-year connection with the George M. Cohan Chicago organization. Eugene Quigley, formerly of the Chicago Grand Opera House, also has joined the Strand company staff.

Arrested for Employing Boys.

Oscar E. Wobrock, George Killen, Herman C. Hisler and J. B. Mallett were cited to appear in the city court, Fort Wayne, Indiana, on a charge of employing children under age. Affidavits were filed against these men by Nelson A. Kyser, a state factory inspector. All of the men named are moving picture exhibitors. All of the picture exhibitors claim that the boys represented that they were of legal age.

Sent Up Melons on Opening Day.

Manager Harry V. Blaundin of the Twentieth Century theater, Gary, Indiana, sprung a sensation with the reopening of his pretty playhouse as a five-act vaudeville and feature photoplay house. Blaudin sent up fifty balloons from the roof of a Gary hotel. Each balloon had the appearance of a nice big watermelon. Mr. Blaudin notified the people of the city that he would divide fifty melons with his patrons. Each melon carried a pass, some of these passes were for single admission tickets and a number were season passes. The stunt attracted a great deal of attention, and practically every "melon" was the center of a big scramble.

No Sunday Shows.

Through the efforts of the Rev. Washburn, Methodist minister of Terre Haute, Indiana, the moving picture houses of Shelburn, Indiana, have been ordered closed on Sunday until further notice.

Mayor Braun of Connersville has decided that there will be no moving pictures on Sundays. Mayor believes the pictures would do good, but hundreds of church workers opposed him so bitterly that he has advised the moving picture managers not to open.

Lerner Assumes Active Management of the Bucklen.

Harry E. Lerner, formerly manager of the La Salle theate at South Bend, closed a deal for the controlling interest in the Popular Amusement Company, and on Sunday assumed active management of the Bucklen theater at Elkhart, Indiana. Mr. Lerner bought the stock held by Fred Palmer, who has had the control of the theater for the last fifteen months.

ST. LOUIS CLUB CELEBRATES "NATION" FILM'S LONG RUN.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ON Monday night, November 15th, the Million Population Club of St. Louis will celebrate the 150th consecutive presentation of the Griffith feature, "The Birth of a Nation." The club will have as guests Gov. Major of Missouri, Mayor Kiel of St. Louis, Postmaster Selph of St. Louis, and many other prominent men of the city. The Garrick, where the feature is running, will be elaborately decorated in honor of the occasion, and after the performance a supper will be given at the Hotel Jefferson.

"The Birth of a Nation" has had an unusual run in St. Louis, which is known generally as a one-week show city, and this departure from the old rule has caused much interest among business men. The attraction is known and talked about in all the outlying towns within a hundred miles or more of St. Louis.

COLUMBIA HOUSE REOPENS.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Karsteter of St. Louis have made arrangements to open the Columbia theater at Columbia, Mo., as an all-picture house this week. The Columbia was built for a legitimate theater several years ago, but the house has been dark with the exception of a few nights a month, when a big production in the two dollar class would come to the town. The Karsteters intend to make a high class feature house of the Columbia, with an admission price of ten and twenty cents. Mrs. Karsteter is the daughter of Mm. Sievers, of the New Grand Central theater of St. Louis, and has had considerable experience in helping her father with the management of that house, and Mr. Karsteter as traveling representative of the Alco, gained much useful knowledge of the business, and there is no doubt that the two partners will make a success of the Columbia.

Suit to Test a Refused License Case.

Ray Foust of Devils Lake, N. D., has been preparing to test, in the supreme court of North Dakota, the right of a city to arbitrarily refuse to grant a license to a moving picture theater if the house complies with all the regulations.

Foust went to Devils Lake this fall from Sioux Falls, S. D. Without making application for a license, a building was remodeled, new floor installed, opera seats purchased and machine ordered. Then the city commission turned him down. The procedure planned in his interest was to apply for an injunction to prohibit the city from causing his arrest, thus laying the foundation for testing the city ordinance and statute.

"Nation" Film Stops for Day of A. Judah's Funeral

J. P. Daly Closes Grand Theater While Showing the Griffith Spectacle Out of Respect to the Dead Owner of the House.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City Film Service.

THE death of A. Judah, owner of the Grand, occurred while "The Birth of a Nation" was being shown, and plans were made to close the house during his funeral. Ordinarily the owner of the attraction would be compensated for the loss, but in this case J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the company, when notified of the closing by J. P. Daly, who has charge of the master film, sent the following telegram:

"Kindly express my regrets to Mr. Judah's family, and notify them that it is agreeable to me to close the theater Friday. But under no circumstances accept any compensation for the closing of the house."

This very courteous and thoughtful compliment to the memory of Mr. Judah was widely commented upon in theatrical circles.

Attempts had been made to enlist the support of Mayor Jost in a project to prevent the showing of the picture. It was alleged that it promoted race hatred. After an inspection, however, the welfare board refused to interfere, though some minor eliminations were suggested and made. It broke all records as an attraction both for length of run and for attendance. Prices were 25 cents to $2.

KANSAS CITY WILLING TO PAY FOR GOOD PICTURES.

The Jesse L. Lasky production of "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar, has demonstrated the attitude of Kansas citizens towards the highest class pictures—and the prices that can be charged for them. The people are eager to pay the price to see the pictures. "Carmen" was a pre-release at the Warwick theater, running a week, at 25 and 50 cents, and out of the thousands who paid the admission where 10 cents has been the conventional charge, not more than one or two even mentioned the advance.

KANSAS CITY'S NEW EMPRESS UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT.

The Empress theater property which was recently sold at auction in Kansas City is another step in the final dissolution of the Sullivan & Considine holdings which were extensive a few years ago. Martin & Estes coincidentally lost control of the theater, they having been lessees from the receiver, and rather unexpectedly found themselves "out in the cold." Not so very cold, either, as their features are going strong in the large territory they control.

The theater has been leased to a new concern in Kansas City, a partnership consisting of W. Ledoux and A. Le Marquend, gentlemen who have made a large success of the Empress theater in Omaha, which they control there as a corporation of Nebraska. The same partnership has leased the Empress theater at Denver, also recently sold under the same circumstances as the Kansas City house, and also a former Sullivan & Considine house.

Ledoux & LeMarquend are remodeling and redecorating the Empress theaters at both Denver and Kansas City, and putting in everything new, from carpets to booths and projecting equipment. The Kansas City New Empress was opened Nov. 14, and the Denver house will be open on Nov. 28. The policy at both houses will be the same as that at the Omaha Empress —four acts of vaudeville, five reels of pictures, "10 cents any time," continuous from 11 to 11. The seating capacity of the houses is: Kansas City, 1,600; Denver, 1,700; Omaha, 1,400.

Topeka House Changes Name.

The Electric theater at Topeka, Kan., will in the future, be known as the "Orpheum," the name it went under previous to its purchase by Grubel Brothers. The theater will be managed under a policy similar to that of the Grubel Brothers in their other places in Missouri and Kansas, showing five reels of pictures and two acts of vaudeville, the admission being 10 cents.

Reinke's Neat and Effective Advertising.

Manager Reinke of the Orpheum theater, St. Joseph, Mo., is an energetic exhibitor, and a very successful advertiser. An example of his methods was recently revealed when he bought several sepia colored pictures of Geraldine Farrar at $1 apiece and the next week took a set of six pictures of different subjects at $9 the set. He explained that this was his best form of advertising. He said he had each of the pictures nicely framed, and had no trouble at all in securing positions for them in hotel lobbies and in prominent windows, particularly ticket office windows. A neat card bearing the date of the attraction and the location of his house was attached, and after the film had been shown he had attractive decorations for his establishment. But whether the pictures were to be useful again or not he found them big pullers for his show.

His territory here includes all of Missouri except St. Louis, Kansas, Nebraska, Northern Oklahoma and Arkansas. He is an experienced theatrical and film man—and he is hitting it off pretty well with the big ones of the film business in this district.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO CONFER ON CENSORSHIP.

A Minneapolis committee of which Karl De Laittre, formerly president of the city council and well known business man, is chairman, has been appointed to confer with Mayor W. G. Nye in considering motion pictures in advance of their showing in cases where there is reason to anticipate a doubt as to the nature of the exhibition.

This committee is the result of mass meetings of various civic and commercial organizations and it is planned to create a permanent board to cooperate with the Mayor in all matters pertaining to questionable motion pictures.

Right to Revoke License

Minneapolis Stirred by Legal Contest Over Showing There of the "Nation" Film—District Court Decides That Mayor Has Right, Under City's Charter, to Revoke a City License on Showing Cause.

By Grace E. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE film, "The Birth of a Nation," which has caused talk of race riots and insurrection in more than one city, has set official and judicial Minneapolis by the ears and courts are busy and lawyers are waxing opulent in an effort to decide whether or not the Mayor is within his legal rights in revoking the license of the theater where it was shown here.

The district court says he has that right provided he shows cause for his action. The court in rendering the decision a few days ago granted a short stay of execution to permit the filing of an appeal to the state supreme court, meantime the picture has been withdrawn from exhibition.

Judge Steele's decision has a wider bearing, however, than the mere fortunes of the film which is now on trial. It affects future shows both of moving pictures and the so-called "legitimate" drama. The Minneapolis city charter vests in the Mayor the right to revoke licenses of all sorts and those who uphold Mayor W. G. Nye in his present stand say that the whole police power of the city is virtually at stake, since saloon, cafe and all other licenses are involved and that from that standpoint the situation is a serious one.

Meanwhile the picture is being shown under the authority of a temporary injunction, forbidding the mayor to interfere and the matter is before the courts with no final decision in sight.

The big film is booked for eight weeks, beginning October 31, and marks a record for Minneapolis and the Northwest in that the prices run to $2.00 for the best seats, a price never even heretofore approached by the photoplays.

Charges of attempted bribery have been brought by the Mayor's son and secretary against some of the men interested in the exhibition of the film, and altogether the picture has made a merry local war with publicity aplenty for the production.

D. B. LEDERMAN OF LAEMMLE GOES TO MINNEAPOLIS.

This enterprising young manager entered the moving picture business fourteen years ago at Topeka, Kansas, opening the first house west of the Missouri River. After managing a string of thirty-seven houses, he entered into film renting with the General Film Company just as they were organizing. He remained in their service in the Omaha territory until he accepted a position with the Mutual of Omaha, which company he was with until he entered the service as manager of the Laemmle Film Service of Des Moines.

D. B. Lederman.

Now he has been transferred and promoted to the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis, a larger territory. The Des Moines branch of the Laemmle Film Service has been enlarged from one room located at 421 Walnut street to the present location, in the Hubbell building, where it occupies a half floor, and also the entire third floor over the Unique Theater building. He opened business with one reel and sent for more, and it was not long until the office boasted 100 reels. Then he stopped counting. He took the side of the Independent Motion Picture Company in its fight and personally arranged for the staging here of its first film, "Hiawatha." He outlined the scenario and helped with the making of the picture at the famous Minnehaha Falls in Minneapolis.

He is well known to local business men as he made pictures on a number of "trade tours."

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE management of the Portola theater has secured extensive territorial rights on the Pacific Coast to "The Battle Cry of Peace" and elaborate preparations are being made for the initial presentation of this production in San Francisco. As a run of at least four weeks is being contemplated, and it is not desired to change the policy under which the Portola theater is conducted, the Columbia theater has been secured for the local engagement. This theater is without question the grandest house on the Pacific Coast, with a stage that will permit of the installation of the elaborate stage effects that have been planned.

Manager Eugene Roth of the Portola is arranging to present this picture not alone as presented in New York, but with Rothapfel ideas in regard to proper environment. An orchestra of twenty musicians under the leadership of Mr. W. Cellarious, whose music is one of the great drawing cards at the Portola, is being trained for this engagement. The stage settings depicting the horrors of war and the dawn of peace will be on a scale never before seen here in connection with moving pictures. The further exhibition of the picture will not be announced until after the termination of the initial run in this city.

A WELL-KNOWN EXCHANGE MAN

Although E. M. Asher of San Francisco has been engaged in the film rental business less than five years, he has established for himself an enviable reputation in this line of work and is one of the best known exchange men in this territory. During this time he has been connected with but one firm, the Golden Gate Film Exchange, being of the conviction that it was not necessary to make frequent changes to learn the business.

E. M. Asher.

His first experience was in the manufacturing end of the business, where he assisted in making and putting out a local weekly, one of the first of these, by the way, to be established in the whole country. He also directed the production of the "Last Night on the Barbary Coast," a feature that attracted considerable attention at the time. He gradually worked his way through the various depavements of the firm until he is now an able assistant to President Sol L. Lesser and handles many of the large productions controlled by the Golden Gate Film Exchange and the All Star Feature Distributors.

He is also a publicity expert of note and one of the greatest coups ever made in the film advertising world was engineered by him when he conceived the idea of having a special Metro Day at the Exposition. In the face of many difficulties he succeeded in getting official sanction for this event, which took place during National Convention Week in July. He is an enthusiastic member of the Screen Club of San Francisco, is a Native Son, and is making a success in the film field because he possesses those qualities that tend to impress those with whom he comes in contact.

Rothapfel Dines With California Exhibitors

Gives Interesting Address to Guests of the Mutual in San Francisco—Wants Exhibitors to Wake Up—Prominent Guests.

ONE of the largest and most enthusiastic meetings of exhibitors and film exchange men ever held in San Francisco took place on the evening of Nov. 4, at Tait's Cafe, under the auspices of the Mutual Film Corporation, of which X. K. Stout is the local manager. The talk given by this prominent exhibitor was listened to with close attention and many of the ideas suggested by him will be placed into effect in local houses.

Following his talk the toastmaster called upon a number of those present for addresses. Marcus Loew made a short talk and intimated that he would again enter the Coast field within a short time. Aaron Jones, of Chicago, suggested that the first performance in the new Riato theater in New York be given exclusively for the exhibitors of the United States. C. Mell Simmons, of the Triangle, gave a very interesting talk and wound up by declaring that on the whole Western exhibitors were far more advanced than those in the East. Other speakers were H. C. Schmidt, of Palo Alto; Rex Midgley, Emil Kehrlein, Irvine Ackermann, J. L. Partington, E. B. Johnson, Louis R. Greenfield, H. W. Mobsby, Sid Grauman, Sol Lesser, M. L. Markowitz and Herman Wobber.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Rothapfel Reaches Denver.

EXHIBITOR S. L. ROTHAPFEL, known as America's most successful motion picture exhibitor, was in Denver, Friday, November 12th, to deliver his message of success to the Denver exhibitors.

In honor of Mr. Rothapfel's visit in Denver, Manager Lustig of the Denver Mutual office, had planned a luncheon that was given at the Savoy hotel, Friday noon, to which all the exhibitors of the town and country were invited. The exhibitors showed a lively interest in this opportunity to meet and hear Mr. Rothapfel.

Triangle Films Open.

Auspicious in the history of the moving pictures in Denver is the starting of Triangle films at the Isis theater Saturday, November 6. Denver people should appreciate the fact that they are to see the Triangle films, for the regular Isis admission price.

The first two pictures to be shown are the Griffith production, "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks in the title role, and "My Valet," directed by Mack Sennett, with him in the leading role, together with Mabel Normand and Raymond Hitchcock.

Besides the attractions of the Triangle pictures, Murtagh, the Isis organist, will, at his 1.30 concert, play the new song "Denver," the words of which were written by Mrs. Martha Sherman, a well known Denver woman.

"Melting Pot" Wins at Advanced Prices.

The Strand is having a week's run of Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot." This picture is really making a record run here. It is one of our most talked of pictures. The price of admission has been raised from 10 cents to 15 and 25, and since the picture was first put on it has packed the house. A unique mode of attraction has been used, besides extensive advertising. There has been a big melting pot made of papier mache that is at least three feet high and two wide. This has been suspended high in the lobby way, and filled with flags of all the different nations. The Strand has been having week runs of several pictures, such as "The Soul of a Woman."

The Princess theater, as well, is coming in with a picture that is arousing a good bit of curiosity and anticipation. Sunday, Mary Pickford comes in "Madam Butterfly." This is Miss Pickford's first adventure into orientalism.

V-L-S-E. Offices Moved.

V-L-S-E offices have been changed from the Iron building to the new Wight building on Champa street. Manager Frank Harris may well be proud of his new location for it makes one of the finest offices in town. The front office is a long, sunfilled room, which affords ample space and comfort for all the employes. Then back of this is the room used as a poster room and a shipping room. One of the nicest features about the offices is a fine big projection room, which will accommodate about forty people, and in which a fine big Powers projection machine has been installed. The vault for the films is fireproof, made of steel and concrete, and built strictly according to fire regulations.

ROSENTHAL VISITS PORTLAND.

En route to San Francisco to open a branch office, Isaac Rosenthal, of the Sutton Feature Film Company of Seattle and Butte, spent a few days in Portland conferring with F. M. Simonton of the local Apex office. Mr. Rosenthal recently acquired the business of Joe Bloom at Seattle.

Free Films in Saloons

Portland, Oregon, Censors Make Tour of Inspection of Saloons—Find Pictures Showing and Many Spectators—Exhibitors Protest to Exchanges—Same Trouble Has Cropped Up in Other Localities.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ON Oct. 21, Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the Portland censor board, accompanied by Lieutenant Harms of the police department, inspected the motion picture situation in the saloons in the North End. Mrs. Colwell found several saloons showing pictures free, running a show every half hour and enjoying good patronage. She found that while the pictures were of a character that would pass in saloons, the city ordinance was not being complied with and issued warnings to the proprietors of the resorts. In one of the largest saloons an audience of about 250 men watched the pictures.

George M. Harris, of the Burnside theater, and the Portland Amusement Company, operating the Casino and American theaters, located in the district where working men congregate, protested to the exchanges against supplying films to saloons which exhibited them free, recalling a similar protest made several years ago with which most of the exchanges complied.

COLUMBIA TO SHOW TRIANGLE.

As the result of negotiations extending over a period of several weeks, the Columbia theater, Portland, has contracted with the Triangle Film Corporation and the first attraction of that brand will show during the week of Nov. 7. Portland expected Triangle a month ago, but the price conditions in the city made it nearly impossible for any house to handle the program. Jensen and Von Herberg, lessees of the Columbia, were, however, able to arrange for the service in connection with their chain of Seattle houses.

Manager E. J. Myrick surprised the good staid people of Portland the other day by advertising for red headed girls to act as ushers at the Columbia, and from a large number of applicants Mr. Myrick has selected a bevy of auburn haired belles to replace the mere men ushers formerly employed.

CENSORS FILE REPORT.

The Portland censor board's report for the month of October has been filed with the City Commissioners, and it indicates that the importation of films into the city during the past month kept pace with that of the month of September. The board viewed 640 reels, comprising 295 subjects in October as compared with 643 reels and 302 subjects in September. In October there was one subject condemned and 25 eliminations ordered; 52 permits to exhibit were issued. Besides the regular board of seven members, 41 people served on viewers' committees.

From March 1 to Nov. 1 the board reported on 5,531 reels, 3,001 subjects, condemning 17½ subjects and ordering 229 eliminations. The board's report does not show the number of reels condemned. During the same time the board made 60 eliminations ordered by the National Board and which had not been made when the films reached Portland.

UNITED PLANS.

A. W. Walker, president of the United Film Service of Seattle, a corporation which took over the business of the Seattle branch of the United Service when the parent concern dissolved, was in Portland for a few days, en route from New York to Seattle and ye scribe importuned him to rhapsodize about Oregon's Columbia River Highway, over which Mr. Walker had just taken a side trip by automobile. The East holds no charms for him now, Mr. Walker declares. Incidentally, he divulged his plans to perpetuate the business of the old United in this territory under the style of the above-named corporation. The concern will handle the old United service, percentage attractions and buy films outright. The Service Film Company, Stone & Pumphrey, owners, will continue to handle the old United business and that of the new company in the Portland territory.

GOVERNMENT FILMS.

The officials of the United States Forestry Service gathered at the exhibition room of the Service Film Company recently to view films of the western forests taken under government direction. The work of the forest ranger, the lumber industry and the results from a careless hunter dropping a lighted match in the timber were the subjects of the reels shown. Some wonderful fire scenes taken in the western forests were pictured, also the methods used by the government to fight forest fires. The Forestry Service employs its own camera man to take this class of pictures. The subjects are all educational and were shown at the Portland Land Products Show after the Forest Service officials had viewed them.

PICTURES OF ANIMAL LIFE.

William L. Finley, Game Commissioner of Oregon, has completed several reels of pictures of bird and animal life photographed by him during his recent trip through southern Oregon. The pictures were taken purely from the viewpoint of a biologist and not as a hunter of animals and birds. Mr. Finley brought home wonderful pictures of wild antelope, an animal exceedingly difficult to photograph, and many pictures of bird life.

Mr. Finley has served in the capacity of State Game Warden and State Biologist. He is a great lover of animals and has written several books on his work. He finds the motion picture camera a superior means of recording his work and showing its results to the public. Mr. Finley is contemplating a trip to the sand bars on the upper Columbia to photograph the wild geese found there at this time of the year.

HILLSBORO HOUSE OPENS.

C. C. Combs, owner of the Majestic, Hillsboro, opened that house on Nov. 12 with Pathe's "Wallingford." To start the new house Mr. Combs has engaged the services of O. Phillips, house manager of the Star theater, Tillamook, to manage his house for a few weeks. A novelty in the new theater is a smoking balcony with a plate glass front.

Oregon Briefs.

The Rex, Woodburn, Oregon, has been sold to H. Baldra to Hollard & Erwin. The new owners have changed the name to the Cozy.

George Maple, Majestic theater, Roseberg, has sold to Mr. Boles, his former partner.

I. Rosenthal advises that he met George Blye in Seattle, where that gentleman booked "Guarding Old Glory" to show at his theater in Salem, Ore.

F. Scholl, organist at the Columbia, Portland, for the past year and half, has left that house and is now playing at the National.

Leonard Clark, formerly booker for the general Film's Portland office, is now connected with the Film Supply Company of Oregon.

Grcmbacher and Bailey Out of Exchange Business

Big Northwest Amusement Firm Sells Out Renting Business to Metro Film Corporation—Will Now Handle Only Exhibiting End.

GROMBACHER & BAILEY, of which a heavy owner is Frank T. Bailey, Spokane, president of the Montana Amusement Company, with headquarters in Butte, Montana, and also general manager of the Liberty Amusement Company, Spokane, Wash., have sold their Metro Film service exchanges in Seattle, Spokane and Butte to the Metro Pictures Corporation of New York City. While the purchase price could not be learned, it is understood that a good figure was obtained and that Grombacher & Bailey will devote their entire energies to the exhibiting field. They organized the Independent Western film exchange, which was later called the Metro Film Service.

F. A. Tipton of the Butte office arrived in the city during the week and closed the local office, taking Bert Todd, manager, to the Butte office with him.

George Grombacher, Portland, is associated with Mr. Bailey in the various houses in Montana, the Liberty, Spokane; American, Seattle, and the National of Portland, Ore.

SPOKANE'S LIBERTY PLEASES KIDDIES WITH GIFTS.

On the afternoon of Saturday, November 6, he gave each child in attendance a five-cent box of stick candy and during the afternoon and evening reported that 2,000 boxes were distributed. The children filled the theater and were informed that another surprise awaited them for the following Saturday. Many were heard to say: "I am coming to the Liberty every ySaturday." On the previous Saturday "Spook" caps were given. Special comedies are always added to the program.

PENDLETON ROUNDUP FILMS.

Pictures of the roundup held at Pendleton, Oregon, September 22 to 25, will be shown at the Rex theater. The engagement is for two days, arrangements having been completed when C. G. Van Tress, a member of the Roundup Association, came to Spokane with a view to booking the pictures. Admission was raised to ten cents during this engagement.

A BUSINESS-LIKE EXHIBITOR.

Lee S. Forbes.

For seven years connected with the Greenlake State Bank of Seattle, the last part of which time he was cashier, Lee S. Forbes, with an associate, on February 17 of this year purchased the former Clem theater from Dr. H. S Clemmer, which he has since operated as the Class A theater.

Despite the fact tha his previous busines experience was no along picture lines, Mr Forbes has forged to the front rank among Spokane exhibitors and after having his hous the home of the mixed program in Spokane for several months, has signed for the Mutual Masterpictures and Mutual Weekly, which are playing to large audiences at an increase in price from 10 to 15 cents, he having run his house as a 10-cent house while showing the mixed program.

In connection with the change of program he changed from three changes a week to two changes a week and reports that the entire policy has been a good one. He has also made improvements on his theater and added another machine to provide against delay should one machine get out of order.

CLEMMER, LEADING EXHIBITOR

H. S. Clemmer.

Formerly a dentist, Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer and Casino theaters, Spokane, Wash., is one of the leading moving picture exhibitors in the Northwest. He is a live wire advertising man, was formerly president and still is active in the Spokane Ad Club. He was born in a little town in the mountains of Pennsylvania in 1873, was graduated from the Lake Forest University, dental department, Chicago, in 1896, and practiced dentistry steadily from that time until 1911, when at the death of his father, the late John H. Clemmer, one of the pioneer picture exhibitors of the Northwest, he succeeded his father in the business as manager of the, then, Clem and the Casino theaters.

Dr. Clemmer started using split service at both the Clem and the Casino and was the first to present the Progressive, later the Paramount pictures in Spokane, at advanced prices of 15 to 25 cents. He showed these in the Clem theater. He still restains the management of the Casino theater and took over the new theater, erected at Lincoln street and Sprague avenue, with a seating capacity of 1,000, in February, 1915, naming it the Clemmer. At that time he disposed of the Clem theater to Lee S. Forbes, who named it the Class A. Dr. Clemmer runs the Paramount program in the new picture theater and also ran the "Birth of a Nation." He is running the Fox service and the Big Four Pictures in the Casino theater.

He has just arranged to run the new "J. Rufus Wallingford" pictures put out by the Pathe Exchange and will start them Nov. 17.

Exhibitor Kratzer Will Open House at Colfax.

Edward Kratzer, formerly of the Pastime theater, Potlatch, Idaho, and also former manager of the Bungalow theater, Colfax, Wash., will open a new moving picture house at Colfax, according to word brought to Spokane by an exchange man.

L. Wingham Booking for Pathe.

Hager Makes Bookings.

G. A. Hager, manager of the Universal Film & Supply Company exchange, in Spokane, Wash., and who also does the road work for the exchange in this territory, returned from a trip in Montana and Idaho. He reports that L. J. Carter, of the Rex theater, Thompson Falls, Mont., has signed to run the full weekly service of the company; that Manager W. A. Simon of the Isis theater, Wallace, Idaho, has signed for the same service; that T. E. Edmondston, manager of the Lyric theater, Grangeville, Idaho, has signed to run some of the Universal service and Broadway features, and that G. Buzelle, of Moscow, Idaho, will start the Universal service in the Casino theater, Moscow, at once.

At Spokane Houses.

"The Thief," with Dorothy Donnelly as the star, had a successful run at the Majestic. Charles Chaplin in "By the Sea," and Lottie Pickford in "Desperate Chances," the fifteen chapter of "A Diamond From the Sky," drew well at the Lyric theater. "The White Pearl," with Marie Doro in the leading role, and a Globe film entitled "How Plants Grow in Winter," played to large audiences at each performance at the Clemmer. "The Better Woman," the Lenora Ulrich picture, proved a profitable production for the Liberty. Frederick Perry in "The Family Stain," drew big crowds to the Casino the past week. B. W. Copeland purchased the interests of C. D. Robinson in the Rex theater, acquiring the control of the company. He has acted as manager of the theater since its inception and will continue in that capacity.

A. Johnson of the Metro Service, Seattle, visited Spokane during the week.

MONTREAL NEWS LETTER.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Another Exchange.

ANOTHER exchange has entered the local field, The Kleine-Edison Feature Service. The offices are located at 204 St. Catherine street West. In charge is Charles L. Stevens, who hails from Toronto.

At the time of writing, "Du Barry," the big Kleine feature, is before the censors. If it is passed it will be used as an opener for the World Film People's new house, the Connaught. "Du Barry" was at first passed by the censors, but the next day was recalled for further examination.

S. H. Kippan Tells of New Quebec House.

S. H. Kippan, of Quebec, and representing the Imperial Theater Company, Inc., was in Montreal recently, and the World man had the pleasure of meeting him. Things are not so slow down in that locality. His company has had work started on a new theater. It will seat 850 and will be thoroughly fireproof. An up-to-date ventilation system will be installed and it is the aim of the promoters to make it the handsomest house "down Quebec way."

Thompson Leaves the London.

Last issue of Montreal news in this paper contained an announcement relative to W. R. Thompson's management of the London. Since that item was written Mr. Thompson has several connections with the London theater.

TWO TORONTO HOUSES MADE OVER LIKE NEW.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE two oldest moving picture theaters in Toronto have just been remodeled and redecorated by Mr. Bert Applegarth, manager of both houses. The two theaters are the Crystal Palace, 141 Yonge street, and the Red Mill, 183 Yonge street, both of which were opened about eight years ago.

The Crystal Palace is being refurnished throughout at a cost of $2,500, and the new features include an entirely new front, mahogany frames for posters, a National cash register ticket machine, upholstered seats, two new Powers projecting machines, indirect electric lighting and new entrances. This theater was the first in Canada to have a mirror screen, and it was installed three years ago. Something new in exterior finishes is seen in the bird's eye maple panels and trim in the theater front. A Famous Players' program is used at this theater regularly.

The seating capacity of the Crystal Palace is 350, while that at the Red Mill is 250. The Red Mill has just been equipped with two new Power's projecting machines, while a gold fibre screen has been installed. At both houses the posters are now contained in handsome frames which are fitted with plate glass. The Red Mill, as well as the Crystal Palace, has a new National ticket machine.

A Very Interesting Picture.

A representative of the government has just brought to Canada, from England, a moving picture which shows the life of a Canadian Soldier from the time he enlists at Victoria, B. C., on the Pacific Ocean, until he reaches the firing line after having crossed the Atlantic. These films are to be exhibited throughout the Dominion under the guidance of the Militia Department, which is Canada's war bureau, for the purpose of stimulating recruiting.

One of the most interesting features of the reels is the unique reproduction of the chart of the battle of St. Julien, France, with the lines of the Canadians and Germans moving backward and forward as the sanguinary fight progressed.

At the Universal Exchange.

"We have not lost a reel since the war began, fifteen months ago," declared Mr. Clair Hague, of Toronto, general manager of the Canadian Universal, with branches throughout Canada, in reference to the state of the film industry in the Dominion. "The Universal is supplying films to over fifty of the eighty-three moving picture theaters in Toronto, and although there are slightly fewer theaters here than when the war began, the volume of our business has not decreased."

Mr. Hague pointed out to your correspondent that "The Broken Coin" serial had broken all records and that 125 houses would be supplied with the two sets of this film before the run would be concluded. This had been accomplished without the aid of the newspapers, but he believes that even a better demand would have been secured if the story had been run as a serial in the papers in coordination with the film installments. In a few weeks the new "Graft" series will be started in Canada and arrangements will be made for the publication of the sixteen stories in the dailies.

"Cabiria" Comes to Toronto.

The first run of "Cabiria," the Italian Film Company's spectacular production of Gabrielle D'Annunzio's scenario in Toronto, was seen at the Madison, Bloor and Bathurst streets, last week, when a special matinee was held each day and two shows were held at night at 10 and 15 cent prices. The theater was well patronized.

Not Melodramas, But Real War Films Are What's Wanted.

A sign of the times was seen when a war melodrama, widely advertised as "Not a Moving Picture," staged at one of the best theaters in Toronto, drew very poorly, and a score or more of moving picture houses, showing war films as a part of their programs, enjoyed great business during the same week. The idea struck Toronto theater-goers that the speaking stage must be becoming frightened at the competition with moving pictures.

Walter H. Davidson with Universal.

Mr. Walter H. Davidson, formerly with the Pathe, is now special representative of the Canadian Universal in the Province of Ontario, Canada.

Censor Overruled

British Columbia Spectators Will See "The Spoilers" Though Banned by the Provincial Censor—Attorney-General Bowser to the Rescue—Sam Whitehead, George Broy and Hector Quagliotti Win Their Fight.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE most important announcement ever made to the exhibitors of British Columbia is involved in the statement by Attorney-General Bowser at Victoria on Nov. 3, that he had passed the Selig masterpiece, "The Spoilers," over the head of the protesting censor. This is the first time that the Attorney-General has reversed a decision of the local censor, and, in fact, the first time that an adverse decision has been contested.

Following the rejection of the picture in Vancouver last week, an interview was had with Mr. Bowser, in Victoria, by George L. Broy and Sam W. Whitehead, holders of the Canadian rights, and Manager Hector Quagliotti of the Colonial theater. To these three men belongs the credit of demonstrating to the moving picture men of the Province that the way to beat the censor is to fight him. No assistance was received from other exhibitors or exchangemen, nor from the lately deceased British Columbia Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association, so the results which might be obtained by an active, aggressive organization can well be imagined.

"The Spoilers" opens at the Colonial in Vancouver Nov. 14, at 20-30-50 cents prices, and capacity business is expected.

It would seem that the exhibitors of British Columbia now have a splendid opportunity to secure saner standards in the censor's office. The way has been shown.

WINNIPEG PASSES "NATION" FILM.

For some time there was considerable doubt in Winnipeg as to whether "The Birth of a Nation" would be passed by the local board of censors, consisting of J. W. Horne, T. A. D. Bevington, Sam Clarke and Frank Kerr. However it was finally decided to pass the picture with the elimination of scenes showing women in distress over the presence of war, thus concealing from the intelligent populace the fact that anyone who goes to war is apt to get hurt. Mayor Waugh of Winnipeg used his influence in favor of the picture, which opens a two weeks' run at the Walker Theater on November 22.

The Empress at Kamloops Opens.

The Empress theater at Kamloops, B. C., which has been dark for some time, was opened last week by Messrs. Brown and Guerrard, who celebrated the occasion by engaging several local soloists to assist. Music is furnished by a seven-piece orchestra, and prices are ten and fifteen cents. Both the Empress and the Kamloops opera house (W. A. Wilkinson, manager) are running excellent programs and using large advertising space in the newspapers.

S. B. Taube Goes to New York.

S. B. Taube, formerly manager of the Universal Exchange in Vancouver, left with his family for New York Sunday night. It is stated that Mr. Taube will enter the service of the Universal in some Eastern city on the American side.

Admit Wounded Soldiers Free.

The Royal Victoria, Columbia, Empress, Variety, Dominion, Romano, Pantages and Princess theaters in Victoria, B. C., will hereafter admit free all soldiers who have returned from the front. It will only be necessary for a soldier to display his badge to gain admittance.

Vancouver Brief Notes.

The Orpheum in Vancouver closed at 6 o'clock one night last week, Manager Pilling having rented the house to the Daughters of the Empire, who presented an entertaining revue in aid of the Patriotic Fund.

The Alhambra Theater & Hotel Company, with headquarters in New Westminster, B. C., was incorporated at Victoria last week. The company is capitalized at $300,000.

The Rose theater at Regina, Sask., inaugurated its V-L-S-E service last week with Essanay's "The Man Trail." The orchestra has been increased to eight pieces.

Grace Aylesworth, wife of Arthur Aylesworth, and formerly leading woman at the Lyceum theater at Edmonton, Alberta, is now with the World Film Corporation. Arthur took the famous Aylesworth wild animal pictures in the country north of Edmonton. George Aylesworth, formerly manager of the Lyceum, is now in charge of the Princess theater at Calgary.

Moving pictures of the review of the Winnipeg Boy Scouts by H. R. H. The Duke of Connaught, taken by Robert Kershaw of the Wonderland theater in that city were shown for an entire week at Pantages theater, and attracted much attention.

Appeals for recruits were thrown on the screens of all Victoria moving picture theaters on Oct. 30. This is regularly done in Winnipeg houses, and the slides shown also state the number of men required by different battalions, as well as the location of recruiting stations to which application for enlistment should be made. This system is proving quite effective.

The Western Animated Advertising Company, with its principal place of business in Winnipeg, has been incorporated in Manitoba for $50,000.

"The Closing Net" (Gold Rooster Play) was rejected by the censor in Vancouver last week. This occasioned no surprise, however, as such a result had been foreseen by those in touch with the censorship situation here. Unless the exchange is prepared to fight, it is useless to bring to British Columbia a film which has been condemned anywhere else in the world.

An entertainment in aid of the South Vancouver Soldiers' and Sailors' Mothers and Wives Red Cross Branch was given at the Fraser Avenue theater in South Vancouver recently.

Charles E. Couche, manager of the Rex at Revelstoke, B. C., has given up the house and combined with his erstwhile competitor, W. A. Smythe, in the management of the Empress there. "The Diamond from the Sky" has been transferred to the Empress from the Rex. The latter house has been taken over by Caspar Van, a former Vancouver stock actor, lately in charge of the Lonsdale theater in North Vancouver.

Twenty-five disabled soldiers, recently returned from France, were the guests of Manager E. J. Sullivan of the Orpheum at Winnipeg, Manitoba, one afternoon last week. Moving pictures were shown of the Duke of Connaught reviewing the Canadian troops stationed at Sewell Camp, near Winnipeg.

Manager Kershaw of the Wonderland theater, Winnipeg, did capacity business recently, when he showed moving pictures of the Mulvey Street school children. The children and their parents kept the house packed.

VITAGRAPH.

ONE PLUS ONE EQUALS ONE (Nov. 29).—The cast: Bobby Connelly, Tefft Johnson, Mabel Kelly, Mae Greene, Arthur Cozine.

Sonny Jim is sent to school and when teacher thoughtlessly gives him a vacant seat with the girls he is made the object of derision by the other boys. Becoming tired of their bullying, he tells Uncle Billy, and the latter jokingly tells Sonny he will go with him to school and "trim the bullies." He does go, but forgets all else when he sees the pretty lady teacher, and it is a case of love at first sight on both sides. Uncle Billy suggests Sonny be put over in the boys' side of the room, and teacher promises to see that the boys leave him alone. Every day thereafter Uncle Billy accompanies Sonny to school and enjoys a quiet chat with the teacher. During the absence of Mother Dear and the cook, Uncle Billy tries to cook, but his efforts make Sonny very sick. Lady Teacher comes to see him and offers to cook one big dinner for the men. All are delighted and during the meal Billy announces he is going to marry Teacher. Seeing Billy take Teacher in his arms Sonny when asked the addition of "One and one" answers promptly "One!"

THE MYSTERY OF THE EMPTY ROOM (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 30).—The cast: William Dangman, Ethel Corcoran, John Costello, Alice Lake, Florence Natol, Roland Osborne.

Ruth Harris and her father, while on a hunting trip, stop over night at Scroogles' Inn, a dreary place kept by an evil, grasping old couple. They have a poor little drudge of a girl, who lives in an imaginary land of her own and thinks Ruth is surely a beautiful fairy princess. That night the Scroogles creep into her father's room, rob him, and thinking him dead, throw the body over a cliff. They remove everything from the room and next morning, when Ruth inquires for her father, they tell her she is crazy, that she came alone to the Inn.

Bewildered, the girl does not know what to do until she thinks of Richard Foster, a young artist she had met earlier in the day. She tells him, and with his help, they find a cap belonging to her father, and accuse the Scroogles of foul play. Rendered desperate, the old couple attempt a dash for freedom, but in the fight which takes place the old woman is accidentally shot and killed by Scroogles, who escapes into the woods. After a running fight he is shot. He dies as a result of the wound and Ruth and Foster, now engaged, institute a search for her father. They find him wandering dazedly about the mountains, but after careful nursing he fully recovers from his terrible experience, and the little drudge is made happy by being taken into Ruth's home and adopted by Mr. Harris. But the memory of that "empty room" in the old Inn is indelibly impressed upon Ruth's memory, and many times she gives thanks for the narrow escape they all had.

BIOGRAPH.

Absorbed in his business affairs, Philip Carter seems to neglect Elice, his wife, and Harvey Beck takes advantage of his dereliction to woo her. She repulses him as a good wife should, and goes to her husband; but Philip, engrossed in a discussion with his lawyer, waves her away. Mortified, she decides to throw in her lot with Beck, and takes her child. But Beck wants her unencumbered, and while they are discussing the matter Carter comes on the scene. He takes the child from Elice and bids her go. At the station, while waiting for the train, Elice sees an outcast shivering in the cold, and gives the girl her coat. The train is wrecked, and Beck is killed.

The outcast, wearing Elice's coat, is identified as Mrs. Carter, and Philip, stunned by the tragedy, leaves his native place and establishes quarters in New York. Elice secures employment in a fashionable modiste's shop, and is eventually taken into partnership. Her son, Robert, grown to manhood, is engaged to Edith Hollis, daughter of a Wall Street operator. Edith and Robert visit the modiste's, and Elice beholds her son. The modiste, dying, bequeaths the business to Elice. Carter leads a bull movement on the exchange. Informed that Carter is fighting him, Hollis gives battle, and Carter has his back to the wall. Hollis forces Edith to break her engagement with the son of his enemy. Elice, a witness to the scene, goes with the girl and Robert to Carter's home, and enters his private room just as he is about to commit suicide. At sight of his wife's ghost Carter lets fall the pistol. A moment later Robert and Edith enter. While the boy is learning that Elice is his mother, Carter's lawyer arrives with the news that ruin is averted, Elice having secretly pledged her fortune to his support.

THE REPROACH OF ANNESLEY (Special—Three Parts—November 24).—The cast: Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale, Herbert Barrington, Jack Drumeir, Gus Pixley.

Home on furlough, Lieutenant Edward Annesley visits his cousin Paul, a prosperous young physician. Paul's best friends are Gervase Rickman, an attorney, Rickman's sister, and his ward, Alice Lingard, a wealthy orphan. Edward falls in love with Alice and does not at first notice the jealousy which consumes his cousin. At last Paul asks Edward to go away and let him win Alice. Annesley agrees to go away for three months. Rickman, who also loves Alice, speculates with her fortune and loses heavily. Miss Rickman's health fails, and her brother takes her to France. Alice accompanies them, and Paul follows. Unknown to them, Annesley is also touring in the mountains. Paul puts his fortune to the test and learns that Alice loves his cousin. Leaving the party, he comes face to face with Annesley.

A quarrel ensues, and Paul, after attacking Annesley, staggers over the cliff into the lake below. Rickman, who has followed Paul, witnesses the scene and offers to back Annesley up in the claim that Paul's death was due to accident; but privily he tells Alice that her lover has murdered Paul, and poisons her mind against Annesley. Though never publicly accused of the murder, Annesley is shunned. Rickman's sister, dying, urges Alice to marry her brother. Edward, drawn by morbid thoughts to the scene of his quarrel with Paul, meets a monk who gazes at him for an instant and flees. In that instant he recognizes Paul. Later, he is again confronted by Paul in a vilage church where the monk preaches. Paul, who has been rescued by the monks, tells Edward that he has thought himself guilty of Edward's death, and has sought expiation in good works. Learning of Annesley's reproach, he declares that he will go home and right the wrong. Rickman presses Alice to marry him. On their wedding day Paul and Annesley arrive. Confronted with proof of his baseness, Rickman confesses, and Alice marries Annesley.

THE MAN FROM TOWN (Nov. 25).—The cast, Alan Hale, Isabel Rea.

Bored by her lonely life on the farm, the girl longs for the city. When a group of real estate sharks offer to buy the farm, she consents eagerly, and signs the deed; but before the bargain is concluded, the city boarder intervenes. Incensed, the girl nevertheless consents to wait before selling, and the city fellow's judgment is proven when the land grabbers write doubling their offer. The girl goes to town, carrying what she thinks is the deed; but the boarder has substituted blank paper while her back was turned. The swindlers, who see a way to get possession of the farm without paying for it, drug the girl and decamp with her bag after placing her in a taxicab. On opening the bag they discover that the signed deed is not in it, and rush back to the office, thinking it may have been mislaid.

Meanwhile the boarded, who has learned that the railroad will pay practically any price for the farm, goes to the office. He is met by police officers, whom the telephone central has summoned after hearing a cry for help from the swooning girl. The conspirators enter and are captured after a fight. Then the telephone bell rings; and the boarder, answering, hears the girl's voice. She is in a hospital. He rushes to her side, and vows that he will always watch over her in the future.

TWO DAUGHTERS OF EVE (November 26—Biograph Reissue No. 25).—The cast: Henry Walthall, Claire McDowell, Lillian Gish, Elmer Booth, Walter Miller, Gertrude Bambrick, Antonio Moreno, Madge Kirby.

Escaping from her mother, the child wanders into the theater through the stage door, and is later discovered in the arms of an actress. The mother, who looks down upon women of the stage, snatches her child from contamination. Later, her husband sees the play and becomes infatuated with the actress. When the wife discovers his flirtations, she leaves him, taking the child. Her search for work is unsuccessful, and at length she is driven to seek a position in the chorus.

On the stage, at rehearsal, she comes face to face with the actress whom formerly she disdained, and the siren has her hour of revenge. But her better nature triumphs, and she seeks the wife in her dressing room, where she returns the jewels heaped upon her by the husband. "They are yours," she exclaims. "I have no right to them. And now—may I kiss the baby?" On her way home she meets the husband, now ruined by her exactions, and advises him to return to his wife, who, touched by his penitence, forgive the past—for she loves him still.

KALEM.

THE LURING LIGHTS (Special—Four Parts—Nov. 29).—The cast: Stella Hoban, Corinne Malvern, Helen Lindroth, Frank Woods, Bradley Barker, Nat Sachs, Henry Hallam, Francis Cappelano, Stephen Purdee.

Anna, who lives with her harsh-tempered aunt, eagerly seizes the opportunity to join a traveling repertoire company. The girl and Darnton, the "villain" in the company, become deeply interested in each other, and because of Anna Darnton conquers his terrible craving for liquor. Later, when the troupe disbands in New York, Anna meets Rita. The girl makes the acquaintance of Marbridge, an agent of the worst type, and only her wit saves her from the man's clutches. Following a quarrel with Darnton, Anna foolishly consents to go autoing with Rita and the fast set with which the latter associates. The auto hurtles over an embankment and Anna alone escapes death.

A reconciliation with Darnton follows. Anna obtains a position in the company in which Darnton plays the villain. The girl receives her great opportunity when the star, whom she is understudying, is injured on the opening night. Enwright, the manager, learns of the love between the new star and Darnton. Fearing lest sentiment affect their work, he sends Darnton to head the Chicago company. But the separation depresses Anna so greatly that Enwright orders Darnton to return. The player comes back unknown to Anna and sudenly appears before her at the next performance. The ensuing scene thrills the audience, which never for a moment suspects that the heroine and the villain are secret lovers. But the moment the curtain has descended Anna walks into Darnton's arms. Her lips meet his.

ONLY A COUNTRY GIRL (Nov. 30).—The cast: Rube Miller, Bud Duncan, H. Griffith, Ethel Teare.

Having successfully outwitted Bud in securing both money and girl, Rube persuades Ethel to elope with him, but fate intervenes, their horse runs away and Ethel falls over a cliff, with the elopement ending disastrously. It was a day of misadventure for both Rube and Bud. They wandered into the country, visited Farmer Brown and for a while it looked as if they would actually have to go to work! But they overcome this handicap, and with the arrival of Ethel they at once establish a rivalry for her hand.

Farmer Brown, seeing the attraction his daughter has for the two, determines to end the flirtation at once, and puts Rube and Bud at beating carpets. Bud, however, spies Ethel, renews his suit, is overseen by Rube, who again enters the list, and both are driven away from

A THING OR TWO IN MOVIES (No. 4 of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center"—Two Parts—Nov. 22).—The cast: John Lancaster, Wm. Hutchison, Lyllian B. Leighton, Ralph McComas, Sidney Smith, Irene Wallace, Martha Mattox, Wm. Scott.

Selina Tubbs and Chubby Green, after taking a correspondence school course in the art of motion picture acting, practice in a field where Chubby hits Selina over the head with a club much to the consternation of Constable Plum, who is alarmed by their actions.

Bill Hardup, his charming leading lady, and a movie camera man enter Bloom Center, where the Bloom Center Motion Picture Company is formed with Selina Tubbs and Chubby Green in important roles. As the photoplay progresses, the scenario calls for Hardup to get a check cashed, and he tells the bank president that it will be all right to slip out real money during the taking of the scene. When the banker passes out the money, Hardup makes his getaway and with the leading lady and the camera man makes his escape from Bloom Center. A note is discovered on Hardup's camera which states that the people will see the picture as soon as it is censored.

Ewo weeks later the Bloom Cetner populace receives the film and all repair to Melodeon Hall to see it presented. Suddenly the entire action on the screen turns perpendicular and all fall off their seats trying to see it. When the picture is finally righted, the scene that is flashed is that of Constable Plum and the movie leading lady making love. Plum jumps from his seat and flees from the hall, and his wife and others follow him. The picture ends with him headed for the country and going at full speed.

HOW'S THIS FOR DURABILITY?
"I have an old STANDARD that has been thru a warm fire," writes Mr. H. C. Jones, of Laurel, Ind. "It melted the condensing lenses in the lamp house so they are now part of lens holder; the heat was so intense it caused the lower part or base of head to bend up ¼ inch. The stand was lost, and part of take-up gone. By rigging up, the old machine runs 'fine as silk,' and if I can get new parts without paying too much, well and good; if not, I'll run without them. I have two other machines, but like the STANDARD; it runs light, does good work and is heavy; I use the STANDARD most because I feel sure it is safe."

LOVE, PEPPER AND SWEETS (Dec. 3).—Jabbs is the star boarder and favorite of Betty, the landlady, while Pokes and Runt—two other boarders—always suffer the worst end of things. After a very scant breakfast Pokes and Jabbs take a walk through the park when Ethel—some queen!—attracts their attention. An acquaintance is soon formed, but, as usual, Jabbs spoils their happiness by passing along and taking Ethel away.

She invites Jabbs into her house and he accepts the invitation. The indignant Pokes and Runt, who have been following, decide to bombard the house. Their bombardment is unsuccessful, however, and the two conspirators are treated to a bath of milk and milk bottles for their pains.

Jabbs decides to play a joke on them and has Ethel invite them to call upon her that afternoon at the same hour; but neither knows that the other has been invited. Overjoyed, they prepare for the call—one with candy and the other with a bouquet of flowers. Jabbs prepares to receive them. The result of his preparations are that the candy and flowers are smeared with pepper, which is the cause of Ethel's fainting. Jabbs, disguised as her father, follows them with a pistol and their affections are cooled by a refreshing ducking in the lake. Oh, you can't get ahead of a star boarder!

FLORENCE TURNER IMPERSONATES FILM FAVORITES (Nov. 25).—Florence, the hired girl, is a film fan. She practically lives at the moving picture shows and worships the different stars. One afternoon she sneaks away to the movies, but is caught by her mistress and ordered back to the house. But her mind is still on the picture show and, getting back home, she falls asleep and dreams:

She applies for a position as movie actress and, on telling her capabilities to the hard-hearted director he responds with an "Oh, that's what they all say"—but she is undaunted and obtains his permission to show him what she can do.

She first gives an impersonation of the French Pathe heroine. Next she dons the attire of Ford Sterling and goes through many of his comical antics. She then assumes the role of Wild West Billy and puts in a lot of the cowboy stuff. Then she reverts to the old Biograph style of acting with her impression of it. This is followed by an impersonation of Mabel Normand in one of her slapstick roles. And she even attempts an impersonation of the Divine Sarah. The manager thinks her talents are remarkable and is just offering her a thousand dollars a week when—she wakes up.

Here he meets Dora, who more than interests him, but is watched closely by Joe Lucas, who is jealous. Next morning Ramon starts for camp, but returns to the cabin for his field glasses. Dora is alone and he is about to kiss her hand when he is shot by Joe. Joe is captured by the chief engineer and forced to tell Ramon's whereabouts. Through Dora, Ramon learns a way through the mountains and gets the $10,000. They are married shortly after.

A NIGHT IN THE SHOW (Charles Chaplin Subject—Two parts—Nov. 15).—Charles Chaplin decided to go to the show for an evening's entertainment. He wants to see it so badly that he appears in a double role, that of a "swell" in evening clothes in the dress circle and a rowdy in the gallery.

He visits many cafes on the way and arrives in a supercritical mood. His seat in the second row doesn't satisfy him and he moves to the front, mussing up other people on the way. The orchestra leader strikes him with his baton and a free-for-all fight is started. Chaplin is hurled into the lobby, where he bumps into a fat woman and knocks her into a fountain.

Chaplin drops asleep and several snakes, from the "charmer's" basket, nest in his lap. He brushes them into the orchestra and the audience stampedes. In the gallery, Chaplin, the rowdy, bombards a couple of singers with ice cream and tomatoes. Chaplin, in the box, assists by besmirching the singers with the cakes a fat boy is eating.

When a fire-eater makes his bow, Chaplin, the rowdy, turns the hose on him. Chaplin, the "swell" in the box, gets a ducking, as does most of the audience, and the show is broken up.

A BIT OF LACE (Special—Three Parts—Nov. 16).—The cast: Darwin Karr, Edna Mayo, Sydney Ainsworth.

Bruce Carton, having made his fortune, returns from the west to find his old college chum Douglas Fenwick married and a struggling clerk. Out of sympathy, Carton engages him as his private secretary. Fenwick, taking advantage of Carton's confidence, takes money that does not belong to him. By chance Carton receives a letter which enlightens him, and Fenwick is discharged. Fenwick tells his wife Carton's suspicions are unfounded, but, fearing prosecution, sends his wife to Carton's apartment to steal the letter. Carton discovers her and makes known to her the real facts, after which Mrs. Fenwick decides to leave her husband.

INSIDE FACTS (Nov. 28).—The cast: Jack Nelson, Myrtle Gonzales, Burton Wilson, Hayward Mack.

Madge Van Zant is a wealthy girl and her father is the owner of a large factory, which employs a number of women and girls. The superintendent of the factory makes a proposition to the owner to cut the wages of all the employes. The owner, being ignorant of the true conditions existing in his factory, allows the superintendent to persuade him to authorize the cut.

Tom Jordan, a factory employe, with ideas for the betterment of his fellow workers, goes to the owner and intercedes with him to restore the wages, which were meagre enough at best. He enlists the sympathy of Miss Van Zant and she adds her plea to his. The owner promises to reconsider the matter and asks for a few days to think it over. Madge determines to learn conditions in the factory at first hand, and, pretending to go on a visit, she in reality goes to the factory as a poor girl and seeks employment. She learns how the poor live and is much touched by their kindness to her. She attracts the unwelcome attention of the superintendent and is rescued from insult at his hands by Jordan, who, of course, is ignorant of her real identity.

The next day both are dismissed from the factory by the superintendent. Madge returns to her home and tells her father of the conditions under which the factory is run. He sends for the superitendent and in the library he meets the heiress. The superintendent is bland and meek and attempts to deny conditions as she has stated them. Suddenly she steps behind the curtain and emerges as the factory girl. The superintendent is dumfounded ed. His dismissal follows shortly afterward and the management of the factory is entrusted to Tom Jordan. There is a promise of better times and perhaps the friendship of Madge.

John Stanhope, a young mayor, receives a letter from Bishop Melford, begging him to destroy Dragon Alley. John finds that these houses are owned by his best friend, Wallace Elton, who has that same day escorted the former's wife, Ruth, to a musicale which John has been too busy to attend. John finds the buildings have been condemned, and gives orders that they be raided and torn down that evening. Wallace and the political boss try to prevent the Mayor from carrying out his plans, but they are unsuccessful. Wallace and the boss then plan to resist an attack that night pending the gathering of political influence the next day to defeat the order.

In the meantime, Lucette Revere is surprised by Jim Ogden, an old pal. A few years previous she and Jim had been caught stealing from the home of Wallace Elton. Wallace had Jim sent to the penitentiary; but as Lucette was pretty, he saved her from a like fate and established her as his mistress. Jim vowed vengeance, and upon his return he tells Lucette that he is going to kill Wallace. While talking, the door bell rings. Jim hides, and Lucette admits Wallace. Wallace is tired of Lucette and says he is going to England the next day, alone. Wallace exits and Lucette finds Jim has sneaked out also.

While at home, the Mayor receives notice of the contemplated attack on Dragon Alley. His wife, Ruth, is left alone again, and is piqued. When Wallace calls, he finds her in a receptive mood for his advances and prevails upon her to elope with him.

Lucette has gone to Wallace's apartment and finds Wallace is not there. She hears the servant answer a 'phone call, however, in which Wallace asks his valet to bring his grip to the Stanhope home. Lucette also leaves for the Stanhope home. Jim has followed Wallace to the Stanhope home, and while Ruth is upstairs getting ready to leave, Jim sneaks in the dining room to investigate. A fight ensues, in which Jim is seriously wounded and Elton is killed. Ruth rushes down stairs and finds the dead body and picks up the revolver. John has returned home, hears the shots while unlocking the front door, rushes in, gets his revolver from the library table and enters the dining room with it in his hand. Husband and wife confront each other, and each one thinks the other has committed the murder.

At this juncture Lucette enters, and also the political boss. He takes in the situation and sneeringly says to John: "I guess you'd better clean up at home before you start on Dragon Alley." Ruth steps forward, trying to shield her husband, and claims she murdered Elton. John tries to claim he did it, but the Boss opens the weapons and finds that only Ruth's revolver has been discharged. He then tries to get the Mayor to allow the prisoners taken that night to go free, and submit to his terms. Just then the police enter and say they have come for the body, as they picked up a wounded man who had in his possession Ruth's pocket book containing her card, and who told them that he had just killed a man. The Boss finds himself thoroughly outdone and departs, leaving Ruth and John together, with a more thorough understanding of each other's love.

Adored by her Grandfather Antone, Little Nor'wester grows up to know none of the restrictions of her sex. With the men she is out at sun-up fishing, sharing their rough fare, facing the storms, fearing nothing. There are two brothers among the fishermen, Silent Jim and his younger brother, Jack. Both are in love with Little Nor'wester, but neither have spoken to her of marriage. There is also among the crew a foreigner known as Beppo, the Greaser, who also loves Nor'wester, and asks her to marry him. During a frightful storm at sea, Grandfather Antone is killed, and Litle Nor'wester comes face to face with tragedy. None can do anything with her until Jim steps in. Always a wild little creature, Little Nor'wester becomes, after her Grandfather Antone's death, more lawless than ever. Although she will not admit Jack to her home, Jim insists upon entering and tells her that whether she wants him to or not, he is going to watch over her as he does over his mother and brother.

Jack falls in with a rough crew and has begun to drink. One night while on the beach Little Nor'wester meets Beppo. He tries to seize her. She struggles and as she does so, Jack, half intoxicated, chances along. He sobers at sight of the struggle and breaks in, giving Beppo a good beating. Then he takes the girl home. Unconscious of the late hour, Little Nor'wester, finding that Jack has been cut, tells him to come in while she bathes his cheek. He does so, and, after she has bathed it, he attempts to make love to her. She orders him away, but he will not go. Jim, searching for his brother, happens to pass by, and, hearing voices, enters the house. Furious at Jack, he orders him home. Jack sneers at Jim and says that he wouldn't interfere if he wasn't in love with the girl himself. Jim leaves them. Jack waits a few minutes longer trying to make peace with Little Nor'wester, but she won't speak to him and he goes. As he leaves the house Beppo, still nursing his wound, passes, and, seeing Jack leaving at so late an hour, plans to ruin the girl by scandal. Jim overhears the men on the docks talking about Jack and the girl, and, finding that Beppo is the cause, flies at him in rage. It is Jack who saves him from murdering the greaser, and Jim, taking Jack aside, tells him what is being said and urges that he marry Little Nor'wester at once. The banns are read in the church and the young people are restored to the favor of the community.

After the first reading of the banns Little Nor'wester escapes to the beach to be alone with her thoughts. There she finds a little girl crying because she cannot reach a wild flower that grows high on a cliff. Nor'wester starts to climb the cliff just as Jim appears. Wild with fear for her safety, he determines to cut her off and starts to ascend the Devil's Pass. When she sees the danger he is in she calls out to him that she will go no farther, but even as she calls he loses his footing and falls to the water below. Jim is badly hurt. Nor'wester nurses him devotedly through the long weeks of his illness until he grows better.

When Jim is able to speak, he urges her to marry Jack, but she tells him that it is he whom she wants. Jack enters, and joins their hands. "I'm not blind," he says. "I've guessed the truth for a long time." Thus Little Nor'wester marries Jim after all.

WHEN WILLIE WENT WILD (Nov. 23).—The cast: Billy Mason, Victor Potel, C. W. Bachman, Teddy Martin.

The Hon. Willie Pepper, son of the Duke of Worcestershire, is sent West by his titled father in hopes that "rubbing elbows" with real men will cure the Hon. Willie of his snobbishness. The Hon. Willie, accompanied by his valet, "Slim" Hoover, arrives at Coyote Center, where he is given the "Tenderfoot Treatment" by the town denizens—but finds a temporary joy in the smiles of Senorita Maria Enchilada.

The arrival of Don Ferocio, Maria's looney lover, who attempts to puncture the Hon. Willie with a stiletto, brings the transient romance to a near tragic end. In escaping from the Don, Willie falls over the balcony of the Enchilada hacienda and alights on the Don's horse. The horse, failing to understand Willie's intentions, throws him through the saloon window. Coming to the conclusion that a "six shooter" commands more respect in Coyote Center than a "title," the Hon. Willie cleans out the saloon, and wins the respect of the town people, and, incidentally, develops into a "regular fellow."

STOLEN HEARTS AND NICKELS (Two Parts—Nov. 24).—Teh cast: Billie Ritchie, Reggie Morris, Louise Orth.

Bill was a street car conductor. After the day's work he went out to look over the ladies in the park, but, meeting Sarah Green and her escort, Reggie, he experienced some unpleasant adventures. Sarah also had a sister and Reggie and Bill and the two sisters got into some very uncomfortable situations.

It didn't end in the park, as later both girls wanted the same bracelet and Bill and Reg tried to get it. How this turned out is left unexplained for good and sufficient reasons. Also a robbery perpetrated on a jeweler redounded to Bill's credit and almost put him in disgrace with the girls. The whole unpleasantness ended at midnight and with a balloon in which Bill tried to get away. It is also understood that Bill got fired from his paying run and someone else is knocking down jitneys there.

THE TRAP THAT FAILED (Nov. 24).—The cast: Duke Aldis, Murdock MacQuarrie, Arthur Moon, Edna Payne.

John Osborne is seated in the club engaged in a discussion with Harmon Dupree. Osborne holds that environment is the power that guides the destinies of men and women; and to prove his theory, tells Dupree that he will pick up the first down-and-outer they encounter, install him as secretary in his home, and watch results. As Osborne and Dupree are leaving the club a short time later, they encounter a tramp trying to make a "touch" from their chauffeur. Osborne sees in his man a fit subject for his test, and, taking him in tow, brings him to his house and offers him a position as secretary. The tramp consents.

To further prove the theory, Dupree makes a further suggestion. He holds that, once a thief, always a thief; and, gathering from their subject's appearance when they found him, that he no doubt has at one time served a prison term, Dupree tells Osborne that he will pretend that he has just gotten into his (Osborne's) good graces for the purpose of robbing him of the famous Osborne necklace, and asks Osborne, for the occasion of the test he has in mind, to transfer the necklace from the safety deposit vault to his safe at home; that he (Dupree) will rob the safe of the necklace at a time when only the secretary is at the house; that he will let the secretary catch him in the act, and then offer him half of the swag if he will remain silent. The plan sounds plausible to Osborne, and he consents.

The following day he transfers the necklace to his safe at home, and that evening, accompanied by his wife, Osborne goes to the theater, leaving Dupree at home with the secretary. Before leaving, as pre-arranged between Osborne and Dupree, the former closes the safe, but does not lock it. After the departure of Osborne and his wife, Durpee, on the pretense that he wishes a message delivered, succeeds in getting the secretary away from the house for a short time. He then opens the safe, and secures the necklace. As he is about to leave the house, the secretary bars his way and makes him a prisoner. Dupree offers the secretary half of the jewels if he will allow him to escape. The secretary summons Osborne home by telephone.

As Osborne is in the act of explaining to the secretary the joke they played on him, he is amazed to see the secretary pull back his coat and display a secret service badge. The secretary then introduces himself as Frank Harwood, a secret service operator, and also discloses Dupree as an international crook, whom he has been trailing for some time.

IN SEARCH OF A WIFE (Two Parts—Nov. 23).—The cast: Herbert Rawlinson, Agnes Vernon, Marjorie Beardsley, Barney Fuery, T. D. Crittenden, Helen Wright.

John Randall lives with his father and mother and has not yet engaged in any business for himself. Mary Trevor, Randall's ward, is staying at the Randall home. She is very plain and rather unattractive to John, who longs for girls with more class and style. Mary is secretly in love with John, but keeps in the background. It is John's birthday. He goes to the office and his father offers him an interest in the firm, but John is not ready to settle down as his father's partner in the insurance business and tells Randall, Sr., that he intends to go to the city and look around. The father says nothing to discourage him and when he gets ready to leave, gives John plenty of money so he wil want for nothing. When John is ready to depart, his father shows him a list of kinds of girls to avoid: the silly girl, the extravagant girl, the jealous girl, the slovenly girl, the fat girl, the lean girl, the vain girl and the hypochondriac girl.

Arrived in the city, John meets Velda Clay, a flirt, and begins paying attention to her. Velda has a very jealous admirer, Earl Boyd, but she throws him over for the time being for John. For some time John spends his money on her, taking her to various places. At last Boyd interrupts them as they are in Velda's apartments and a fight takes place between John and him, in which John is victorious. This, however, gains Velda's sympathy for her defeated suitor and she dismisses John for good. He goes back to his apartments to find a letter from home, asking him to come back to Thanksgiving dinner. A vision of Mary appears to him and John resolves to go back and see her. He hurriedly packs and starts home.

It is Thanksgiving. At home no word has come from John and the father and mother are about to give him up, just as John arrives. All are glad to see him and preparations are made for the big dinner, Mary and Mrs. Randall being busy at work in the kitchen. John, left alone before the fire in the living room, remembers the note given him by his father before he left, concerning the various kinds of girls. As he holds the note in his hand, he falls asleep and he dreams that he meets each one of them. He is awakened by Mary, who has come to tell him that dinner is ready. After a merry meal, John, alone with his father, tells him that he was right about the girls. Mary comes in and his father leaves them alone. After a love scene, John proposes and is accepted. Then he goes to his father and tells him that after all he has decided to accept the position in the office, for Mary has promised to marry him.

REX.

THE CIRCUS (Nov. 13).—Baby Early looks out of the window. A circus parade is passing the house preliminary to the big show that afternoon in the town. Baby Early knew it was going to take place, and, unfortunately, her father was not like other fathers, and detested the circus himself, so that the old adage of taking the kids to the circus did not appeal to him. Consequently Baby Early decided that she would have a circus of her own, and straightaway scampered for the back fence to call on the neighbors' kids. When they learned the glad tidings each went for his own makeup, and the circus was staged in Early's back yard. Ted, Early's brother, said he would get Murphy's goat, and straightaway climbed through the hole in the fence into the next yard and came back with the first animal for the grand zoo.

Incidentally Murphy did not know anything about it. Each of the kids brought a costume. Edith robbed the clothes line of her mother's shirtwaist and duck skirt, Tommy brought his father's dress suit and very best tile, while Early appeared in a costume suggesting a beautiful movie queen, bowing to her audience as though she were appearing on the screen. Two of the boys constructed a very primitive looking elephant, and straightaway named him Nero. With the aid of pillows and an old gingham wrapper a very satisfactory fat lady was constructed, while a feather duster contributed largely to the bearded lady. The wild man of Borneo, Bosco, the dog-faced boy, the three-legged calf, the living skeleton, lions, tigers, hyenas, giraffes, all in grotesque caricatures of themselves, formed the mammoth street parade behind Willie, with the dish-pan drum.

It certainly was a big show and might have lasted until all the tots became tired had not Willie become peeved at Ted's attentions to Baby Early and gone into the big tent to sulk. Not content with that, he brought a calamity upon the whole outfit when he sneaked out and told Murphy that his goat was being maltreated and degraded into a circus prop. Murphy, highly indignant, brought the cop, and he furnished a grand finale to the proceedings.

THE RING OF DESTINY (Two Parts—Nov. 18).—The cast: Cleo Madison, Hoot Gibson, Joe King and Billie Gettinger.

Jack and Dolly, his sister, live together in the West. On Jack's birthday, Dolly presents him with a peculiar ring. The brother and sister attend a masquerade ball that evening, each dressed in the other's clothes. Dolly, being taken for a man, meets Big Bill, a new ranchman, and he offers her a cigar, which she tries to smoke. Jack sees her in distress, and, coming to her rescue, is introduced as the sister. The next morning Jack leaves to look over his stock. While riding through the sage brush, he takes a shot at a rabbit and the bullet lands near the spot where a cattle rustler is plying his unlawful trade. The cattle rustler and Jack meet. The former believes that Jack tried to kill him and a fight follows. Jack is killed. The murderer takes all Jack's money, including the ring.

After two weeks of search the sheriff and his posse return without having seen the murderer and so report to Dolly. She determines to run the man down herself and sets out disguised as a cowboy. Her funds soon run low, however, and she is forced to seek work to carry on her search. Dolly approaches a ranch house and meets the owner, who is Big Bill, and as he has taken a liking to what he thinks is a young fellow, he gladly gives her a job. In the days that pass, Big Bill begins to doubt the sex of his new employee, but keeps his suspicions to himself. One day he asks the cowboy to accompany him to town and, while there, Dolly wanders into a saloon to watch the games in progress. Bill follows, keeping a close watch. Suddenly one of the players who is heavily losing, pulls out a sack and empties its contents on the table.

Dolly receives a shock when she sees the ring she had given Jack, and at once guesses his identity. Dolly denounces him and they have a terrific fight. Bill tries to interfere, but the boys, thinking she is a man, hold him off. In the melee, Dolly's hair comes down and her sex is revealed. The fight is quickly stopped and Dolly tells of the murder. The rustler is delivered to the sheriff, and Big Bill takes Dolly home, where he offers her a new job as boss of his ranch.

THE MYSTERY OF THE LOCKED ROOM (Three Parts—Nov. 21).—The cast: Ben Wilson, Joseph W. Girard, Dorothy Phillips, Ned Reardon, W. J. Morris and Bert Busby.

Richard Hardy is the private secretary to Mr. Harmon, a retired banker. Ruth, Harmon's daughter, and Richard are in love. Francis Gerard, a broker, arrives with bonds of the Belleville Water Company, for which he obtains a check from Harmon, giving him in return a promissory note, and leaving the bonds as security for the loan. Gerard is enamored with Ruth, but she does not encourage him. When Gerard leaves, Hardy proposes, and Ruth gives him a locket containing her picture. While Ruth and her father are playing chess, the butler gives a floor plan of the house to two tough-looking men. Late that night three burglars, who are trying to get into the library of the house, awaken Harmon. The burglars hear the approach of someone, become apprehensive and escape. After a consultation with Harmon, Hardy is granted permission to carry a revolver.

Sometime later at a reception, Hardy sees Ruth and Gerard together and his jealousy is aroused. When he and Ruth meet, he tells her that he will kill Gerard. Ruth informs him that he is the only man she loves, and calmly takes the revolver away from him. They embrace, and are caught in that attitude by Harmon, who knows nothing about their engagement, and who flies into a rage. He sends Ruth from the room and locks himself in. Two shots are heard by the guests, and when the door is opened, Harmon is found dead.

A part of Hardy's chain and the locket which Ruth had given him is found on the dead man, and on this circumstantial evidence Hardy is arrested, but with his wonderful strength he breaks away, and is not heard from until a week later, when he appears disguised as a cabman. Determining to clear himself, he calls upon Ruth, who believes in his innocence. Meantime, Detective Harrigan, who has taken thumbprints found on various articles in the locked room, tells his assistant that, in his opinion, the man who switched off the light was the murderer, and that the thump-print shows that it wasn't Hardy. While checking off the contents of the safe listed in the memorandum book Ruth and Hardy discover that the promissory note and bonds that Hardy gave Harmon are missing. Suddenly they hear a voice in the passageway, and conceal themselves.

Although the key is in the lock of the door it is turned somehow from the outside and the butler enters. He goes to the table and picks up the memorandum book and when Hardy grabs him, he tells him that Gerard had offered him $100 for it. Harrigan ascertains that Gerard has in his possession the bonds of the Belleville Water Company, the numbers of which correspond with those entered in the memorandum book. The butler is compelled to send for Gerard, while the detective and the others keep in hiding. Gerard gives the butler the $100 for the memorandum book, and then the detective and Hardy confront him. His thumb-print offers additional evidence of his guilt. Gerard then breaks down and makes a full confession, and explains the mystery of the locked room, which exonerates Hardy.

NESTOR.

WHEN FATHER WAS THE GOAT (Nov. 22).—The cast: Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes, Harry Rattenbury, Neal Burns.

Ray and the girl are in an awful predicament. They have been engaged for some time but it seems that Ray can never get the funds necessary to pay the expense of their honeymoon. He is bewailing his hard luck to his girl when she suggests that he ask his father for a loan. Ray tells her it is useless, but, acting upon her advice, he determines to give the old man another trial. But father is in bad humor and Ray, instead of getting the required $500, almost gets father's boot. Father, although old in years, is quite a gay bird, and about twice a week indulges in a game of poker with some of his old cronies.

It happens on this night that there is a "meeting" and father's friend tells him to be sure to be ready. Ray, returning home in bad humor, meets his friend Jack and the latter asks him if it is possible to get a loan of father's machine for the night. Ray promises to do his best. That night Ray scouts about the garage and learns from the chauffeur that father has ordered the car after dinner. Later on father's friend arrives in his own car and persuades father to go with him. Father agrees, and, arriving at the fashionable gambling house, they proceed to "sit in." Ray

The big successes in the exhibiting end of the moving picture industry have been made by men who are specialists in their line.

Big strings of theatres under the same management and directly controlled by one man who has thought it worth while to study the business are notable for their standing in the trade.

It is remarkably true that in a large majority of cases the individuals who are responsible for these notable successes are "Wedded to the Radium Gold Fibre Screen." Not one house but every house with which they have to do is equipped with the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN which they are convinced is in truth "The World's Best Projection Surface."

How Triangle Plays Hold Their Place

It is said that dramatic critics tire of the plays they see; that their sense of appreciation is dulled with repetition, and that constantly increasing power is demanded by them in the plays they review as the weeks roll on.

It sounds reasonable, but—

Is it not interesting and also highly significant when the critics of great cities keep on insisting that Triangle Plays are increasing in quality?

Listen to this—

In "Double Trouble," the top notcher at the Knickerbocker Theatre this week, Douglas Fairbanks exceeds his performance in "The Lamb" by a wide margin. "Double Trouble" is somewhat in the melodramatic comedy class, and there is enough melodrama, real comedy, with pathos thrown in for good measure to please anyone. —N. Y. Mail.

"Weber and Fields" in "The Best of Enemies" are seen in a clever plot of the chap who disappears and manages to have his rival accused of his death. Even if it were not generally an excellent comedy, two scenes would make it worth while to see. To see Lew Fields as a prisoner try to ingratiate himself with a murderous looking juror is to be tickled clear down in the midrib.

—N. Y. Evening Sun.

If the tale of the jaded critical senses be true, does not this speak eloquently of the Triangle Quality?

The Triangle Plan Based on Values

In establishing Triangle Service plain-well-known normal commercial rules have been followed—the rules that have proved the foundation of every great enterprise.

Men and women will pay a dollar for a dollar's worth, but they won't knowingly pay that sum for half values. In New York at the Knickerbocker Theatre people are paying $2.00 to see Triangle Plays. They are patronizing these products because they are getting $2.00 in valuable entertainment. They would not do this week after week if they did not believe they benefited equitably; if they did not get value for value.

In other cities throughout this country, Triangle Quality is proving its worth in similar fashions. Men of experience have viewed Triangle productions, have estimated their value and have gone back home to Columbus, Cleveland, Louisville, Norfolk, Richmond, Brooklyn and so on, to offer these film dramas to their regular patrons at regular theatre prices. These managers know the people they have dealt with for years. They are saying:

"We have never sold you cheap or inferior goods. We will not now. Triangle Plays are worth what any other good play is worth."

How many film dramas do you suppose that could be said of?

calls his friend up and tells him they can use the car and the whole party proceeds to have a good time downtown.

The police department have had their eye on this private gambling house for some time and decide to raid it this night. Detective Snitch is assigned on the case. Father has been losing all evening and just as he is about to win something the fearful cry of police is raised. Father forgets everything but the dignity of his name and makes a hurried exit through the window. Meanwhile, Ray and his friends have broken up their party and are returning. They almost run down Detective Snitch, who puts the speed cop on their trail. He is unable to overtake their machine, but gets the number Next morning father reads of the raid and learns that the police have the names of the gamblers and that arrests are expected. The speed cop calls at the house and takes Ray in charge. When he is brought to the police station Detective Snitch recognizes him and tells him that it will go hard with him for almost running down an officer. Ray pleads for time to get enough money to pay his fine and they allow him to call on father, accompanied by Detective Snitch.

Just as Ray goes in the house he hears father telling his friend over the phone how lucky he was to escape, and a bright idea strikes him to get the old man's "goat." He tells father that the detective wants to see him and father, looking out, sees the dreaded Detective Snitch and almost has a fit. When Ray asks him for $500 father quickly gives it to him. Ray then borrows an additional $25 and returns to the police court. He is fined $25 for speeding and leaves with the $500. Billie's heart is gladdened when Ray tells her that they can now take their long delayed honeymoon and that his father is standing the expense, while father congratulates himself on his ability to "fix" the cops.

Ray has just purchased a beautiful ring for his best girl, and leaves to present her with it. The girl's brother is Ray's firm friend, and is very much pleased over the ring. The girl is on the eve of leaving to return to school. The next day Ray bids her good-bye and returns to his apartment, where he receives a letter telling him that unless he marries the next day, his father's fortune will revert to another heir. He is in despair. The girl's brother suggests that he send for Billie, but Ray realizes that by the time she returns it will be too late. He hits upon a brilliant scheme and persuades the girl's brother to disguise as a girl and act as his bride.

The justive, being nearsighted, performs the ceremony without noting the deception, and when the pair come out they are sighted by reporters, who recognize Ray and make him give them an interview regarding the wedding. The boys return to Neal's home, where his mother almost catches them. To keep her from learning the news, Neal climbs out the window. The next day the papers are full of the wedding of the wealthy lumberman's son (Ray) and the girl's father sees the news. He asks Neal about it, but the latter disclaims any knowledge of the fact. At the school, Billie's chums read the news and are engaged in teasing her, when the principal sends for her and orders her to return home as married women are not allowed in the school. Billie can't understand the announcement of her wedding and leaves hurriedly for home.

Meanwhile Ray's lawyer calls upon him with the papers for his wife to sign and there is consternation and dismay. Ray manages to communicate with Neal and tells him to disguise and hurry to his apartments. Neal does so but on the way is spied by a policeman who takes him in as a suspicious character. Ray is having a hard time quieting the lawyer's suspicions and wonders what has become of Neal. Neal finally gets permission to phone home and the phone is answered by Billie, who has just returned. She is told of the ceremony and urged to hurry to the rescue of Ray. She arrives just as the lawyer, his patience exhausted, is leaving, and Ray gets her to sign the papers. The matter is straightened out, and Ray and his girl leave to secure her brother's release. The sergeant grants her request, and the three leave for home to prepare for the real wedding.

WHAT THE RIVER FORETOLD (Three Parts—Nov. 13).—The cast: Sherman Bainbridge, Jack Holt, Edythe Sterling, Mrs. Marvin.

Jim Titus is a miner and lives at Mrs. Trask's boarding house. Of a retiring disposition, Jim secretly admires Maggie Trask, the landlady's daughter, although she adores him without restraint. He, however, is too reticent to observe it. One day Jim receives a letter from a former partner, Bill Ward, inviting him to join him on a prospecting trip. He shows the letter to Maggie, who advises him to go. On the day of departure, Maggie breaks down, and Jim learns that she loves him. They plight their troth before parting, and Jim promises to return as soon as possible.

Two years pass. Maggie waits vainly for some word of her lover, but Jim and Bill, far from civilization, are unable to send any word. The years have brought disappointment to them, too, for they are still in search for the elusive metal. Their water supply becomes exhausted and of their once large pack train they have left only one donkey. Jim, exhausted, becomes unconscious and Bill loads him on the donkey, successfully reaching a river. He drinks his fill and turns his eyes upstream. Jim revives and, crawling to the bank, drinks and looks downstream. It is an old superstiton among the Arizona Indians that "He who drinks of the Hassyampa (River) and, rising, turns his eyes upstream, will never speak the truth again, he who drinks but rises with his face downstream will never leave the desert." Jim finds signs of gold in the sandy bottom and soon the two partners find they have struck it rich.

Nothing will do but for Jim to return to Maggie and he takes Bill along with him to act as best man. They arrive in the town and preparations are made for the wedding. Bill is much more good looking than Jim and he exerts a strange influence over Maggie. On every occasion he makes love to the girl and finally she decides that she does not love Jim, but Bill. Bill and Jim have hidden all their gold upstairs in their room and Bill, after winning the girl's consent, takes the gold out and puts it in his suitcase. The night of the wedding arrives and Jim has gone for the minister. Bill makes Maggie write a note telling of leaving with Bill and the two elope. When Jim returns and learns the news his heart is broken and he returns to the river where the gold was found. Again he takes out a stake and makes an attempt to locate Bill. Finally he finds Bill and attempts to kill him, but the latter is saved by his wife, Maggie, and their baby. Bill becomes a gambler, never known to tell the truth.

Many years pass. Jim is now a ragged, unkempt desert "rat." He still works his claim on the Hassayampa and returns to town now and then for supplies. On one of these periodical visits the old man gets in a faro game for relaxation and breaks the bank. The dealer, becoming frightened that he will succeed in getting away with the winnings, calls the proprietor of the house into consultation and with a new deck the proprietor takes charge of the game. From then on Jim begins to lose and, becoming suspicious, watches the dealer. At last his suspicion is verified, for he sees they are working a "sanded" deck on him. He calls the dealer's hand and recognizes in the man his former partner, Bill. Instead of killing the cheat, old Jim assists the dealer and owner to escape. Once outside, the two get in a powerful automobile, but Jim forces Bill to hand over to him $50,000, the amount that was stolen from him, and then discloses his identity. The two gamblers try to escape, but in vain, for the enraged miners puncture the tires and they are captured. The crowd then takes the two and hang them, but not before Jim has obtained the address of Bill's daughter, to whom he sends the $50,000, Maggie the wife having died. Jim returns to the banks of the Hassayampa, there to live the rest of his life.

Lang, a business man and the star boarder, advises her against the purchase, but without success. Officers raid the office and Matthews escapes, but falls under a train and is killed. Bob makes his escape from the officers, and goes West, where he secures work in the oil fields. Here he meets Irma Grant, a school teacher, and they fall in love with each other.

Bob is saving every cent to go back and pay Mother Allen the $500. Finally, school is over, and Irma is ready to return home. A love scene takes place between her and Bob, but he does not ask her to marry him because he has but $500 and is determined to sacrifice his love to convince Mother Allen of his honesty. LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK SERIES ("Kidnapping the King's Kids"—Nov. 25).—The cast: Milburn Moranti, Max Asher, Gale Henry, Wm. Franey.

The King of Wineberg is much wrapped up in his two royal kids. Black Rudolph, a crook and pretender to the throne, realizes that the biggest obstacle against him is the presence of the two kids. Detective Duck is taking a much-needed vacation and has wandered to the King of Wineberg for rest and recreation. Indulging in his favorite sport of fishing, he sees Black Rudolph closely pursued by the guards. He thinks Rudolph is one of the poor, oppressed subjects and decides to help him. With one of his marvelous changes in disguises he emerges from behind a tree, the twin of Rudolph. The guards capture Duck and Rudolph escapes. He makes his way to the apartments of Lady Baffles and gains her consent to assist him in his kidnapping scheme. She leads him through an underground passageway and they emerge near the throne room.

Meanwhile, Detective Duck has been brought before the King by his captors and is sentenced to be shot. Detective Duck is now personally interested in the kids and determines to keep his identity a secret. He is accordingly taken out to be shot. When the smoke from the guns clears away, instead of the dear Rudolph, the King sees his old college chum, Detective Duck. He determines on the disguise of a French dancing teacher and while the governess furnishes the music he attempts to teach them the latest dancing steps.

Lady Baffles and Rudolph appear from the curtains and she recognizes her rival. Both realize that it will take quick action to get rid of the kids now, and by a trick succeeds in getting rid of the governess, Lady Baffles taking her place, disguised as governess. She proposes a game of blind man's buff and Duck is "it." While he stumbles around the room the kids are dropped into a closet and Lady Baffles and Rudolph start home through the underground passageway. Detective Duck seats himself on the King's throne and draws the imperial robe about his shoulders. The King is about to have him thrown out and shot, but when the robe falls apart, it discloses the King's kids, safe and sound.

DAD'S AWFUL CRIME (Nov. 27).—The cast: Max Asher, Lillian Peacock, Victor LeRoy, Wm. Franey, Chas. Conklin.

Tom and Flo are in love with each other; but, before accepting the engagement ring from her lover, Flo tells him he must secure father's consent. Father is having troubles of his own, however, in the person of Mr. Binks, to whom Father has been owing money for some time. Just at this point the two young people come upon the scene, and Binks immediately falls in love with pretty Flo. He has a happy inspiration, and tells Father that he will agree to cancel the debt, provided Flo is given to him as his wife. Father consents. Flo gets furious, but Father orders her to get ready, while Binks phones for the preacher. Flo determines to escape from the house.

The minister has arrived, and Binks, impatiently, accompanies the old man to see why she does not appear. Unable to get a reply to their call, the door is broken down and Flo is seen escaping through the window. Meanwhile, Tom is telling his chum, the doctor, of his hard luck. The doctor tries in every possible way to console Tom, but he believes his case is hopeless. Flo meanwhile arrives at an apartment house and takes refuge up the fire escape. She finally comes up to an open window, and, seeing her pursuers below, takes refuge inside, in the doctor's room. There is a happy meeting between the lovers. Father, Binks and the preacher have seen the girl go in the window and come up to the apartment house, getting into various rooms which prove to be the wrong ones. They finally arrive at the right room, and there is a row. Father pulls a gun and begins to shoot, and in the excitement Tom and the girl escape to the next room and lock the door. Father, outraged, begins shooting through the door, and a brilliant idea strikes Tom to force Father's hand.

He takes a bottle of red ink, smears the ink all over his breast, and moans with misery. Father breaks in the door, and an awful sight meets his eye. Tom, covered with gore, lies on the bed, apaprently dying, while Flo is brokenhearted. Father stands aghast at his awful deed. The doctor, called hurriedly, makes an examination. Tom and Flo indicate to the doctor their scheme, and he readily falls in with it. He tells Father that Tom is dying, and as a last request begs that he and the girl be married. Father still withholds his consent, but when Tom weakly declares that unless he allows them to marry he will haunt the old man through the rest of his life, Father quickly agrees. As soon as the ceremony is performed, all are surprised by the activity displayed by the "dying" man, and Father is told he has been outwitted. Father agrees that Tom will make a bright son-in-law, and all join in kicking the objectionable Binks out of the room.

Rogers' sheep encroach on the range where Boling's cattle have been feeding, and Boling orders them off. Rogers refuses to move the sheep, and Boling fences the range. In the midst of this interchange of hostilities, Joe Boling has fallen in love with Glory Rogers, and she is restrained from responding only because of the bad feeling between the families.

The sheepmen cut the fences and are discovered by the cattlemen and ordered off. In the skirmish which follows, Cal Roger's, Glory's father, is seriously injured. The Boling men scatter the sheep and ride to Rogers' cabin which they prepare to fire. Glory slips out and succeeds in getting to Joe with word of what the men are doing; he returns with her and puts a stop to it. Glory tells the sheepmen of the attempt to burn the cabin—they find Cal—he urges them to take revenge and they ride off after the Boling men. Rogers' men find the Boling crowd at the Cactus Bar, but Joe Boling sees them first in a mirror, and his men cover them before they can get into action. Joe proposes that Bill, Rogers' foreman, settle the feud with him, man to man. They fight. Joe wins, but Bill attempts to shoot Joe, and a well-timed shot from one of the Boling boys puts the sneaking foreman out of business. This starts a fight, which Joe stops by shooting out the lights.

The Rogers' retaliate by damming the creek and cutting off Boling's water supply. They fortify the dam and prepare to defend their position. When the Boiling men discover the dry creek bed, there is a fight at the dam. The cattlemen are routed and Joe's father is fatally injured. Joe appeals to Glory to let his father rest at the cabin until a wagon arrives, and she is sweetly sympathetic. The elder Boling fears the growing intimacy, and makes Joe promise not to marry "Old Rogers' daughter." Joe takes desperate means to save the cattle. He rides over alone and dynamites the dam, where Rogers' men are drunkenly celebrating their victory. They ride after him, and he takes refuge in Rogers' cabin, where he holds off the attacking party until Glory brings help. Joe is wounded and Glory cannot hide her love, but his promise to his dead father keeps him from speaking his heart. Then comes a revelation. Glory is "Old Man" Rogers' niece, and not his daughter. No feud any longer exists between the representatives of the Rogers and Boling places, for the cattle and sheep interests are united by marriage.

A drummer stops at the only hotel in Smalltown. Johnnie, the hotel clerk, is in love with Sadie, the girl of all work about the hotel. Sadie is content until John, the drummer appears with his city clothes and city manners. She falls in love with him. He tells Sadie he would take her to the city if he had the money. Johnnie is furious because the drummer has stolen Sadie's love. When John is leaving, Sadie secrets his trunk. The expressman delivers John's trunk to his home in the city. The former is reading a white slave story about concealing country girls in trunks. As he lays down the trunk in John's room he hears noises from the inside. He thinks John is a white slaver and rushes to get a policeman. John gives the maid the key to his trunk. She opens the trunk and finds Sadie. She rushes downstairs to tell John and his wife. Sadie gets out of the trunk and hides in the clothes closet. John's wife dashes to his room, while John follows her trying to deny everything.

The police arrive and want to arrest John as a trafficer. They open the trunk but Sadie is not there. John is very much relieved until his wife discovers Sadie in the clothes closet. As the lovers have anticipated, Zeke's greed proves too much for him. He schemes to impersonate the lover and get the treasure. Meanwhile, Nell's uncle has received a "Black Hand" letter ordering him to lower $10,000 from his window that evening when he shall hear "two long whistles." Uncle takes Nell into his confidence, and she gives him some excellent advice.

When Zeke signals below father lets down a heavy chest, and just as the supposed black hander has seized it, he empties upon his head a bucketful of water. Zeke, clutching the 'treasure," makes a hasty getaway. When, at a safe distance, he opens the chest he discovers a young, frisky and very hungry bulldog who proceeds to make a lasting impression on the postmaster of Pineapple Plains. Not long after this the city chap marries the girl. A postal, written by Nell on her honeymoon, comes into the office, and Zeke is shocked and surprised to read thereon: 'Dear Uncle—We saw our congressman to-day and he has promised to make you postmaster. He says Zeke is a public nuisance, as he reads everybody's mail."

CASINO.

John Carstairs was much agitated when he read of a "society burglar" who had been making wholesale inroads upon the rich homes in the vicinity. When he showed the article to his daughter, Diana, and his son, Jack, Diana proposed that they give a house party and hold a burglar hunt.

Two of the guests at the house party were Larry Hunter and Cyril Cadwalader, rivals for Diana's hand. Jack Carstairs, on mischief bent, sent notes, purporting to come from Diana, saying to each that she feared the other was the "gentleman burglar." So each was eager to catch the other red-handed. Jack left a note on the door saying, "I am going to rob this house tonight." Its discovery caused great confusion.

That night John Carstairs locked up all the jewels of the guests in the family safe and mounted guard himself, armed with everything from a gun to a watchman's rattle. But Jack, while his father slept, rifled the safe and concealed half the jewels in Hunter's pocket and the rest in Cadwalader's clothes.

When the robbery was discovered both Larry and Cyril were bent on fastening the crime on each other. But both were discomfited when jewels were found in their pockets. The crowning discomfiture came when they found that a third suitor for Diana's hand was the favored one. Jack had his fun all right, but he got a whipping.

First, in response to Gordon's hurry call for a new cook, Emeline, disguised in an eccentric make-up, reports to her ex-employer. She succeeds in wrecking the establishment and getting fired. Then Gordon demands a colored cook. Emeline persuades a huge negro gentleman to masquerade in this part, and when the new servant, to the indignation of Gloom, has filled the house with "her" own cronies that evening, a battle ensues in which the master barely escapes with his life. Emeline comes to his rescue. Gloom falls on his knees, declares she has saved him from the coons, declares himself a tamed grouch and implores her to marry him.

But, in the words of Aristole, or Ted or someone, "you can ring and you can ring, but the house is boarded up." The clink of a few pieces of silver seems to touch some dormant chord in the boys' subconscious minds, and they immediately get on the job. Moke, after seeing the guest to his room, tries, of course, to hide the fact that a tip would be in order, and because of his modesty flies quickly from the room with the kindly aid of the roomer's leather encased pedal extremities. Luke escorts a girl guest to her room, and is starting quite a flirtation with her, when Moke, whose motto is "pass nothing up" approaches them and tells Luke that there is a tall tip awaiting him in the new guest's room. Luke goes, and the guest learns how foolish and wasteful it is to break a perfectly good water pitcher on a bellhop's head. Luke then staggers back to Moke, and sends him with neatness and despatch through a door and into the lap of a retiring guest.

With the arrival of a roughneck bouncer and his pretty wife, a fascinating free-for-all is started, in which Luke, with a fire hose, gallantly stands off the concerted attack of the whole household.

RUFUS WALLINGFORD, NO. 6 ("A Trap for Trapp"—Two Parts—Pathe—Nov. 8).—Louis Trapp, the next victim, is one of the clique of criminal financiers whose manipulations have caused the death of the charming Violet and Fanny Warden's father. A lucrative mail-order business is used as the "come on" by J. Rufus and Blackie, who, by mailing to themselves hundreds of ten dollar bills, excite the cupidity of Trapp. Onion Jones, a Wallingford confederate, pretending to mistake Trapp as the owner of the company, offers him $60,000 for it, and the crafty Trapp, scenting an enormous profit in the deal, rushes off and buys the business from Wallingford for $50,000, hoping to turn it over to Onion for a $10,000 gain. The postal authorities get on to the mail order business just as soon as Trapp becomes its proprietor, and things look dark for the amateur plunger.

A BOLT FROM THE SKY (Balboa—Three Parts—Nov. 8).—Fayette is made the object of a matrimonial conspiracy by two schemers who manage to introduce to her Anthony Craig, a handsome and unscrupulous fortune hunter. Fay loves and is loved by Frederick Dale, a young mining engineer and friend of Jack Cummings, also in love with Fay. Craig poses as the offspring of wealthy European nobility, and is accepted by Fay when she learns that her wealthy father is on the verge of financial ruin.

Craig, having married Fay on the presumption that she was an heiress, is beside himself with rage when he learns the truth, and he begins neglecting and abusing her, hoping to force a divorce. To this end he brings questionable men and women to his home, and flaunts them before his wife.

In defending Fay from a murderous attack by Craig, Cummings kills the fortune hunter. Dale hears of his friend's predicament, and, rushing back from his mining camp in the mountains, assists him in procuring the final verdict of "Not Guilty." Dale then renews his attentions to Fay, and in a touching final scene reclaims a love that was really never lost.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (Episode No. 11, "The Dreadful Pit"—Two Parts—Panama—Nov. 11). —Annette and her party start on the last lap of their trip to Santa Maria Mission, there to receive the original grant of Lost Isle, now in the safekeeping of the Fathers. Joe Welcher, at Hernandez's instructions, delays the Hardins, and Hernandez, Ponto, Inez and their strange bruteman servant arrive at Santa Maria first. They attempt to secure the grant, Inez pretending to be Annette Ilington, but the old Abbot, suspicious of their eagerness, refuses to part with the precious paper.

Neal, meanwhile, as a U. S. Ensign, lands at Santa Maria, there to get from Annette permission to use Lost Isle, as a government coaling station. Annette sets off for the Mission, and on her way there is attacked by Ponto, who, in attempting to lead her into a jaguar trap, falls in himself and is killed. The brute carries Annette to the Mission, where he arrives just as Inez and Hernandez have almost persuaded the Abbot to give them the grant. In an attempt to steal the paper, Hernendez gets himself into a fight with the Monks, whose forces are augmented by Neal and a corps of marines in a search for Annette. Hernandez escapes, but leaves the precious paper behind him, to be further contested for in the next episode, which will be called "Backed by the U. S. N."

BUNGLING BURGLARS BURGLE (Starlight Nov. 13).—For the trivial offense of sprinkling plaster ceiling over a neighbor's breakfast, Heinie and Louie are dispossessed without notice, and forced to seek the refuge of a convenient cellar. Here they overhear three burglars planning to rob the house, and in their fright at being so near such wicked people try for a noiseless exit. But they can't even steal away with the cracksmen around, and, after a thrilling chase are caught and strung up by the heels to a steampipe. Hanging that way isn't what it's strung up to be, however, and after a brief session our heroes untie and rearrange themselves, right end up.

NEDRA (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Nov. 12). —When two love-sick young people run off to be married—and aren't caught—they usually get married. It was different with Grace Vernon and Hugh Ridgway, though. Worn out by the social affairs given in honor of their approaching marriage, they elope in the wee sma' hours of a certain summer morning, and, being mistaken for housebreakers by the gardener and other members of the household, are pursued. A couple of cops as added starters make the chase even more interesting, and they don't breathe easily until, a couple of hours after climbing a rope ladder up the side of an ocean liner, they come out from their hiding place and find themserves at sea. Not nearly so much "at sea" then, however, as later, when Hugh finds that Grace is much smitten with Henry Veath, an old-time friend of his. Hugh cares nothing about the fact that Lady Tenny, another passenger, seems to care more for his society than for anyone's else.

Comes a typhoon, the ship is dashed on the rocks, and in the ensuing darkness and panic Hugh makes a brave attempt to save one who clings closely to him—one he thinks to be Grace. Then blackness, and with returning consciousness and the light, the realization that he is cast away on a strange tropical isle—the isle of Nedra, with—Lady Tenny Add to this that they are found and worshipped as two gods by the savage natives of the isle—that their enforced wedding is interrupted by the landing of a U. S. ship—that Hugh goes home only to find Grace married to Veath—that he finds that he doesn't care a particle—that he rushes back to Lady Tenny—and you have just a bare conception of this romantic love story.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE (Popular Plays and Players—Five Parts—Nov. 29).—The cast: Mary Miles Minter, Mrs. Thomas W. Whiffen, Guy Coombs, Fraunie Franholz, Louis Sealy, Frederick Heck, Wallace Scott, Ann Q. Nilsson, Myra Brooks, Charles Hartley, William A. Morse and Jack Burns.

Barbara Frietchie is celebrating her eighteenth birthday anniversary in Frederick, Md., while the town is strong in the grip of the Northern soldiers. Judge Frietchie, the girl's father, insists that the party in little Barbara's honor will show the Yankee invaders that no one has lost heart. But her aged grandmother, also named Barbara, is quite discomforted, as her sympathies are with the North. In the midst of a kissing game, Barbara darts out of the house, and seeks to avoid a group of young men by hiding in the branches of a tree.

Four hungry Union soldiers, who have been foraging for food, appear beneath the tree. Barbara cries an alarm, and her continued shouts bring, among others, Captain Trumbull, of the Union command. Against her wishes he assists Barbara down from the tree and orders the soldiers under arrest for their unauthorized invasion of the Frietchie home. Trumbull is invited to Barbara's party, and soon becomes the lion of the occasion. Especially is Grandma Barbara pleased with the gallant young officer, and she boasts that she once danced with Thomas Jefferson, and that he gave her a flag as a memento. She directs Barbara to fetch it. Barbara, in tears, and in a rage, explains that she tore the flag because she hated it and hated everything Yankee.

The party ends in disorder when Captain Trumbull is invited to cut the birthday cake. The boys refuse to eat it and leave the house in chagrin. Arthur Frietchie, Barbara's brother, has stolen through the Union lines, and attempts to enter his home, when he is detected by Trumbull. Union soldiers are in pursuit of Arthur and Trumbull aids him to elude them. Barbara is softened toward him, when she learns of this. Jack Negly, a young man in the neighborhood, who is in love with Barbara, spys on the couple and tells Judge Frietchie. The latter is infuriated and attempts to shoot Trumbull, but Barbara saves him.

Trumbull leaves and that night gets a note from Barbara saying she will meet him at a minister's house in the adjoining town next day, and marry him. That night Barbara mends the torn flag and folds it on her breast. The couple meet at the preacher's the next day, but hostilities suddenly break out and the Confederates take the town. Barbara again saves the life of Trumbull by her quick wit and true aim with a pistol. The Union soldiers retreat to Frederick, leaving Captain Trumbull behind and separated from his command. Arthur observes an officer in hiding and fires. He is horrified to find he has shot Trumbull, the man who saved his life. That night Arthur carries the wounded officer to his home. On the way he encounters Jack Negly, who tries to kill Trumbull.

At the Frietchie home Barbara secretes Trumbull in her room. Judge Frietchie comes home and announces that a searching party is coming to the house, believing that a Union soldier is hidden there. He hears the groans of Trumbull and becomes enraged. Barbara pacifies him and artfully induces him to go to "Stonewall" Jackson for papers to protect their home from the searchers. This he does, and the soldiers are forbidden to enter the home until after sunrise. Barbara keeps vigil on the stairway, while Grandma Barbara sits at the side of the wounded officer.

At sunrise Barbara hurries to where Captain Trumbull lies. She finds him dead. Grandma Barbara, in a frenzy, takes the flag which Barbara had placed on Trumbull's breast and waves it defiantly at the soldiers outside. An order to fire upon her is given.

"Shoot, if you must, this old gray head, but spare your country's flag," she said. Then came the memorable words of Jackson: "Who touches a hair of yon gray head, dies like a dog—march on!" he said.

A single shot is fired and Barbara Frietchie, who had been standing beside her grandmother, falls, fatally wounded. Jack Negly, who has fired the shot, starts to slink away, but is caught. Barbara dies at the side of Trumbull, and the stained flag is spread over them by the aged Barbara.

THE CONCEALED TRUTH (Five Parts).—The cast: Frank de Vernon, Frank Whitson, James Cooley, Gertrude Robinson, James McDuff, Sue Balfor, Carrey Lee.

Flo Merrivale, a woman with a past, has been in Robert's life for some years, and although married, he cannot shake off the old bond between them, and Flo lives out of Robert's purse. Old Gilmore, in failing health, alters his will. The reason he tells his lawyer is a doubt he entertains regarding Victor's right to his (Gilmore) name.

The domestic life of Robert and Dorothy is clouded. Dorothy, sadly neglected by her husband, and missing the pleasure of motherhood, frequently quarrels with Robert. On these disputes old Gilmore takes sides with Robert. Victor can see Dorothy's side of the question, frequently expresses his opinion, and shows his sympathy for Dorothy to his brother's disgust and annoyance. His sympathy is misunderstood by Robert, who becomes intensely jealous of Victor, and his conditions continues until old Gilmore dies.

The old man bequeaths his fortune to Robert, providing a legacy of $25,000 to Martha, the housekeeper, and only $1.00 to Victor. Robert declines to help Victor in any way. He is glad of the opportunity to revenge himself for imaginary past wrongs. When Victor protests, Robert tells him that there was always a doubt about his right to the name of Gilmore. Victor, horrified at the slander against their dead mother's memory, hurls himself upon Robert. A fight ensues, and Robert orders Victor out of the house, despite Dorothy's attempts to reconcile them.

A wandering, starving outcast, Victor is picked up in the street some years later. At the hospital, unknown and friendless, he decides to notify Dorothy of his plight. Dorothy arrives, and, stricken with pity for the wretched man, forces him to come home with her. Flo Mellivalle, has become more insistent in her demands upon Robert that he should divorce Dorothy, and marry her. She taunts him with Victor's supposed love for Dorothy, and finally resorts to threats. Dorothy's sincere and affectionate pleadings in Victor's behalf make a deep impression upon Robert's callous heart. He succumbs to her pleadings and with sincere feelings, reinstates Victor in his affections. Dorothy leaves the brothers alone.

A touching re-union between the brothers follows. Old times are discussed, when, without warning Robert falls forward—dead. A shot from unseen hand has found its mark. The chain of circumstantial evidence is so strong that Victor, after trial, is convicted and sentenced to die. Nobody but Dorothy believes in his innocence. An attempt to save his life is futile. Dorothy then insists that Victor marry her on the eve of his death, so that she may proclaim to the world her unshaken faith in him. The marriage takes place.

On the morrow Victor starts his last day on earth. Unable any longer to conceal the truth, Flo—her conscience haunted by thought of an innocent man going to his doom for the crime she herself committed in a moment of insane passion, confesses her guilt. Months later Victor and Dorothy plan the future of their newly-arrived son and heir, Cyrus Robert Gilmore.

Mamie continues in her work and is assigned to Madison's factory. Here, unknown to Madison, she obtains employment and proceeds to investigate working conditions. Bert, meanwhile has recovered and is kept in ignorance of Mamie's meeting Madison. Her neglect to visit him makes him feel she has forgotten him and returned to the fold of "Bennie, the Gyp." Then, the great disaster. Carelessness and neglect have caused the Madison factory to burst into flames. In the holocaust, the lives of children are destroyed and Mamie is carried home dying. Madison visits Mamie to see if she cannot be saved from death. In delirium she cries for Bert, and unable to refuse her dying request, Madison calls him. While waiting for the doctor, Madison sees a picture on the bureau. "My mother," breathes Mamie. The years roll back in a flash and Madison sees his love of the boarding-house. Mamie, he realizes, is his own child. Bert arrives to bid her farewell; the doctors bow their heads in consultation, but to no avail. The soul of Mamie has passed away. McQuire and Olson, strong arm politicians, are pursued by Ruby Swift, a female detective. The politicians elude her, purchase an ancient automobile, and arrive in the rural community of Hicktown, just in time for the yearly mayorality election. Ruby trails them and is on the scene, when they put their big city political knowledge to use in stealing the election. The politicians adopt suffrage as their party and defeat one Franklin Bond, the crusty mayor who has become so hard shelled in his small bailiwick that his defeat is easy at their hands.

Ruby poses as an adventuress, is enlisted by the politicians to help them "trim" the town and is present when they steal the ballot boxes and win the election, but does not know where they have hidden the ballots. The daughter of the mayor loves the candidate opposing her father and gets him to withdraw, leaving her father a supposedly easy field. Later when the ballot boxes are stolen, a rival suitor for the mayor's daughter, puts the blame on the young candidate who has withdrawn, and he is sent to pail.

Ruby, as secretary to the politicians, causes them both to fall in love with her, hoping their rivalry will part them and reveal the hidden ballot boxes. Jealous over Ruby, the politicians quarrel, and not even the suffragette Chief of Police can reconcile them. How Ruby takes advantage of the quarrel and brings them to justice is the climax of this five-reel comedy.

SWEET ALYSSUM (Selig—Five Parts—Nov. 15).—The cast: Tyrone Power, Kathlyn Williams, Edith Johnson, Wheeler Oakman, Frank Clark, Harry Lonsdale, Gene Frazer.

Daisy Brooks, wife of Roanoke Brooks, night watchman in the factory of Robert Garlan, does not love her husband or her daughter, Elizabeth. Instead, she loves his money and she enters the primrose path with Garlan in order to satisfy her love for finery. Garlan, a roue, also neglects his infant son, Wynne, for worldly pleasures. In time Daisy Brooks' double life is discovered by her husband, and she kills herself in Garlan's mansion. At the appearance of Roanoke, who has followed, Garlan jumps from a window and kills himself. Roanoke buys a little farm where he lives with his daughter. With the passing years, Elizabeth, daughter of Roanoke, reaches womanhood and is known to her father as "Sweet Alyssum."

Wynne Garlan, son of Robert Garlan, has grown to manhood and has married a woman of the world. Wynne, a poor bank clerk, is unable to provide for his wife in the way she wishes and she enters into an affair with Thurlow, the cashier of the bank where Wynne is employed. Thurlow steals from the bank and causés Wynne to be suspected of the crime. Wynne, in terror of arrest, escapes, and arrives in the country near Roanoke Brooks' farm.

Sweet Alyssum dreams that her father's land has developed into an immense oil field. She pleads with him to dig for oil and he does so. Wynne Garlan, who has assumed the name of Wyatt, secures employment on Roanoke Brooks' farm. Wynne, later becomes a school teacher and Sweet Alyssum, his pupil, loves him dearly. He, for a time, withstands the innocent young girl's endearments but finally succumbs to her beauty and they elope and are married. When Roanoke Brooks hears of the marriage he is overcome with anger, but as he confronts the pair upon their return to the farm, oil is discovered. Joyful because Alyssum's dream has been realized, Roanoke Brooks forgives the couple and they reside with him.

Two years pass by and Sweet Alyssum has become a mother. The oil fields have prospered and all is happiness in Roanoke Brooks' home. Thurlow, the crooked bank clerk, has not prospered during these years and finally wanders to the oil fields. There he sees Wynne Garlan. Thurlow informs the sheriff of the county that Wynne Garlan, known there as Wyatt, is a crook, and that if he is married he is guilty of bigamy for he has a wife living. The sheriff, upon Thurlow's instigations, telegraphs to New York and receives a reply to hold Wynne Garlan, who is wanted by the law. The justice of the peace, who is a friend of Roanoke Brooks and of Sweet Alyssum, goes to Roanoke's home to break the sad news. Roanoke determines to take the law into his own hands. The prosecuting attorney of the county also appears to get information from Sweet Alyssum concerning her husband's actions. When Sweet Alyssum is informed that her husband is accused of bigamy, she sacrifices even her own reputation for him and exclaims: "He cannot be charged with bigamy, for we were never married."

Wynne Garlan leaves the magistrate's office and goes to Roanoke Brooks' home. As he enters the gate, he is seen by Roanoke Brooks, who seizes a rifle. As he is about to fire on Wynne, Sweet Alyssum places her little child between her father's rifle and her husband. Then a message comes from the police department of the city which reads as follows: 'Garlan obtained divorce two years ago. No charge against him for bank robbery. Hold Thurlow. He is your man." Then it is that the girl tells her father that what she said about Wynne not marrying her was false as she wanted to protect him from arrest. And as Roanoke Brooks gathers his beloved daughter into his arms and shakes Wynne by the hand, the magistrate and the prosecuting attorney retire from the scene and are later instrumental in capturing Thurlow.

Realizing the folly and superficiality of society, Madeline Mischief, in the spirit of a wager, claims she could choose at random any man from the streets and make of him in a very short time a leader of society. Her friends laugh at her, but she determines to prove her contention and places one-half of a $100 bill in an envelope with a note reading: "If the finder of this is a woman, give it to the nearest man; if a man, call at Room 1798, Clarion Hotel, at once, for the other half of enclosed bill." Hanlick Smagg, a burly coal-heaver, finds the envelope and, after some hesitation, goes into the fashionable apartment house, still carrying his shovel.

Then follow many amusing incidents of Hanlick's introduction to society as a sociologist, for, although Hanlick proves very tractable, he is like a bull in a china shop. However, a barber, haberdasher and the necessary accoutrements of a gentleman convert Smagg into a very passable type; but his temporary breaks are only put down as eccentricity, for is he not studying the life of the "submerged tenth"? When he passes upon a painting, all listen breathlessly, and under Madeline's coaching he soon becomes a social lion.

But the inevitable follows. Hanlick falls in love with Madeline, and Dolly Van Dream, her friend, falls in love with him. But Hanlick breaks up threatened complications by reverting to the old type and going back to the "submerged tenth," and coal-heaving. Finally he gets a job at the steel works, turns out a valuable invention and gains a fortune. Now a genuine man of the world, he once more meets Madeline, who has never forgotten him, and the joyful outcome is that he elopes with her, without opposition in the old caveman fashion and romantic way.

Merchants everywhere tell our 800 salesmen that business is booming.

We have had two record crops, at big prices, with big demand at home and abroad.

We have a record mineral production.

Stocks of manufactured material are short, and labor is in great demand at high wages.

Exports largely exceed imports.

Foreign competition is less than ever.

U. S. securities are coming home.

Factories are busy, many working overtime.

More freight cars are needed, and steamers are taxed to capacity.

We have the best money in the world, more of it than ever before, with easy credits.

Hundreds of millions loaned to other nations and record-breaking importation of gold.

Such a combination of favorable circumstances never has occurred before, and probably will never occur again.

Billions of dollars are passing over the merchants' counters. The people who spend this money want the best service.

They demand it in all kinds of stores, from the smallest to the largest.

They get it in stores which use our up-to-date Cash Registers, which quicken service, stop mistakes, and increase profits.

Over a million merchants have proved our Cash Registers to be a business necessity.

CAILLE

Ticket Office Devices

Sell Tickets Ten Times Faster Than Hand Methods

The above picture shows an ideal Caille equipped ticket booth. The tickets and change are delivered to the patron simultaneously and instantly. There is no line-up at the window.

Whether he buys one ticket or five, the Caille Ticket Seller delivers them to him separately but stacked together like a deck of cards.

Tickets delivered in this way cannot lay across the knives in the chopper. They must drop through instantly.

No matter what denomination of coin is tendered to the operator, our Change Maker instantly calculates the change and delivers it direct to the patron in a saucer-like receptacle.

This receptacle is so shaped that even though the patron is wearing gloves, he can instantly pick up all of his change with one swoop of the hand.

The operation of these devices is simplicity itself. All the operator has to do is press the ticket keys for tickets and the changer keys for change.

The ticket seller automatically registers every ticket sold. This register is under lock and key. The theatre owner holds the key. This positively prevents any dishonest efforts between the party in the booth and the ticket taker.

For the sale of tickets of different denominations, additional ticket seller sections are installed. Each section has its individual motor for direct or alternating current. We also build ticket sellers for foot operation.

Caille Ticket Choppers tear the tickets to shreds. They could not possibly be used again. These machines are built for hand, foot or electric operation.

In addition to the above equipments, we furnish Theatre Ledger Systems, Ticket Boxes, Tickets, etc. All are of strictly highest grade and fully guaranteed.

A beautiful catalog giving complete details will be gladly mailed on request.

The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

No matter what current you have—Alternating or Direct—or what voltage or frequency, one of the

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

Mr. Wm. Smith,
Famous Players Exchange,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:

Cannot miss this opportunity to write the phenomenal success of George Beban's photo-drama production "AN ALIEN."

It was exhibited at the Stanley theatre all last week to enthusiastic audiences and I feel sure that anytone exploiting this picture properly will do well with it, as it received from the Philadelphia newspaper critics a remarkably favorable review.

Yours truly,

Stanley Mastbaum

SVM:G

Here are a Few Excerpts from the Philadelphia Dailies:

Telegraph:—George Beban can make them laugh and George Beban can also make them cry—and then make them laugh again. If you doubt it, go and see "An Alien," in which the same Mr. Beban is appearing at the Stanley the current week. When Mr. Beban is not playing on the emotions with vividly expressing pantomime, Mr. Ince has provided a series of splendid pictures. The result is a film that fixes attention without wearying it, and is a splendid example of the skill of both artist and director.

Press:—George Beban, in "An Alien," is one of the masterly photoplays which demonstrate the art of the screen drama at its best. It interested the capacity audiences at the Stanley in its human story and moved them alike to smiles and tears with its kindly humor and sincere pathos. Mr. Beban has long been recognized as the most artistic delineator of Italian character on the American stage.

Record:—Beban is a fine character actor whose work in Italian roles is especially inspired. In this instance he manages by an excellence in pantomime to suggest the griefs and joys of the alien and to give full value to a story that is of strong human interest.

Inquirer:—Affording him even greater sway in his masterful picturization than he enjoyed in "The Sign of the Rose," George Beban yesterday scored a new success with the presentation of "An Alien" at the Stanley. The play is already familiar to many Philadelphians and with which Mr. Beban's name is always linked. The film is bound to be a great success.

Ledger:—If you liked George Beban in his famous vaudeville sketch, "The Sign of the Rose," you will care even more for him in the photoplay version which has been made of the story and which was placed on view for a week yesterday at the Stanley Theatre, under the title "An Alien."

Bulletin:—"An Alien," elaborated and made into a film play from "The Sign of the Rose,'" once used by George Beban as a vaudeville sketch, was given at the Stanley with Mr. Beban in the same role on the screen as he played on the speaking stage. Mr. Beban visualizes the character of the unfortunate Italian quite as potently as he acted it in vaudeville. But the purely melodramatic incidents fade before those simple scenes which depend upon the art of Mr. Beban. The play is acted and photographed in a manner that almost sets a new standard for the motion drama.

Evening Ledger:—In acting, lighting, production, in the whole technical side of film art, "An Alien" is well-nigh perfect. A strong cast, including the charming child-actress, Thelma Salter, seen last week at the Chestnut Street Opera House, is set off against admirably realistic scenery. Mr. Beban is easily the star of the production, outshining cast and production by the vivid and vital play of sensitive Italian features.

North American:—"The Sign of the Rose" is successfully given in motion pictures in "An Alien," which featured the program at the Stanley Theatre yesterday. George Beban takes the principal role and is capably supported. The photography of the film is excellent and the settings are as picturesque as the most ardent motion-picture devotee could desire. Beban himself contributes another striking portrait of the Italian type.

Every exhibitor should give his patrons the opportunity to see this great picture. Write your nearest Paramount Exchange

SHOULD A GIRL WED FOR MONEY?

This is the problem in Essanay's fascinating five-act romance

"A Daughter of the City"

Every girl in love will want to see it.

Every mother and father should see it.

It is the story of a girl who rejects the man she really loves because her mother has trained her to look for a marriage for wealth.

She finally awakens to the danger that confronts her.

Her sweetheart comes to her rescue and she is saved on the very brink of disaster.

Marguerite Clayton and E. H. Calvert are featured in this great morality drama, taken from the play by H. S. Sheldon. Directed by E. H. Calvert.

YOU CAN BOOK THEM WITHOUT LOOKING AT THEM

¶ The reason is:

¶ Essanay takes every precaution possible to produce only plays of high standard. It sees to it that they are well cast and that the detail of production is perfect.

¶ But after the play is finished, Essanay has expert critics review the picture. Unless it comes up to Essanay's high standard of excellence it is discarded.

¶ Essanay makes it an invariable rule to permit only of releases that it knows to a certainty will meet with the enthusiastic approval of the exhibitor and the public.

Concealed Truth

An IVAN Production

Therein lies the magnet. But far more important is that which is back of it—that keeps the temporary gasp going.

For even without this phase of "Concealed Truth" it would be a winner. In fact cut the allegory and leave the rest and you still have a headliner.

It's all in the story. Ivan Abramson's dramatic vision has once again proved itself, and the story is a gripper! It is a discussion of sex and the dual life, yet in a different manner—so simply and calmly told that the very frankness is tremendous in its power.

Ivan Film Productions, Inc.
126 West 46th Street, New York City

"Concealed Truth" is a challenge to the passions of brutality and a summons to the best in man. It is a home play—a winner for the neighborhood theatre.

Facts and Comments

AN old friend of the paper sends us a clipping from a newspaper in his city showing that an exhibitor there offers a program consisting of Paramount and Triangle films together with some single reels and SEVEN ACTS of Vaudeville for ten cents. Our friend's query is very pertinent. "How," he asks, "can any one who has to live on the profits of his business meet this competition?" We give it up. In all schemes of excessive and unfair competition something as a rule "cracks" sooner or later. That's the best comment we can offer on the situation.

* * *

WE are, of course, glad to see the public schools interested in motion pictures, but we are sorry to see a schoolmaster engage in unfair competition with a bona fide exhibitor. In a small town in Minnesota the superintendent of schools has hired two features as the beginning of regular motion picture entertainments to be conducted "at cost." This he had a perfect right to do, but when he goes out of his way to throw stones at the exhibitor of the town he indulges in misrepresentation, of which the ordinary showman would feel ashamed. The exhibitor in question has been giving good programs. He cannot bring every release to the town. To say he is unprogressive because he failed to do this is silly. The schoolmaster evidently has much to learn. Our friend asks us: "With what courtesy should an exhibitor treat competition of this kind?" With the courtesy of silent contempt we think. Leave the schoolmaster to his own devices. His competition is nothing to be afraid of.

* * *

OUR recent article, "The Screen Not a Pulpit," has moved one of our esteemed clerical readers to enter an emphatic dissent. Evidently our friend has not read the article carefully. We wanted to disabuse the pseudo-moralists of their notion that the screen ought to be regulated by theological standards. The screen is a reflection of life; the pulpit is the place where preaching is done exclusively. Sometimes the screen preaches a sermon more powerful than any of Tillotson and Stillingfleet and more eloquent than Bossuet and Massillon, but it does not aspire to be a pulpit. The preaching is incidental, "the play's the thing."

* * *

IN this current issue of The Moving Picture World the reader will find an article entitled "If Shakespeare Fell Among the Censors." No stronger and no more readable and interesting argument against censorship has ever been made. It turns the laugh on the censors and on censorship. We suggest to our readers that they offer the article to their local papers. We feel pretty sure that the contents of the article will commend themselves to the average journalistic mind. If the editors don't take the article in its entirety they will print an extract or two. We do not have to tell the readers that anti-censorship publicity of this kind is bound to help them in any local fights they may have. We have incorporated the article into our anti-censorship library. The matter will be sent free to any exhibitor who cares to ask for it.

* * *

"THE Films—good and bad—are leaving their deep impression on the passing proletariat." We quote this sentence from the address of a man who believes in motion pictures, but wants to see them regulated. We think they are sufficiently regulated now. What we particularly object to is the phrase "passing proletariat." There is no such thing as a "proletariat" here, certainly none that is indigenous to the soil. The motion picture scouts class distinctions. We have seen audiences along the river front laugh and cry about the very same things that excited alternate mirth and sorrow in the theaters drawing their patronage from the "Four Hundred."

* * *

CENSORING by telephone is the latest wrinkle among the growing vagaries of that medieval machinery. In a town out West where they have local censorship in its worst form the members of the censoring committee cannot always be present in person when the films are projected upon the screen. The censors get no pay. Now, in order to insure a quorum, one of the censors telephones a description of the films to the absentees and asks them how they feel about passing them. Well, it's just as likely to be right over the telephone and just as likely to be otherwise.

Craftsmanship*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT there should be such a thing as technical workmanship in a scenario for screen production comes to many ambitious writers as a somewhat disagreeable surprise; it may be received with incredulity, and it has even awakened resentment. The art is so new that it would hardly seem as though time enough had elapsed for any remarkable degree of skill to have been acquired in its various departments, whereas men of high native ability have been hard at work for many long years with no other object in view than perfecting both artistic and scientific methods of screen visualization, and these men have developed with their work, each in his way becoming a craftsman.

Out in the audience, when a particularly fine photodrama is being shown, there are other people of native genius, some of them capable of splendid story conception, among them Miss E. and Mr. Z., both imaginative and both enthusiastic over the New Art. Mr. Z. feels that he could improve on what he has seen, and Miss E. is quite sure that she could. Both decide to enter the field, partly for the money in it and partly from a secret desire to try out this wonderful new medium and contemplate the materialization of cherished ideals. Both make the attempt.

Adequate knowledge of language may be required by the novelist, of harmony by the composer, of stage requirements by the dramatist, and even a painter has to learn how. Though they may be veritable artists, they are obliged to become craftsmen as well, and to assume that no skill is required in the construction of a screen story which satisfies millions of minds is nothing better than assumption and often worse, a mere supposition incapable of being proved.

Neither Miss E. nor Mr. Z. has wasted any time counting the number of scenes to each reel; neither has noted the amount of action required to enforce a situation, nor has either more than a vague notion of the amount of time used in showing one reel. Both are intent upon conception and quite willing to let realization depend upon the director.

Mr. Z. retires to his library and boldly enters the tremendous scope of a full-grown feature. The hero leaves his fiancee amid the luxuries of a highly-civilized environment to seek his fortune where there is adventure a-plenty. He is transported to wilder country and the hand of Fate leads him into relations with a beautiful girl of primitive manners and impulses. She may save his life and nurse him through illness, only to find that her impassioned soul has passed into his keeping. A letter reaches him that demands his presence at home, and the pitiful creature of intense feeling is left to a lonely vigil. Will he return? Again the hand of Fate! He discovers that the artificial creature he expected to wed has forgotten him for another. Oh, the joy of his true love at the end!

Miss E. writes a pretty three-reeler of that Sabbath morn when fleecy clouds floated on the summer sky, and only the bell of the village church broke the calm. What a grand sermon from the new preacher! How tenderly he referred to the song that he most loved. Then a strange woman in black walked into the choir, sat down at the organ and made the air throb with that song. It was She, the wife he had unjustly suspected long years ago. Oh, the joy of that Sabbath morn "After Many Years"! What a grand title! It would relieve unnecessary anxiety about the end. Then there would be only one setting necessary, the church.

There is a profound question of sex psychology woven into the story of Mr. Z. He entertains an idea now becoming universal that many civilized women are not entirely female, to judge from their self expression, but only enough so to be illogical at one moment and exacting at another, whereas enlarged social experience endows them with superior powers of calculation and thus prevents them from loving as blindly as men would have them love. Without woman's unreasoning love what would this world be for man? A limitless desert, in which the beautiful flower of his native egotism might wither and perish.

Here is a popular theme, the subject of several hundred screen stories, and this makes the writer's undertaking all the more difficult. He may retain his own viewpoint—his sincerity, implying an equal sincerity on the part of his audience, is important—but he must give variety to his treatment if he would put this over as a new and entertaining story. One good way out is through "localized impressions," involving a clever study of contrasting localities. The motivation of the hothouse flower, quite as well as that of the wild flower, grows out of environment, one of artificial conditions, the other of nature.

Miss E. has stood on the extreme outer edge of a whirlwind and felt a puff of air. Her story barely touches the tempest of human passion. It does not bring out that germ so common with intelligent men, the innate desire "to do good," which clashes all through life with a capacity for hating, that fierce correlative of love, jealousy. The intensity of the good minister's hate, when he believed himself wronged, provides the real power of her story. To depict it and all that fanned it into flame requires craftsmanship.

While the new craft is developing along lines of independence, some of the oldest conventions of literature and the drama survive in it and even flourish, particularly "the unities" and the technics of impartiality, playing fair with the characters. On the other hand, partially because the art is divided into formulation by the author and treatment by the director, and more largely because the use of language is very limited, being confined to a few telling words, usually those of conversation, the author need not be embarrassed because he is unacquainted with that overfed darling of literature known as "Style."

The author needs clarity of expression in the scenario, knowledge of construction and some ability to inspire, but his general equipment need not include mastery of all the formidable intricacies of language. He may start with the same small prospect of immediate and adequate return for outlay of time and effort he would encounter as a novelist, or as a dramatist, but the field is wider, and it is constantly widening for those who labor with sincerity and determination.

Given an unfailing font of creative imagination, in itself native, the way to successfully meet the competition of skill is to acquire skill. The author's craft, largely that of formulation, he can save thousands to the producer through systematization of the work in advance of treatment and interpretation, thus raising his own value through his craft. It is not enough to have an imaginative and selective mind—the author should LEARN HOW to conquer the minds and hearts of those who sit in the shadow and closely scan the illuminated screen. The creative soul may be native —its finest expression is acquired.

If Shakespeare Fell Among the Censors

The "Rules and Regulations" of Breitinger and the "Standards" of Maude Murray Miller Would Make the Immortal Plays Look Like a Belgian Cathedral After a German Bombardment

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE censor boards of Pennsylvania and Ohio have established "Rules and Regulations" and "Standards" to which the producers of motion pictures are expected to conform under all kinds of pains and penalties. These rules are little known, except perhaps one or two that are particularly foolish, such as the Breitinger edict that "all comedies must have a serious purpose." Even the censors themselves recoil from applying all their rules and regulations. I have, therefore, judged them by their performances rather than by their theories.

Tried by this fearful test, only six plays escape unscathed. These are: "King Henry V," the first part of "King Henry VI.," "Timon of Athens," "Coriolanus," "The Comedy of Errors" and "Love's Labor Lost."

I have omitted "Pericles, Prince of Tyre" and "The Two Noble Kinsmen" from my list. There is doubt as to the part Shakespeare had in these two plays and beside they have been acted very rarely.

None of the other plays stand the Pennsylvania-Ohio test. Some of them are ordered suppressed entirely; others are mutilated out of all recognition; the rest suffer more or less material damage. Comedies, historic dramas and tragedies—all fall under the ban in varying degrees, with the sole exceptions above noted.

Here is the result in detail:

COMEDY OF ERRORS.—Passed by Ohio censors. Pennsylvania censors deplore the lack of serious purpose in this play, but find no detailed objections and let it pass.

TWELFTH NIGHT.—Not approved. The strange mixing of the sexes leads to immodest thoughts. A woman masquerading as a man and vice versa violate the state law and many city ordinances. Shakespeare does not claim that a license for this masquerading was properly obtained.

LOVE'S LABOR LOST.—Passed.

MIDSUMMERNIGHT'S DREAM.—Eliminate Scene I. in Act III. It ridicules respectable mechanics and serves no good purpose whatever. The use of a so-called love juice is strictly against the rules of the board. Cut out latter part of Scene II. in Act III. Reduce all passionate love scenes to about six feet.

MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.—Scenes between Falstaff and Mistress Quickly in Act II. must come out.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.—The scenic views in this play may stand, but Shylock must be reduced to a flash, otherwise the tendency to ridicule the Jews will cause the entire suppression of the play.

AS YOU LIKE IT.—Reduce all scenes of reckless love making to a flash and eliminate the Duke from the last act.

WINTER'S TALE.—Cut out entirely Scene III. in Act III. showing the abandonment of an infant, which is contrary to the statutes of our states in such case made and provided.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.—Not approved. Aside from the levity with which matrimonial questions are treated in this play, we cannot tolerate the ridicule thrown upon Dogberry and Verges, the representatives of lawfully constituted authority. These two estimable officers of the law are held up to ignominy and obloquy.

TAMING OF THE SHREW.—Eliminate all scenes showing Petruchio in the act of offering physical violence to Kate.

THE TEMPEST.—No objection to the scenic views and the spectacular parts, but we insist that Caliban be either eliminated entirely or reduced to a flash.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.—Everything after Scene VII. in Act III. must come out. Helena has recourse to a degrading artifice which is bound to shock orderly and respectable married couples and may stimulate false sentiments in the breasts of our young men and girls. All the prolonged and passionate love scenes between Bertram and Diana are especially objectionable and must be removed in their entirety.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.—Not approved. Begets contempt for constituted authority. Shows murder and prostitution.

KING JOHN.—All reference to burning out eyes of prince in Act IV. must come out. Scene I. in Act III. is offensive to Catholics and must be removed.

RICHARD II.—Remove Scene IV. in Act I. as likely to excite prejudice against the rich and thereby inciting class hatred. Cut Scene V. in Act V., as it consists almost entirely of acts of criminal violence.

RICHARD III.—Not approved. This play abounds in crimes and villainies.

HENRY IV. (Part I.).—Suppress Scene II. in Act II., as it plainly shows an act of highway robbery. Suppress all scenes in Eastcheap tavern, because vulgar and disgusting.

HENRY IV. (Part II.).—Suppress Shallow and Silence. These caricatures of our lawful courts and judges breed a disrespect for law among the young. Suppress Dolly Tearsheet and Falstaff. The latter character is scandalous in every respect. His actions with Dolly Tearsheet cannot be visualized without grievous moral harm resulting to our children. Suppress all scenes laid in Mrs. Quickly's tavern. Such resorts will not be tolerated in this state.

HENRY V.—Passed.

KING HENRY VI. (Part I.).—Passed

KING HENRY VI. (Part II.).—Passed.

KING HENRY VI. (Part III.).—Omit Scene I. Act I., showing bloody swords, all the fight between Warwick and York and all the gruesome sights in Scene IV. of the same act. Omit greater part of Scene V. in Act II. as too horrible for portrayal; in Scene VI. of Act V. omit stabbing affray (King Henry and Gloucester).

KING HENRY VIII.—The divorce proceedings of the King against Catherine of Aragon are pointed out in too much detail. They might have a bad effect on married couples and must be reduced to a flash. Scene IV. in Act I. must be radically changed. The sub-title, "He would kiss you twenty times with a breath," must be omitted and the kiss following title must be reduced to normal length ordained by board. Scene III. in Act II. must be omitted as tending to corrupt young of both sexes. Omit Scene V. of Act V. as it might give offense to a large division of Christians.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.—Not approved. The play is altogether too horrible and gruesome. There are too many deeds of violence and crime and no soothing elements whatever. There is also torture and mutilation of which the board cannot approve.

TIMON OF ATHENS.—Passed.

CYMBELINE.—Not approved. The board cannot approve this play as the plot is based upon a scandalous and immoral wager. A man by trick and device gains entrance into a woman's room where the woman reposes in bed, partly disrobed. The man steals a bracelet from the partly disrobed woman. Such sights must scandalize the young and very possibly incite them to theft and other crimes.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.—Omit entirely Scene II. in Act III., Scenes II., III., IV. and V. in Act IV. These scenes show a disgraceful understanding between Achilles and a daughter of Priam. Cressida's conduct is positively immodest. Omit all passionate love scenes and reduce the frequent embraces and kisses of Troilus and Cressida to the length of one embrace and one kiss of the regulation length fixed by the board.

ROMEO AND JULIET.—Cut out Juliet. Here is a girl just in her teens conducting herself in a most unmaidenly fashion and opening her window in the night time or possibly in the early hours of the morning to a young man to whom she has never been properly introduced. This play abounds in the very kisses and embraces and passionate love scenes which the board has repeatedly condemned. There are too many street brawls of extreme violence. Reduce these to a flash of about ten feet. The board has frequently announced its disapproval of the administration of secret sleeping potions and all such scenes in the play must come out. The ball which Romeo and his companions appear in may remain as it is—educational in character.

OTHELLO.—A colored man marrying a white woman may give offense. The play may, however, be shown with the following eliminations: Cut out Iago. His conduct and language cannot be tolerated in a respectable community. Omit entirely Act V. This act shows the smothering of Desdemona and the suicide of Othello. Two such terrible crimes in one short act will not be approved by this board.

JULIUS CAESAR.—The assassination of Julius Caesar must be eliminated, as plainly offending against the rules of the board. As the plot however requires that the fact of the death be conveyed to the spectators, two courses may be pursued: Mark Antony may be shown receiving a letter announcing Caesar's death or Caesar may be shown dying a natural death caused by rheumatism or old age. Reduce all riots to a flash. Omit Scene II. in Act III. as plainly contrary to rules of the board.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.—Eliminate Cleopatra. Her professed contempt for marriage and her plainly adulterous passion for a married man and her habitual cruelty to her slaves stamp her as a woman from whose dreadful example the boys and girls of Ohio or Pennsylvania must be saved at all hazards. There is a snake in this play. It is true that the snake is small, but its effect on the women and children cannot but be deleterious.

KING LEAR.—Not approved. This play is a grave menace to the family life and the homes of Pennsylvania (or Ohio). There are at least four shameful and scandalous family discords and disruptions, involving criminal relations on the part of husbands, wives, illegitimate offspring and faithless servants. Bloody and barbarous scenes abound (death of Cordelia, blinding of Gloster, almost habitual tearing out of eyes, inhumanities of Duke of Cornwall). Immoral scenes, too, are scattered through the play. Adulteries, poisonings and acts of degeneracy are constantly met with. Never have the rules and regulations of our board been more recklessly violated than in this play.

HAMLET.—Not approved. This play is too hideous to receive the approval of our board, which has repeatedly ruled out the very things in which this play abounds. "The drinking of hot blood," for instance, and the doing of such "business as the bitter day would quake to look on" is highly unbecoming and might amount to disorderly conduct or even graver crime. Such things will not be allowed in the state of Pennsylvania (or Ohio). Evidently the author never heard of our rules and regulations, else he would have omitted at least all the capital offences.

MACBETH.—Not approved. This play visualizes several murders in the first degree and a shocking suicide committed by a woman. The conduct of Lady Macbeth if we permitted it to become generally known in Pennsylvania (or Ohio) would undoubtedly have a corrupting influence on our people and especially on the young of both sexes. What this woman says she would do to her own suckling baby if it stood between her and her ambition is not fit to be known by the young matrons of this state. If the producer will cut down the play to the scenes showing pretty scenes in the Scottish highlands, we will be inclined to give it our approval.

FRITZ DE LINT, NEW METRO LEAD.

Fritz de Lint, the new leading man who has been engaged to play in "What Will People Say," the next Metro feature in which Mme. Petrova is starred, had an eventful career in the army and diplomatic services in Denmark before coming to this country and going into motion picture work. De Lint was born in Denmark and was educated at Copenhagen and at Oxford, England, for the diplomatic corps. After graduation he was made a Lieutenant in the Academic Corps of Denmark, in which the Crown Prince of Denmark, now King Christian X., served. De Lint had a brief engagement on the stage in Petrograd before he came to the United States. He is twenty-six years old, weighs 195 pounds and stands six feet two inches in height. He is an all-around athlete, and is an expert horseman, tennis player and fencer. "What Will People Say" will be produced by Popular Plays and Players.

The Special Tax Laws

For the benefit and guidance of our readers and in response to many inquiries The Moving Picture World prints the full text of the Emergency Revenue Law as it refers to motion picture theaters.

THEATERS, ETC.

Sixth.—Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than two hundred and fifty, shall pay $25; having a seating capacity of more than two hundred and fifty and not exceeding five hundred, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity exceeding five hundred and not exceeding eight hundred, shall pay $75; having a seating capacity of more than eight hundred shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including hall or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater; Provided, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease.

(73) Persons are not required to pay special taxes for the more occasional renting of their hall for public performances to dramatic companies or other persons charging entrance money therefor, but the special tax of $10 is required to be paid by such persons or companies if they give dramatic performances or the other exhibitions specifically mentioned in paragraph 8, section 2. (Subdivision 6, Sec, 3, Act Oct. 22, 1914.)

(74) Where theaters are entirely closed to performances during the months of July and August, and only open in the month of September, the special tax is to be reckoned from the 1st day of September to the 1st day of July following, at the rate of $100 for the year beginning July 1. (Nov. 1, 1914, to June 30, 1915, current year.) (Circular No. 508, Aug. 8, 1898; Vol. 2, Treas. Dec., No. 19843.)

(75) Moving picture shows taxable as theaters under Section 6. (T. D. 2040.).

(76) A special-tax stamp taken out by the lessees of a theater can not, upon their transferring their lease to other persons, be transferred and made to answer for the latter persons in conducting the theater. (T. D. 20396.)

There has been a change in the rulings with regard to air-domes. As these rulings are very likely to be adhered to even if the amount of the special tax is changed we reprint them here in substance:

TO COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE, REVENUE AGENTS AND OTHERS:

This office (Treasury Department) has previously held that proprietors of air-domes, in which operatic, dramatic or other representations, plays or performances, motion picture shows, etc., for admission to which entrance money is received, are given, are required to pay special tax under the provisions of the eighth subdivision of Section 3, Act of October 22, 1914.

However, upon further deliberation, it is now of the opinion that the proprietors of such air-domes are required to pay special tax under the provisions of the sixth subdivision of Section 3, Act aforesaid, such tax being based upon the seating capacity of such air-domes.

Where such air-dome is adjacent to a theater for which the special tax has been paid, and the seating capacity of the air-dome does not exceed the seating capacity of the theater, and performances are not given simultaneously in the air-dome and theater, the special tax stamp, secured to cover the theater, will cover performances given in the air-dome.

Where the proprietor of a theater operates an air-dome at another location, upon closing his theater he may transfer the special tax stamp issued for such theater to the air-dome, provided, of course the seating capacity of the air-dome does not exceed the seating capacity of the theater, and the special tax stamp, issued to cover performances given in an air-dome, may be transferred to cover a theater owned by the same party, under the above conditions.

Proprietors of such air-domes, who have paid special taxes under the eighth subdivision of Section 3, Act aforesaid, unless they hold special tax stamp for a theater which may be transferred to cover such air-domes, will be required to take out special tax stamp under the sixth subdivision of Section 3, Act aforesaid, and may thereupon present for redemption special tax stamp secured under the eighth subdivision above mentioned. Of course, under such circumstances, liability to 50 per cent. penalty will not be incurred.

W. H. OSBORN, Commissioner.

Co-operation Keynote of General Film

President Berst Will Work for a Closer Relation Between the Company and Its Patrons—Old Methods to Be Discarded, Branch Managers to Have More Latitude and to Make Close Study of Business Conditions—Era of Good Feeling Promised.

CO-OPERATION with a big "C" is the keynote of the new administration of the business of the General Film Company now under the direction of J. A. Berst, the newly elected president. The old order of things, characterized chiefly by a supreme indifference to the simplest wishes and commonest needs of the patrons of the company and a total disregard of all rules of modern business promotion, has gone into the discard and in its stead will be inaugurated a regime of business building and creative effort.

This is, to all intents and purposes, the message that is given to the exhibitors throughout the country by President Berst. He does not put it just that way or in the exact words used, but it is not difficult to understand that he means all that when you hear him talk about the plans now being considered by the new administration of the General Film Company.

A representative of the Moving Picture World spent a profitable hour with Mr. Berst at the offices of the company soon after he had taken up the reins of management. It was the tone of finality which characterized his utterances and the apparent pleasure with which he announced the passing of the old methods which led the writer to conclude that a new General Film Company was soon to come into being.

But, withal, Mr. Berst is a man cautious of speech and not given to anticipating his actions by his words.

"What have I to say?" was his quizzical rejoinder after he had been told that he might want to say something about his plans. "What do you want me to say?" But this was only his way of clearing the ground, or the atmosphere, at the moment, for presently he talked—some for publication and some not to be repeated without the four walls—and to the point.

"You may say that the new policies of the General Film Company will very soon be made known to the exhibitors and to the employees of the company. The basis will be co-operation. I want to give the branch managers more leeway than they have had in the past. I want them to get in closer touch with the exhibitors and to establish more friendly relations with them. I want them to co-operate to the fullest extent with the manufacturers and to keep them informed at all times regarding the demands of the exhibitors in order that the manufacturers may know what kind of pictures are wanted and what are not wanted.

"I want all branch managers to keep in touch with each other and, to make this communication more possible, the company will establish at once a house organ for circulation only among its employees. This will enable us to improve our business methods and our pictures and therefore, give better service to the exhibitors.

"I am heartily in favor of placing our employees on a profit-sharing basis and, though the announcement made in the Moving Picture World of this week regarding this and other matters, was a little premature, I am at present working on a plan which will be submitted to the Board of Directors for its sanction. There are, also, under consideration, a plan for handling the product of the several manufacturers on a profit-sharing basis, the details of which have still to be disposed of before the matter can be finally adopted.

"In connection with the program of which the Moving Picture World has published the tentative form, the General Film Company will issue after December 20 a new form of program to be known as the "Unit Program." This program will consist of five or six reels from a single company and will be locked together. It may be divided into a three-reel and a two-reel, or a three-reel and two single reels, or a five-reel and a single reel. Each combination or unit will bear the name of the maker who supplies it and will continue as a unit throughout its term of service. The unit service will be in addition to the pictures supplied by each firm for the regular service. So far the Vitagraph and the Lubin companies have agreed to supply a "unit program" every week. Very likely other manufacturers will shortly do the same. These reels will be furnished to the General Film Company on the profit-sharing plan as are now being furnished the Chaplin pictures and the "Goddess" series.

Mr. Berst hinted that there might be other variations of this "unit program" idea, but said that he was not authorized to state positively that it would go further than already outlined. It presents new possibilities for the manufacturer and is likely to become popular.

In keeping with the new plan for co-operation Mr. Berst said the office of General Manager had been abolished and that, for the purposes of distribution of pictures the United States would be divided into four districts, with a district manager in full charge. This new program necessitated dispensing with the services of P. L. Waters, general manager; Louis Reichert, assistant manager, and special representatives Joseph Unger, J. E. Willis and F. L. Smith. Fred Aiken will be the district manager for the Middle West and H. H. Hicks for the Pacific Coast District. Other appointments will be made soon.

The four divisions, Mr. Berst explained, will be known as the Eastern District, the Middle Western District, the Southern District and the Pacific Coast District. The Eastern District will extend west to Cleveland and South to Philadelphia and Pittsburgh; the Western District will extend from Cleveland to Denver, with St. Louis and Kansas City as Southern points. The Southern District will extend from Washington south and west to Dallas, Texas, and include Oklahoma. The Pacific Coast District will take in all the territory from Denver, north and south to the coast.

"There is nothing true in the mischievous rumors that the General Film Company will disband," said Mr. Berst, referring to statements that had been published to that effect. "As the company conducts its business according to all the laws of this country, including the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, its officers have nothing to fear from the action of the Government; but in the event that the decree, when handed down, should, in the opinion of our counsel, be unjust, it will be appealed for the protection of the stockholders of the company."

Though it was long after hours when the World representative concluded his mission, Mr. Berst was still busy with official details. It is evident that he proposes to start things going along the lines laid out by the new administration and will not spare himself in the starting. There is every indication that with the new officers in charge the General Film Company will soon take its place with the other enterprising, business creating organizations of the motion picture trade.

V-L-S-E NEEDS MORE ROOM.

Announcement is made that beginning December 1, the Big Four will occupy the entire sixth floor of the Mecca Building, in which it now is quartered, at 1600 Broadway. Some time ago, therefore, negotiations were made looking toward a substantial expansion in office space, and the arrangements have just been completed, whereby the floor which has been occupied by the Kriterion Film Corporation will be taken over by the V-L-S-E. The total area of this space is 12,500 square feet, or one-third more than that which the Big Four now has.

The quarters of the New York Exchange and Booking Department will be greatly enlarged, as a result of this move, and will be so arranged as to facilitate greatly the conduct of business. Other principals of the organization will likewise enjoy superior working arrangements.

ETRIS REPORTS DEMAND FOR LUBIN PRODUCT.

Bob Etris, the traveling special representative of the Lubin Company, has returned to Philadelphia after a trip extending over the past three months, during which time he has visited every General Film exchange in the country and Canada and has addressed many gatherings of exhibitors.

Mr. Etris reports a remarkable growth of the popularity of the newer Lubin product, and the almost general acceptance of the D. L. Don and Billie Reeves comedies as among the best now being offered by any producing company.

Within the week Mr. Etris will again leave Philadelphia for an extended tour of the principal cities of the United States.

"THE AMBITION OF MARK TRUITT."

Oscar Eagle, who has just completed the five-reel feature, "The Sins of Society," in which Robert Warwick has the stellar role, has taken a company south for the purpose of filming his next subject, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt."

Screeners' Ball a Splendid Affair

Fifteen Hundred Representative Men and Women Attend Fourth Annual Function of Film Trade's Club.

THE fourth annual ball of the Screen Club was held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor on the evening of Saturday, November 20. It was a marked social success. The treasury of the club, too, will be augmented by a substantial sum as a result of the ball. It is estimated there were 1,500 persons present, practically all connected in some way with the film industry. This is an increase of about 50 per cent. over last year's attendance.

The dancing began about 9 o'clock, at which hour the Screeners and their friends began to arrive. They continued to pour into the hall until after midnight. Although every one of the thirty-six boxes on the second floor had been sold many of these were vacant during the greater part of the night, there being plainly a preference for the main floor or for the various dining rooms surrounding the grand ballroom.

There were many words of praise for the efficient manner in which Will C. Smith, of the Nicholas Power Company, had managed the lighting effects. The varicolored rays of light thrown from the lamps in the upper balcony markedly enhanced the beauty of the spectacle and proved a striking background for the elaborate costumes of the women. In the grand march were as many as could with facility be managed in the great room.

President Billy Quirk was out in front of the long line of dancers, escorting Clara Kimball Young. Vice-President Harry Myers was next, with Rosemary Theby. Then came King Baggot, chairman of the committee of arrangements, escorting Mrs. Quirk.

Siegmund Lubin came over from Philadelphia with a contingent of his players. He was much in company during the night with his old-time pal and brother manufacturer, William T. Rock. The two "Pops" are regulars at Screen Club balls and are among the last to say good-night. David Horsley was an early arrival, admitting that he had traveled from Los Angeles to be present. With Mr. Lubin came Mrs. Lubin, Ferdinand Singhi, with Mrs. Singhi; George Terwilliger, Mary Charleson, Ormi Hawley, Earle Metcalfe, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Lang, Lottie Briscoe, Billy Reeves and Joe Farnham.

Daniel Frohman, just as was the case a year before, came early and remained late. The veteran producer is a tireless as well as a graceful dancer, and overlooks no terpsichorean bets. Adolph Zukor, too, accompanied by several of his brightest stars, was in evidence. Carle Laemmle looked up old friends. Ad Kessel, Charles Kessel and Charles O. Baumann entertained a party in one of the restaurants, declining to remain in the exclusive precincts of a box. P. A. Powers was too busy dancing to talk. John F. Skerrett talked California to H. H. Hicks, special representative of the General Film Company for the western half of the United States. Mr. Hicks dropped into town just in time to take in the big show and enjoyed every minute of the night. Lewis J. Selznick was fraternizing with King Baggot and William Farnum. Arthur H. Spiegel was accompanied by his general manager, Felix Feist. Harry Raver, original Screener, came early. Charles K. Harris was accompanied by Mrs. Harris. J. C. Graham and Mrs. Graham and Jesse Goldburg and Mrs. Goldburg were present. H. M. Horkheimer was tempted to admit that New York does things almost as well as does Los Angeles. Joe Engel and Paul Cromelin were other prominent film men seen during the night.

Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the Massachusetts Exhibitors' League, came on from Boston. He was accompanied by Samuel Grant, chairman of the committee of arrangements for the ball of the Bay State exhibitors on December 1, and H. I. Wasserman, another Massachusetts exhibitor. Dan Mason, veteran comedian and screen player, traveled from Providence. Screen stars and players were legion. There were few absent.

Breakfast was served in the clubhouse after the dance, and hundreds adjourned from the hotel to the quarters in Forty-seventh street. There was open house for the women friends of the members from Saturday noon to the close of the house Sunday evening. This is an annual occasion, and the feminine side of the film world always enjoys the lone opportunity of looking in on the club home of the film men. Posted on the bulletin were many telegrams from absent Screeners and friends of the organization. Among these were messages from Mabel Condon in San Francisco and Frank Powell in Chicago, the latter busy on the production of "The Fourth Estate."

The box holders were: The New York Motion Picture Company, Edwin Carewe, Frank Powell, Nicholas Power Company, James Kirkwood, William Farnum, Tom Terriss, William Quirk, Pathe Freres (two), Famous Players, F. G. Poppa, King Baggot, Ben F. Wilson, Solax, Harry R. Raver, World Film Corporation, Clara Kimball Young, Louis J. Selznick, Equitable, Metro (two), Peerless, Vitagraph, Marshall Farnum, Ed Roskam, J. C. Graham, William Fox, Edison Company, Harry Myers, Louis Hall, Hugh Hoffman, A. P. Kelly, George Terwilliger, Thomas G. Wiley and Benjamin Goetz.

The door committee were John Race, treasurer of the club; J. H. Gerhardt, committee treasurer; Frank Smith, Charles H. Green and Charles Brandt. Jule Bernstein had charge of the sale of boxes.

The Screen Club and the film trade in general well may be proud of the fourth annual ball. For that matter, any other industry well might be.

Boston All Set For Big Ball

Third Annual Function of Massachusetts Exhibitors to Be Largely Attended by Film Men and Players.

ALL plans are complete for the third annual ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, which will be held in the Arena in Boston on the evening of Wednesday, December 1. Samuel Grant, chairman of the executive committee, has been dividing his time between his office in Room 904, Columbia Theater Building, New York City, and the headquarters of the committee at 34 School street, Boston. Mr. Grant reports that he has been given every co-operation by the film manufacturers, and that, besides the many players who will be released from their duties that they may attend the annual function at the Hub, several heads of companies, as well as many of their chief representatives, will leave New York for Boston on the Knickerbocker Limited at one o'clock on December 1.

Among the film chiefs who will be present are Siegmund Lubin, William T. Rock, Ad. Kessel, Charles Kessel, Charles O. Baumann, William Wright, Richard A. Rowland, Len McChesney, Lewis J. Selznick and J. S. Martin, Gaumont. It is the understanding that Carl Laemmle will make a strenuous effort to be there. For the Fox Company it is said either Winfield R. Sheehan or A. Carlos will attend. Samuel Spedon will be the little father of the Vitagraph contingent, and Arthur James will guard the Metro players. Leon J. Rubinstein will be at the head of the Thanhouser delegation. It is announced that Edwin Thanhouser will offer a position to that woman in the grand march who seems in her personality the best to combine those qualities for the making of a successful motion picture actress.

Among the players whose attendance has been promised by their employers are Douglas Fairbanks, Owen Moore, and Dorothy Gish, Triangle; Earle Williams, Anita Stewart, Edith Storey, Mary Maurice, Hughie Mack and Wally Van, Vitagraph; Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick and two others, World Film; Viola Dana and three others, Edison; William Farnum, Theda Bara and two others, William Fox; Marguerite Courtot, Kalem; Pearl White and three others, Pathe; Flo La Badie, Mignon Anderson, Gladys Hulette, Louise Emerald Bates, Morris Foster and Ethyle Cook, Thanhouser; Mme. Petrova, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Mary Miles Minter, Metro; Cissy Fitzgerald, Francine Larrimore, Grace Valentine and the Mutual Traveler, Gaumont; King Baggot, Paul Panzer, Mary Fuller and Violet Mersereau, Universal; Christine Mayo, United. The representatives of the Kleine and Famous Players studios have not as yet been named.

The grand march will be led by Governor Walsh of Massachusetts and eleven players—five men and six women—to be selected by ballot. For several weeks the Boston American has been conducting a contest for the determination of the leaders of the march. It has aroused much interest in New England. It is expected that two million votes will be cast. The last coupons were printed on Sunday, November 21, and it will be several days before all are counted. Some of the companies were a bit slow in getting into the fight, but they have been making strenuous exertions in the closing days.

Chairman Grant said he expected the house to be sold out before the doors of the Arena are opened. Last year's ball brought together the largest indoor assemblage ever recorded in New England, and it is believed the number this year will equal that of its predecessor, which of course will be limited by the capacity of the Arena—between eight and nine thousand persons. One hundred and fifteen additional boxes have been constructed, making the number now 240. The price of admission is $1 for each person. All of the municipal departments in Boston have been co-operating with the committee, doing everything possible to insure the comfort of those attending.

The officers of the executive committee aiding Mr. Grant are R. W. Brown, secretary, and G. M. Clark, treasurer. E. H. Horstmann, president of the state league, also has been active.

INFORMATION ON MISS BENNETT WANTED.

J. C. Hizar, attorney-at-law, San Diego, Cal., is desirous of locating Laura Biggar Bennett. Those who know the whereabouts of Miss Bennett will please advise her to get into communication with Mr. Hizar, who says that the matter involved relates to her father's estate.

Teddy Sampson With Equitable

TEDDY SAMPSON, in real life Mrs. Ford Sterling, and for the past two years associated with D. W. Griffith at his Hollywood studio, became a member of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation's roster of stellarites this week, when she entered into a long-term contract to appear exclusively for that company. Miss Sampson arrived in New York last Sunday after a trip across the continent, during which trip she stopped at eighteen cities and appeared personally in theatres at which films in which she was featured were playing.

Teddy Sampson.

Miss Sampson will, in all likelihood, be seen in the production of "A Man and the Desert," in which it is now the intention of the Equitable to offer the virile actor, Emmett Corrigan, or the noted dramatic player, Frank Sheridan.

Miss Sampson created her most favorable impression by the work she did in "The Fox Woman," which was one of D. W. Griffith's most liked works of last season. In "The Fox Woman" Miss Sampson proved herself a genuine actress, not alone a dancer, as she had aspired to be, through her first two years, during which she was a featured member of Gus Edwards' acts. In addition to "The Fox Woman" Miss Sampson has appeared as a featured member in "The Outlaw's Revenge," "The Escape," "Home, Sweet Home," in which she played the heavy part, and was co-starred with Helen Ware in "Cross Currents," which is a forthcoming Triangle release.

Miss Sampson will begin work at the Equitable studio within the week and will probably appear in one of the S. E. V. Taylor productions before beginning her feature under Frank Powell or John Ince.

HOUSMAN WITH LUBIN.

Arthur A. Housman, formerly of the Edison Company, has joined the staff of Lubin players and will make his first appearance under the Lubin banner with Director Jack Pratt in a prominent role in Daniel Carson Goodman's big railroad story, "Fate," which will have its release through the V-L-S-E, Inc., offices early in 1916.

Mr. Housman's record as a player of note has been written. Suffice it to say the Lubin Company feels it has made a valuable acquisition, one the merit of which will be ably proved by the interpretation of the roles to be intrusted to Mr. Housman.

PATHE NOT IN ALLEGED NEW COMBINE.

Regarding the story published in a theatrical magazine stating that Pathe had formed a $50,000,000 combination with several other motion picture concerns, General Manager Louis J. Gasnier at once sent out an emphatic denial that such an alliance had been made or even considered. Advertisements addressed to the public were placed in the New York papers to this effect as soon as the story was brought to Mr. Gasnier's attention. In a statement issued at his office he stamped the story as a senseless fabrication.

PHOTOPLAYERS ARE GEORGE J. GOULD'S GUESTS.

Ashley Miller yesterday took his company for the fourth episode in his Ashton Kirk series for the Pathe Gold Roosters, including Arnold Daly, Sheldon Lewis, Pearl White and George Probert, down to Lakewood, where a number of scenes will be taken inside and outside of the sumptuous home there of George J. Gould, who entertained the company on his estate. The public will have an opportunity of seeing how a millionaire lives at his country place.

"Helen" Has a Birthday

Kalem's Popular "Hazards of Helen" Series Starts Second Year of Life This Month.

THIS is anniversary month for the "Hazards of Helen." A year ago the Kalem Company, noticing the popularity of their occasional railroad pictures, originated the "Hazards of Helen" series, which soon proved to be among the most popular of Kalem subjects. Last month the announcement was made in the trade publications that, in response to the requests of many exhibitors, the series would be continued indefinitely. Kalem officials believe the record of continuous weekly issue for over a year establishes a new mark in picture series.

Scene from "Crossed Wires" (Kalem).

At the same time that it was decided to continue the series for an indefinite time, Kalem officials began to lay plans for an unusual group of releases to mark the celebration of the anniversary month. E. W. Matlack, the Pittsburgh railroad official who has been responsible for most of the Helen stories, got into the spirit of the anniversary, and the players and directors were also worked up to an enthusiastic point. The series was really a year old last November, but as the pictures that were being produced then will not be released until December the latter month was designated as "anniversary month."

Whether or not anniversary month would be a success was finally up to Helen Gibson, however, for it is that petite player who must bear the brunt of the perils and dangers that beset Helen. The difficulty of calling upon Helen to perform anything more startling than she has in the past may be guessed when it is remembered that she has enacted such feats as leaping from the roof of a station to the top of a train speeding by, pursuing a runaway car on a handcar and then jumping to the handrail of the freight, and others of this character. But Helen merely smiled and promised to contribute her share toward the celebration by doing any feat that the scenario would call for. The result is a quartette of pictures which the Kalem officials believe the most interesting yet issued in the series.

"The Tramp Telegrapher," released December 4, inaugurates anniversary month. It starts in slam-bang fashion when Trent, a tramp telegrapher, beaten unconscious by a pair of crooks, is rescued by Helen just in time to save him from death under the wheels of a train. But the big thrill comes later when Helen and Trent, in pursuit of the thieves who have burgled the station safe, reach the train on which the yeggs are escaping just in time to land on the rods underneath the car. Determined to catch their quarry before they can escape at the next station, Trent braces his legs on the rods so that his body is at right angles to the car, and using his body as a perch, Helen climbs to the window, and inside the car.

"Crossed Wires," scheduled for release on December 11, is equally abounding in sensations, one of the most tense of which occurs when Helen pursues a train by automobile and then leaps to the car, where a struggle with an escaped convict ensues. For several moments Helen, in the automobile, and the convict on the freight car engage in a struggle, before the convict climbs to the top and Helen makes her leap.

"The Wrong Train Order," which will be issued on December 18, puts Helen in a perilous position alone on a runaway train. Open switches, an open drawbridge, and an oncoming train on the same track are among the breathtaking dangers which Helen narrowly escapes before she is able to stop the train. On December 25, the fourth of the anniversary month specials will be released. It is "A Boy at the Throttle," in which Helen drops ten feet from the top girder of a suspension bridge to a speeding train.

Actress Changes Name

WITH the release of the Lubin four-part drama "Heartaches," during the week of November 29, there will appear in the character of Kate Merry, the winsome little country miss, a new name in photoplays, and although photoplay fans will recognize in the features of this dainty and talented little actress Miss Vinnie Burns, they, too, will be forcibly impressed with the new name which Miss Burns has adopted.

June Daye.

Recently there was released a Lubin picture, "The Desert Honeymoon," in which Miss Burns appeared in the leading role. The excellent performance which she gave in this production earned for her a new host of friends, and since its day of release there has been a constant stream of letters in congratulation to her. Among these letters came one from a young girl admirer of Philadelphia, who, writing on behalf of her many friends, requested that Miss Burns grant her an interview at the studios. Miss Burns agreed and stated the time. Promptly there, the writer of the letter, and with her a committee of fifty young Philadelphia girls, and with an apt speech they presented to their idol a magnificent bunch of fifty American Beauty roses, bearing a card which read, "To Our Favorite, JUNE DAYE."

Impressed with the symphony of the two names, Miss Burns agreed, and now she wants the rest of her friends of the country to know that beginning with her appearance as Kate Merry in "Heartaches," released some time during the week of November 29, she will be known only as June Daye. She hopes you all are going to be as favorably impressed as she is with her adoption.

It will be 350 feet long by 175 feet wide, and is said to be the largest indoor artificially-lighted studio in the world. The building will be of brick and steel. The second story will be devoted to offices. It is expected the studio will be ready for occupancy in January.

Going Direct to the Public

Richard A. Rowland, President of the Metro Corporation, Advocates General Advertising as an Aid to Exhibitors.

EVER since the founding of the Metro Pictures Corporation, President Richard A. Rowland has been a firm advocate of liberal advertising aimed at the public. He has been willing to wait patiently for returns, in the belief that in the long run it would pay to establish the name "Metro," and if possible to create a public demand for the product of the corporation that would virtually force exhibitors to show its pictures. From the first he has held consistently to this policy and it has been borne out by excellent results.

Richard A. Rowland.

In a recent interview with a World man, Mr. Rowland said that the present policy of the Metro Corporation called for an even more energetic campaign designed to reach photoplay patrons.

"Some may call it going over the heads of the exhibitors," he said, "but as a matter of fact it is the best way of helping exhibitors to make money, if they stop to figure the matter out as we have. I believe, of course, as does every thoughtful picture producer, that the first requisite of success is a consistently good program; not a perfect program, for no manufacturer can boast of that, as yet; but one that maintains a reasonably high average. The next step is to let the public know where and when the program can be seen that they may acquire the habit of looking for releases bearing a trusted endorsement.

"Too many exhibitors follow a hit-and-miss policy, counting on the receipts of a Saturday, or of some other day when a particularly strong feature is shown, to balance deficits during the other days of the week. I believe that this uncertainty may be eliminated if a house manager will take the trouble to find out just which program best suits the taste of his patrons and then uses it continuously. This test of the public taste may only be made by experimenting with the various programs and counting the results. For instance, an exhibitor may try Metro pictures on certain days of the week, using Paramount, World Film or the product of some other producer on other days, and before long he should know which brand strikes the highest average in drawing power. When he selects the best possible supply, he may standardize the name by newspaper advertising and other legitimate publicity methods until his patrons become regular attendants because they have faith in the quality of the output of such and such a manufacturer. This is founding a business on a solid basis.

"Only a few days ago we had a significant illustration of the value of spending money to tell the public what is o view in a theater. An exhibitor in a small town who had experimented with feature pictures wrote to one of our exchange managers, stating that there was no money in features because his average daily receipts were only $55. The exchange manager replied by offering to pay the bill for $25 worth of advertising if he spent that amount on a Metro production and his receipts did not more than warrant the expenditure. The exhibitor spent the $25, reported a record day with receipts of $286 and now is profitably following up the same policy.

"Every month it becomes easier for a producer to go direct to the public and tell what he has to offer. It is now the rule, rather than the exception, for newspapers to carry photoplay departments, and their editors always welcome readable stories about plays and players. Our publicity department is careful to serve these papers with interesting facts about Metro activities, and then, entirely for the benefit of so-called fans, we issue the Metro Pictures Magazine, which in its fourth issue jumped to a circulation of one million. This may sound unbelievable, but we have figures as evidence. I regard the magazine as one of the most valuable of all possible mediums for widening the interest in our photoplays and exhibitors certainly are sharing in the profits."

Coming to the much discussed subject of stage play adaptations and picturizations of novels, President Rowland agreed with other far-sighted producers in believing that the day of original work has arrived. "I am inclined to think," he continued, "that the advertising value of the name of a play is apt to be greatly over-rated. Naturally, there are a few plays that are bound to go big throughout the country on account of their reputations, but they are few, indeed, in proportion to the number of pictures produced. The material found in novels is likely to be better suited to screen purposes; but even here the success of the picture is largely dependent upon the skill of the scenario writer. He must alter and amplify from his own imagination until the completed product is to all intents and purposes an original work."

Mr. Rowland said that, judging from his own experience, many good photoplay stories are rejected because the men who read the manuscripts fail to see the possibilities under technical crudities. His remarks on this subject indicate that an author with a plot worth developing into a five-reel picture will be cordially received at the Metro office, even if his treatment is a bit rough.

Speaking of the record thus far made by Metro, Mr. Rowland mentioned the rapid growth of the corporation and the steady betterment of its product. "We have made a few mistakes, no doubt, but they have not been serious enough to check our progress. In the early days, when our producing resources were limited, we worked under pressure and even at that not one picture fell so far below par that it had to be shelved. We believe this to be a statement that could be made by few producers. At the present time we have the directors, the actors and the studio facilities required in the making of the best photoplays and we do not fear comparison with any program on the market."

"Duke" Aldis Joins Pallas

"DUKE" ALDIS, otherwise known to the Los Angeles smart set as "F. F.," has been engaged as assistant to William D. Taylor, director of Pallas Pictures, the new Paramount organization. Aldis, who is quite a society lion, has been quietly devoted to the moving picture game for the past year or two, starting in pluckily at the bottom with the determination to climb to a director's honors, and this is the first success he has deemed significant enough to justify telling of his career to his society coterie. Naturally, of course, there was much astonishment and surprise that the cotillion hero was now a film capture.

"Duke" Aldis.

Aldis was educated at St. Elphin's College in Kent, England, and then was sent to the continent, where he studied at Osnabruck College in Germany and at the College du Cateau in La Cateau, France, a town near Lille and at present held by the Germans.

Before he was 19 Aldis was on the firing line in the Boer war in South Africa as a member of the South African Constabulary, the crack cavalry regiment of the Cape country. He figured in countless night attacks and battles, but his health broke down toward the end of the campaign and he was invalided home shortly after Diamond Hill, the decisive engagement preceding the fall of Pretoria. He was presented with the war medals and bars awarded by Queen Victoria and King Edward VII.

Coming Vitagraphs

THE Vitagraph Company announces two Blue Ribbon Features for December. The first, "A Price for Folly," a five-part drama of French social life, will be released on Monday, December 13. The second release of the month will again bring Frank Daniels to the fore in Mary Roberts Rinhart's story, "What Happened to Father," in which Mr. Daniels has a part similar to those that have made his name a household word. In holding "What Happened to Father" for release until the latter part of the month, namely, Monday, December 27, the Vitagraph Company offers it as their contribution to the festivities of the holiday season.

Scene from "A Price for Folly" (Vitagraph).

"A Price for Folly" was written by George I. Dillenback and produced by George D. Baker. The cast includes Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Harry Morey, Charles Kent, Louise Beaudet and Hughie Mack. It was presented at the Vitagraph theater in May last and scored a great success. The press reviewers chracterized it as remarkable for magnificent interpretation and exquisite settings and carrying a story both strong and consistent.

Scene from "What Happened to Father" (Vitagraph).

Diametrically opposed in theme and treatment, "What Happened to Father," is radically different from "A Price for Folly." It is comedy, pure, wholesome and refined that carries a laugh because of spontaneous pantomimic humor of the story. The story is that of a retired business man, who writes a comic opera which he prevails upon one of his daughter's suitors to produce and in which father plays one of the parts himself and in which his particular style of acting earns the disapproval of the audience and he consequently has to fly to escape a too realistic demonstration of their estimation of his ability.

Regular Program for November and December.

The merging of November into December has been signalized by the Vitagraph Company in assembling a weekly program of exceptional releases. Commencing Monday, November 29, the week will be equally divided between comedy and drama, each subject enacted and directed by some of the best known players and producers of both the Eastern and Western Vitagraph Companies.

Two new Vitagraph stars, Ethel Corcoran and William Dangman, assisted by Florence Natol, are responsible for the enactment of the principal characters in the Tuesday release, "The Mystery of the Empty Room," produced by Courtlandt Van Deusen. It is a powerful drama that develops tragic moments. Many tense scenes depict in sequence the principal points in the story.

Sceen from "One Plus One Equals One" (Vitagraph).

The Vitagraph Company will usher in December with a comedy from the Western Company, entitled "A Scandal in Hickville," that is a riot of fun, by an all-star cast, including William Duncan, George Stanley, Anne Schaefer, Otto Lederer, Alfred Vosburg, Marguerite Reid and Carlton Weatherby, one of the latest players to join the company at Los Angeles.

A star cast of Eastern Players, including Flora Finch, Kate Price, Rose Tapley and Florence Natol, appear in the release for Thursday, December 2, "The Conquest of Constantia." The story starts as a comedy, that develops into a human interest drama. An old maid, a small boy and the Fourth of July, furnish the motive, while an adventure of the old maid's cat and the boy, are responsible for the climax.

Scene from "The Conquest of Constantia" (Vitagraph).

"The Home Cure," the "Sidney Drew Day" release announced for Friday, December 3, was written and produced by Mr. Drew, and enacted by the Vitagraph comedian and his talented wife. The possibilities of its theme, the curing of a man's friendship for drink, is not only productive of many ludicrous situations, but has an underlying note that teaches a sermon on temperance.

A Broadway Star Feature is announced for Saturday in "Cal Marvin's Wife," that will be of special interest because of the initial appearance of Mary Anderson in a Western feature. It was written by Lulu Case Russell. The story by Lulu Case Russell combines a unit of city life as lived by an actress with the boundless freedom and right living of an upright man of the plains. The backgrounds are typical of the story. A cast, including Mary Anderson, Anne Schaefer, William Duncan, Otto Lederer, Carlton Weatherby and George Kunkel, will be seen in the story's enactment.

Violet Mesereau

"I HAVE played in the pictures every summer for the past five years," says Violet Mersereau, the pretty Imp-Universal star. "Now I will devote my time to work for the screen." Miss Mersereau is one of the youngest moving picture stars in this country. She was born in New York City some eighteen years ago and has done professional work since she was nine. When her father died, her mother was left with three children to care for. Her friends advised that she find places for talented Violet and her little sister in the theatrical profession. Soon after Miss Mersereau played with Margaret Anglin and Maxine Elliott in stock and in "The Clansman." Her greatest success was in the leading role in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," which she played in this country and abroad.

Violet Mesereau.

About five years ago Miss Mersereau began to play in moving pictures and appeared in screen stories of the Vitagraph, Pathe, Nestor and Famous Players' companies before she joined the Universal. She has become a great favorite as a comedienne, and her latest screen appearance is in the Imp compedy of country life entitled "Getting His Goat," with William Garwood.

Clarissa Selwynne

CLARISSA SELWYNNE is rapidly creating for herself the reputation of being the handsomest and cleverest adventuress on the American motion picture screen. Be sure when you see Miss Selwynne's name in the cast of a photoplay you are going to have an impersonation which will make your flesh creep.

Clarissa Selwynne.

Of course, personally, Miss Selwynne is a charming as well as an attractive young lady. In England she worked on the legitimate stage under the management of Arthur Bourchier, Charles Cartwright, Lyn Harding and Lena Ashwell. Two years of Shakespearean repertoire preceded her appearance in pictures. "Hearts in Exile" (World Film); "The Flash of an Emerald" (World Film), are some recent releases in which Miss Selwynne figured with beauty and distinction.

Like all clever, intelligent young actresses, Miss Selwynne recognizes that the picture is the ideal medium for artistic expression in acting. She adds grace and intelligence to any cast and will surely electrify her audiences when she gets her great chance.

Richard C. Travers

RICHARD C. TRAVERS, an Essanay leading man, is now able to appear in pictures again, after completing a cycle of misfortunes. It all started when Mr. Travers, who was playing the part of a tramp, in Essanay's three-act drama, "The Undertow," attempted to flip a freight train in a scene in the play. Hurled to the ground when the engineer's hat blew in his face, he sustained a badly wrenched knee, a long cut on his arm and a broken hand. Barely rallying from this he was threatened with typhoid fever. Then rheumatism set in in his knee, part of which had been shot away in the Boer war. This yielded to treatment, and now Travers is wondering what next.

Richard C. Travers.

Mr. Travers is known for his daring, a man willing to take all kinds of risks and enjoy them. He probably has been in more accidents than any other photoplayer, Born in the Hudson Bay district, at a trading post far from any city, he never even saw a white woman, except his mother, until he was ten years old. Six feet tall and of rugged physique, his out-door life inured him to the hardships of his soldier-of-fortune life of after years. He fought in both the Spanish-American and the Boer war, in the latter losing a section of his knee bone from a schrapnel. This was replaced with silver and apparently is as good as ever.

Mr. Travers studied to become a physician but gave up practice to go on the stage. He played in stock in Toronto and Montreal, Canada, as well as in the United States. Five years ago he began his work in motion pictures by driving a racing auto in a picture. Later he came to Essanay and quickly made his way to leading man. He has starred in such pictures as "The White Sister" with Viola Allen, "The Palace of the King," "The Man Trail" and "The Snow Burner."

NOTED BOY ACTOR ENGAGED BY METRO.

"Black Fear," the sensational five-part Metro feature, now in process of production at the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., studio, has been delayed for two weeks, because General Manager Max Karger, of the Rolfe forces, and Director John W. Noble, could not find a suitable boy to play one of the most important roles in the production. The problem has not only been solved, but they were fortunate enough to obtain the services of John Tansey, the fourteen-year-old prodigy, who has just finished a course in a private school, and who is counted the best boy actor in America.

Tansey made his stage debut when he was two years old, appearing with Nat Goodwin in "Wolfville." He has supported nearly every well known star on the stage, including De Wolf Hopper, Olga Nethersole, Grace George, Annie Russell, Guy Bates Post, Rose Coghlan and many others.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS HAVE CLUB.

The Cleveland local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America has established spacious club and office headquarters in the Republic building. This step puts the Cleveland league on a business basis such as is applied to other business organizations in Cleveland. With the appointment of an executive committee of nine members all organization affairs will be discussed and acted upon by this body. Meetings will be held once a month with a view to the general co-operation in photoplay affairs locally. The new quarters provide club rooms, reading room, executive offices and assembly hall.

Smith of Barker's Visiting

Pays Tribute to Our Exhibitors and Throws Light on Present Conditions in Great Britain.

J. W. SMITH, representing the well-known Barker Film Company of London, has been in this city for the last month acquainting himself with American conditions and making new friends and valuable connections. Mr. Smith is staying at the Hotel McAlpin.

Speaking to a representative of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Smith declared himself surprised at the wonderful progress which the exhibiting profession had made in this country.

"It is a curious thing," said Mr. Smith, "how some branches of this industry in some countries will stand still for awhile and then take giant strides of progress. You undoubtedly have magnificent motion picture palaces in this country today. Great changes have come over the industry in England. The exhibitor is prosperous and powerful. The war has put a lot of money in circulation and the film people are getting their share of it.

"I believe that the new import duty imposed by the British Government will stimulate producing in England. The government will refund to all British producers the import tax on raw stock whenever the finished films are exported to the British colonies or foreign countries. Practical measures have been devised to carry out the plan of the government. In spite of what has been said to the contrary our atmospheric conditions are good enough to warrant the English producers in working eight months out of twelve. It seems to me that the five-reel length of features will hold sway or at least command a good market in this country for some time to come. Our company has been very busy and we have secured the exclusive filming rights for some of the best plays and stories in England and on the continent. We have secured from Sir Arthur Conan Doyle the world's exclusive filming rights on one of his most celebrated stories, 'Brigadier Gerard.' This feature has an added value by reason of the fact that the late Mr. Waller, the famous English actor, who is well-known on this side, takes the part of the picturesque Brigadier.

"This was Mr. Waller's first and last appearance before the camera and his last appearance on any stage. His acting in the film is a marvel. It is of the highest quality throughout and always strikes the same happy chord."

Mr. Smith, who was accompanied by his wife, received important news from the home office which compelled him to terminate his stay here somewhat abruptly. His intention was to stay here for at least another month.

GRACE VALENTINE IN "BLACK FEAR."

Grace Valentine, the charming and popular young actress who recently made her debut in motion pictures as a star, has been engaged for the stellar role in the big Metro feature, "Black Fear," produced by the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc. Others in the cast include Grace Elliston, who was starred in "The Lion and the Mouse," Edward Brennan, John Tansey, the boy prodigy and other prominent players. John W. Noble is directing "Black Fear" at the Rolfe-Metro studio.

Kalem Expands on Coast

Hamilton Smith Goes to the Pacific Coast to Get in Touch with Exhibitors and Supervise Production.

INCREASED activity on the Pacific Coast both in the producing end and the sales branch is indicated by recent developments in the Kalem Company's ranks. The first move was made with the announcement this week that Hamilton Smith, one of the most valued members of the Kalem staff, would start immediately for the west.

Mr. Smith will have general supervision of the Pacific Coast interests of Kalem. One of the most important features of his mission will be to get in intimate touch with exhibitors and exchangemen on the Coast. Close co-operation with the exhibitor has long been the policy of Kalem, and much of the success of that organization is due to a first-hand knowledge of the desires of the exhibitor and a willingness to meet those wants. In this respect Mr. Smith will have a roving commission, with the object in mind of becoming intimately acquainted with the exchangemen of the Coast and the trend of picture affairs as indicated by the exhibitors. The territory to be covered by Mr. Smith will include the Far West from Seattle on the north to Dallas, and east to Denver. Kalem officials believe that by this personal evangelism they will be in a better position than ever to meet the tastes of the picture public.

No definite announcement has yet been made as to the particular moves that are planned on the production end, though Mr. Smith will also be active in this respect. Kalem conducts two studios on the Pacific Coast, where the "Hazards of Helen" and the "Ham and Bud" comedies, two of the most popular subjects ever issued by Kalem are produced. "Stingaree," the $10,000 Hornung series, is also produced in California. James W. Horne is directing the last mentioned series, with James Davis luring Helen Gibson to the perils that make up "The Hazards of Helen," and William Beaudine putting the laughs in the comedies. Because of the popularity of these subjects, Mr. Smith has been commissioned to place every possible facility at the command of the producers.

Hamilton Smith is a product of the Kalem school, to whose success he has contributed as an author and director. Mr. Smith was recently raised to a more important position and when the decision was reached concerning the expansion on the Coast he was designated to put the plans into operation. He will locate permanently on the Coast.

Paul Panzer

PAUL PANZER, hero of many a thrilling motion picture, is one of the stars chosen by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to represent it at the Boston ball, to be held at the Arena, December 1.

Mr. Panzer made several appearances at different Boston photoplay houses when on his vaudeville tour through the New England states last winter, and has a large number of friends there. He was in attendance at the ball last year, being one of the judges to select the dancers who were to lead the grand march, having been asked to serve by Governor Walsh, the governor protesting his lack of special qualification for the job.

From that time on, Governor Walsh and Paul Panzer have been friends. When the latter played an engagement at the St. James theater in Back Bay, Boston, last winter, he called on the governor, and invited him to attend the evening performance. Governor Walsh was unable to attend, but several of his staff were in the governor's box. An autographed photograph of Mr. Panzer is among the large list of pictures adorning the walls of Governor Walsh's private office at the executive mansion.

"The Red Circle," Pathe's Next Special

"Who's Guilty?" Temporarily Postponed—Ruth Roland, the Star, in New Series.

ANNOUNCEMENT comes from the Pathe offices to the effect that "Who's Guilty?" the series originally scheduled for release on December 11, has been temporarily withdrawn and "The Red Circle," a strong, romantic serial produced by the Balboa in fourteen two-part episodes, put on the program in its place for release December 18. "The Red Circle" was originally intended for release by Pathe some time during January and is now practically completed.

The temporary withdrawal of "Who's Guilty?" affords excellent proof that both Pathe and the Arrow Company are determined that each episode shall be of unvarying high quality. The first episode, when screened, proved to be disappointing for causes which have now been removed. At great financial loss the episode was scrapped and will be entirely made over, with Emmy Wehlen and Howard Estabrook, of course, in the leading parts.

The idea of "The Red Circle" is original with H. M. Horkheimer, and Will M. Richey, who wrote the scenario. It represents the cumulative effort of some nine months and is based upon the idea that the instincts of heredity, however strong, can be overcome by environment and proper education. The working out of the theory has been done scientifically, with each step authenticated by the best authorities. In the story Ruth Roland, one of the most popular of the photoplay stars, plays the part of a young girl who inherits criminal tendencies, which, however, are modified by the superior character of the environment in which she is brought up. "The Red Circle" is a peculiar birth mark which is a characteristic of her family, and which comes and goes according as her thoughts are normal or abnormal. Frank Mayo plays the part of the lover who is trying to discover the identity of the mysterious criminal. With such a story the opportunities afforded the director are many, and Sherwood McDonald, who is producing the picture, has very evidently recognized them, as his work shows.

"The Red Circle" is stamped by all who have seen it as an unusually strong and interesting serial. It also enjoys the unique distinction of being the first serial to be put out which was practically finished before being released, a circumstance of great value to the releasing company.

Research Bureau for Casting

Victor Early and Walter Sterling Will Have Charge of Work of Selection.

ANOTHER novel innovation, established this week by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, at the suggestion of Arthur H. Spiegel, was the opening of a research bureau for the purpose of attending motion picture theaters, securing the names of the multitude of types and character portrayers, and listing them for reference and future use in Equitable productions.

Two men are now at work (if one could really call it work) looking at Eastern made pictures, tabulating the names of various players, whose work in some particular part points to their adaptability to similar roles.

For instance, in Equitable's production of "The Dragon," the cast called for four character women, of four distinct types, yet each of a similar temperament, but with traits and natural characteristics entirely dissimilar. The work of locating this quartet was a long and arduous one for the casting staff. Had the research bureau been opened two weeks earlier, locating the four women would have been the work of ten minutes on the telephone.

The countenances of various extras with certain individualities are memorized by the two research experts, and when this type is needed, the faces, recalled by the experts, are called from the great crowd of applicants—and thus, the work of selecting types is made considerably easier.

Victor Early and Walter Sterling are the two men selected to investigate. Mr. Early was for ten years associated with one of the leading dramatic agencies, and Mr. Sterling was, at one time, in charge of stock companies for a prominent New England theatrical manager and each year cast no less than fourteen companies.

MADELEINE TRAVERSE IN WORLD FILM.

Madeleine Traverse is to play opposite Robert Warwick in World Film's picturization of "The Ambition of Mark Truitt," now being directed by Oscar Eagle. The company has gone south for the exterior sets.

World Film in Canada

Rights Handled by World Features, Ltd., Greater Canadian Film Corporation.

THE Canadian rights of all the World Film, Equitable and Paragon features will in the future be handled by the World Features, Ltd., capitalized at $5,000,000, with chief offices at Toronto. Of World Features, Ltd., H. B. Wright is secretary and treasurer as well as general manager of the corporation. Mr. Wright is an experienced exhibitor with a thorough knowledge of the exhibitors' requirements. He successfully conducted a chain of Canadian motion picture houses called Regent Theaters, Ltd.

He intends instituting a dominion wide advertising campaign on behalf of motion picture exhibitors using World Film features in Canada.

His first release under the new management will be "A Butterfly on the Wheel," with Holbrook Blinn in the lead. Mr. Wright considers this one of the finest motion pictures ever made, and predicts that it will be enormously popular in Canada.

With Canadian exhibitors and movie fans, he also finds that Clara Kimball Young is vastly popular. Mr. Wright has promised that Miss Young will have a great number of Canadian votes which will assure her winning the Telegraph contest now in progress.

"Robert Warwick?" said Mr. Wright in reply to a question. "Why, sure, Mr. Warwick is so popular in Canada that you have only to mention the name of Warwick to an exhibitor and he will book the picture without seeing it. I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Warwick is the most popular motion picture artist whose work is seen on the Canadian screen. His performance in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Flash of an Emerald," part of which you know was taken in Canada, and many other World Film features are the topics of general conversation amongst Canadian fans."

Edwards Davis

EDWARDS DAVIS, M. A., recognized during the present decade as one of the "high-brow" authors of the stage, and a producer of plays of distinction, as well as an actor of stellar class, has been engaged by the Universal to appear in the forthcoming production of "The Strength of the Weak." In the virile play in which Mary Fuller is to depict the stellar role wherein Florence Roberts first won her metropolitan recognition. Mr. Davis, under the direction of Lucius Henderson, is to appear on the screen in the part then essayed by Tyrone Power.

Edwards Davis.

Within four years after his first appearance on the stage Mr. Davis has become an independent star, appearing in several plays of his own writing, of which "The Seventh Commandment" and "A Man of the World" are the best known.

Ten years ago Mr. Davis was selected by Martin Beck as the headliner of the Orpheum Road Show. Mr. Davis was the first dramatic star successfully to present tragedy in vaudeville, appearing over one thousand times in his two-scene tragedy, "The Unmasking."

Since his first appearance in vaudeville, Mr. Davis has only appeared in works of his own writing, and in all of his distinctive plays, he has appeared in the stellar roles, of widely different scope.

After acquainting himself with the technic of screen picturization the author-star announces his intention of personally directing and appearing in his various plays and new scenarios in the creation of which he is now engaged.

Oliver Morosco's Latest Capture

Hattie Williams to Make Screen Debut on Paramount Program in "Detective Sparks."

OLIVER MOROSCO has scored again in obtaining the signature of Hattie Williams, the well-known star of the stage, to appear in motion pictures under the Morosco-Paramount banner. In securing Miss Williams for the screen, Mr. Morosco adds another star of wide repute to his list of important captures for motion pictures, closely following the announcement of his acquisition of Anna Held and Constance Collier.

Hattie Williams.

Hattie Williams has long been a favorite among theatergoers throughout the country and has worked her way to stardom through sheer merit from the ranks of the chorus. Her first appearance on the stage took place in Boston when she appeared in the chorus of "1492." She was soon singled out by the manager as a girl of more than ordinary talent and when the production played New York she was given an opportunity by playing the part of "Infanta Catalina." Her success in the part was instantaneous and resulted in a rapid rise to the front, some of her triumphs including the characterization of starring roles in such plays as "The Girl from Maxim's," "The Girl from Kay's," "The Rollicking Girl," "Detective Sparks," "The Girl from Montmartre" and other metropolitan hits of equal prominence.

As her initial screen subject the producers have secured the rights on Miss Williams' former stage success, "Detective Sparks," in which she starred at the Garrick Theater, New York City, a few years ago. This production allows the star particular opportunity to display her talent, and on account of its many surprising situations, continuous action and big possibilities in the way of effective backgrounds, should prove of more than usual merit as a photoplay.

It is planned that Miss Williams commence work on her first motion picture at the Morosco studios in Los Angeles on December 18, the subject to be released on the Paramount Program at an early date following its completion.

CLARA WHIPPLE IN "THE MAN HIGHER UP."

Clara Whipple, the leading woman of the Equitable Motion Picture Company's stock organization, will commence work next week as the leading woman for Frank Sheridan in "The Man Higher Up," which will be produced as a motion picture.

Miss Whipple has played a number of good roles in support of Equitable specially engaged stars, but the role in this play is the biggest which she has yet been given.

"I am so glad to have an opportunity to play a part which will bring sympathy to myself," says the beautiful actress, who was until recently the only motion picture actress in Canada. "Vampire women and schemers require good dramatic ability, but I prefer emotional roles."

FANIA MARINOFF IN "McTEAGUE."

Fania Marinoff is to play opposite Holbrook Blinn in "McTeague," now in course of production at the World Film studio at Fort Lee. The part which Miss Marinoff has is a singularly strong and attractive one. The character of Trina gives the actress who impersonates it an opportunity of switching up and down the gamut of the entire range of feminine emotion. She is to be sweet and dainty, alluring, crafty, loving, revengeful, patient, sacrificial. The part of McTeague, played by Mr. Blinn, is equally great and varying. "McTeague of San Francisco" is based upon the book by the late Frank Norris and will probably be the "thrillingest thriller" shown by World Film.

Gaumont Winter Work Flourishing

F. G. Bradford Returns from Jacksonville with Interesting Account of the Rialto Star Feature Productions.

INTERESTING accounts of the work done by the Rialto Star Feature companies at Jacksonville, Fla, where the Gaumont winter studios are located, have been brought back to New York by F. G. Bradford, general manager of the Gaumont Company. Mr. Bradford spent ten days at Jacksonville. In addition to watching the work of the companies which are making photodramas for release on the Mutual Program, he planned and contracted for a number of improvements which indicate that the Gaumont company will be located during the winter at Jacksonville for at least several years to come.

"Conditions at Jacksonville are ideal for the work we have undertaken to do on the Mutual's new program," said Mr. Bradford in speaking of his southern trip. "Although I arrived only a few days after our players had started work, I found that the pictures were well under way. The work of preparation had been so thorough that all the directors had to do when they reached their studios was to start with no more effort in getting their pictures under way than they experienced at our Flushing studios.

"Particularly interesting were the pictures being filmed under the direction of Richard Garrick and William F. Haddock. They offer such a contrast that together they serve as an excellent example of the variety one finds in Rialto Star Features on the Mutual Program. Mr. Garrick was directing 'Lessons in Love,' a multiple-reel light comedy well adapted to display the talent of its star, Hal. Forde. Mr. Haddock's company, with Robert T. Haines as star, was busy at the same time with 'The Secret Agent,' a photodrama of stirring continuity by the well-known author, Arthur Stringer.

"Jacksonville has been most hospitable in its reception of the Gaumont players, and you may be sure that our companies are extremely happy to find themselves amid such congenial surroundings. They are planning trips later in the season to Palm Beach, Miami and Fort Myers. Already one company has been to St. Augustine. The social life of this wonderful winter land will be adequately reflected in forthcoming releases."

Ver Halen With Raver Film

C. J. VER HALEN has been added to the business staff of the Raver Film Corporation, following negotiations by mail and telegram for some weeks. "Charlie," as Ver Halen is familiarly known among his man friends, has been sojourning in Chicago editing the Tribune News Weekly, and when the Raver organization was launched hastened to send congratulations and best wishes to Harry R. Raver.

C. J. Ver Halen.

It will be remembered that "Charlie" was in charge of the Chicago office of a national amusement weekly when Mr. Raver was writing "copy" incidental to his management of the American Eclair studios, and the latter has not forgotten the courtesies shown him by Ver Halen.

A man was needed for an important post on the business staff and Mr. Raver made overtures which were accepted. Ver Halen was not engaged as press agent or publicity "expert." He is to be a sort of narrator-extraordinary, or intelligencer. His duties will consist of carrying out Mr. Raver's ideas in reporting facts concerning the progress of his company, and this means both mental and physical effort, for the task of confining one's writings to cold, hard facts is not an easy one from the standpoint of the average press agent.

The Rothapfel-Mutual Tour Banquet

By James S. McQuade.

WHILE the food was all right and toothsome in its way, Roxie's speech was the thing at the banquet given in his honor in the Italian room of the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Thursday evening, November 18.

No need to write that "Roxie" is the short for S. L. Rothapfel, who has been rivalling Jules Verne in his lightning trip through the United States, under the guidance of the Mutual Film Corporation, and of John R. Freuler, its president, in particular. Twenty-seven cities had been visited and that number of speeches made by Mr. Rothapfel before he added Chicago to the list; and to show the iron-clad claims made by his itinerary on his time, I need only mention that he came into the city from Milwaukee Thursday forenoon, and had to rush from the banquet hall after his speech to catch the train for St. Louis. Some going! But Roxie has fattened on it, judging from his present physical appearance, and what it was, as I recall it some time ago.

However, Roxie found time during his stay to give me a brief account of his experiences on the tour. In every city visited he has been received most cordially, and his "talks" loudly acclaimed. Standing out boldly among all the cities visited for the warmth of the reception given him and the evident hearty appreciation of his efforts to aid exhibitors by his own experience and advice—is Seattle, the queen city of the Northwest. And that warmed the cockles of my heart, for I spent some happy years there, in the late 80's and early 90's, and ever since I have watched its growth and enterprise with affectionate interest.

Mr. Rothapfel did not hesitate to say that Seattle exhibitors are live business men, well supplied with brains and good horse sense. He considers them the most up-to-date in the country and their houses, as a whole, the finest and most intelligently managed.

In Minneapolis, where I first met him at the Lyric, about four years ago, Mr. Rothapfel was welcomed by many of the most prominent people in the city, old patrons of his who have missed the artistic beauty of his picture programs. There he was the honored recipient of a beautiful loving cup from these business friends of his, and its presentation was made in a speech that was eloquent in compliment, good will and comradeship. "The cup brings to you the message not only of the donors, but of the host of others who join in the spirit of giving, and in the sentiment of good wishes, which the gift represents," were the closing words of the address of the presentation.

At the Chicago banquet Joseph Finn, of the Nicholas Finn Advertising Agency, was toastmaster. In introducing the guest of the evening Mr. Finn referred to him as the man who had brought the work of the exhibitor to the high standard of that of the artist."

Mr. Rothapfel made no effort towards rhetorical effect during his long speech, which was delivered in conversational tone throughout, and with an intimacy of interest that never permitted the attention of the auditors to relax.

At the outset he made the statement that conditions were exactly alike in the East and West. The exhibitor is in a rut, and has not advanced, as a rule, during the past year. As the industry rests in large measure on exhibitors as a whole, this lack of progress is a serious matter.

"Make your theater the thing, the same as the play in the spoken drama," he emphasized. "Good pictures and not stars are the thing. Individualize each theater. Get more efficiency. Get new life. Build up your theaters with smiles and politeness, in addition to good pictures. Good pictures are not necessarily features. This first run craze is all wrong." These were some of the pithy advices given at the outset.

Mr. Rothapfel then recounted his own experiences as an exhibitor, and dwelt fully on the matters of programs, projection, the screen and its setting, the creation of atmosphere, and of theme, musical interpretation, the importance of a well trained, neat and polite house force, etc., etc.

At the close he was given the ovation, and as he said goodbye and rushed off to catch his train, the strains of "For he's a jolly good fellow," rang in his ears.

ROTHAPFEL AT KANSAS CITY.

Nearly 200 exhibitors and exchange representatives greeted Samuel L. Rothapfel at his Kansas City meeting Sunday evening, November 14, in the White Room of the Baltimore Hotel. All the local Mutual men were present, and the managers and most of the traveling men of the other exchanges. Many managers brought exhibitors as guests, and they declared that the address of Mr. Rothapfel was the most inspiring and instructive that they had ever been privileged to hear. E. C. Mills presided.

Mr. Rothapfel impressed on his auditors the idea of individuality in the management of moving picture establishments. He told of his rapid rise, frankly describing his lowly condition before he entered the picture game. He told of the methods by which he had brought non-paying houses to a very profitable condition.

Ross C. Cropper, of the Universal, and other exchange members, also made talks full of suggestions for the exhibitor. There was no distinction in the audience and in the talks between "Mutual" and others. The meeting was characteristic of the whole tendency of service by exchanges out of Kansas City—to build up the picture business, and keep it on a high standard.

GEORGE U. STEVENSON IN HOSPITAL.

George U. Stevenson, who has been connected with the Universal publicity staff for some years, and recently returned from London, has been in St. Luke's Hospital, New York, since November 2. Mr. Stevenson was operated upon for a rather painful trouble and is reported to be making a speedy recovery.

Miss Rosetta Brice

FEW of the photoplay favorites of the present day have had a more meteoric rise to fame than Rosetta Brice, the beautiful little titian-haired diva of the Lubin Company.

Rosetta Brice.

A little more than three years ago Miss Brice, who was then a member of the Orpheum Stock Company of Philadelphia, attracted the attention of the Lubin management, who immediately made overtures for her services, which resulted in her joining their company. For many months she appeared in a series of character studies with Lubin which earned for her an enviable record and soon caused her to be one of the most demanded members of the Lubin staff. Always with the intent to play ingenues and leads, she accepted her commissions with an untiring zeal, begging at times that she be cast in a minor role until such time as she felt firmly convinced that her motion picture schooling had been nearly perfected; and it was not until the question of casting the Lubin V-L-S-E feature, "The Rights of Man," arose that Miss Brice presented herself to the inner office and announced that she believed herself ready for leads and that the part of Princess Lohra in that production was the one in which she preferred to begin her career as a leading lady. Her intention was warmly received and she was assigned the part. The success of her delineation has been written since that release, and with the showing of "A Man's Making," in which Miss Brice assumes the leading lady role, with Richard Buhler, another V-L-S-E release of December 6, more laurels are added to her record.

Miss Brice is cast again for the leading role in Daniel Carson Goodman's big railroad story, "Fate," in which Richard Buhler will next appear.

PREMIER DIRECTOR BREAKS ARM.

Joseph A. Richmond, director of the Dra-Ko Film Company, had the misfortune to break both the bones in his right forearm. It is an apt commentary on the chances of life that Mr. Richmond, who has never hesitated to take his own share of the risks necessary for the production of Dra-Ko pictures, should have injured himself while cranking his automobile.

JOHN D. TIPPETT ARRIVES.

John D. Tippett, for the past two years the London representative of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, with offices in London, arrived on the Red Star Liner Lapland, which docked at six o'clock Monday afternoon, November 22. Mr. Tippett will remain in New York for some weeks consulting with officials of his company.

WORLD FILM TO PRODUCE "THE REVOLT."

World Film is to produce "The Revolt," in which the admired artist, Olga Petrova, is at present starring. The director has not yet been chosen, but it is possible that Albert Capellani will have the assignment.

The Jury's Verdict

Some Letters from Exhibitors Reflecting Their Opinion About the Moving Picture World.

By W. Stephen Bush.

ONCE more I find heaped up before me a big stack of letters from appreciative readers of the Moving Picture World. We thank everyone of these kind subscribers for their words of encouragement. These letters coming to us in ever-increasing volume are to the staff of the Moving Picture World a source of constant cheer and inspiration.

It would be impossible, for reasons of space alone, to print all these spontaneous letters of commendation or even the larger part of them. We beg to assure the writers of all of them of our lively thankfulness, but we must content ourselves with printing only a small part of the imposing whole. The one note which constantly recurs in all these unsolicited tributes tells of the deep and widespread conviction that the Moving Picture World IS IN A CLASS BY ITSELF; that it has no competition worth mentioning; that it covers all the needs of the exhibitor, and that it covers them completely. There is an intimation in many of the letters of praise that a cheap publication is dear at any price. The abiding belief within the ranks of the industry seems to be that the Moving Picture World is all-sufficient. To us this is the most gratifying sign that our ambition to become indispensable to producer, distributor and exhibitor has not gone unrewarded and is being more and more realized from week to week.

As you read these tributes you will notice that they come from all sections of the country. Here is an extract from an old-time motion picture man in Santa Barbara, Cal.: "There is more value," says he, "in your paper than in all the others combined. Yes indeed, I find that your publication is more than you claim for it."

Here is what a subscriber writes from Madisonville, Tex.: "I have subscribed to the Moving Picture World for several years and I think a lot of it and hope to take it for a long time yet." From a large town in Wisconsin we received this comment, backed up, as usual, with a renewal subscription: "The World is bigger and better than ever and I don't see how anyone interested in moving pictures can be without it." The owner of a well-known and prosperous theater in a city in Iowa sends this tribute with his subscription: "You see, it's just like this: A man or company cannot run a real show without the good old guide known as the Moving Picture World. We are just starting here, but have been in business before and know what your M. P. W. is." Thus writes a Canadian exhibitor (Barry Sound, Ontario): "The World is certainly THE GREATEST HELP TO THE PHOTOPLAY EXHIBITOR that we have ever discovered yet and we are on the lookout all the time." From Lindsborg, Kansas, comes this cheering message in company with a renewal subscription: "I wish to express my thanks to the World. It's the best journal in the market for exhibitors. I could not possibly get along without it." In sending a year's subscription an exhibitor from Jackson, Mich., gladdens our hearts by adding: "We could not get along without the World. If you could but see how we depend upon it for reviews, etc. It's the only way a real live exhibitor can tell anything as to the merits of the different releases. Success to the World." A motion picture man with a theater in Bellevue, Ohio, says: "Please enter my name for one year's subscription to your trade journal. I DEEM IT THE ONLY WORTH-WHILE TRADE MAGAZINE on the surface of the globe. Could not get along without it."

Here is an enthusiastic admirer who conducts a high-class theater in a flourishing city of the Middle West: "Gentlemen: Every time the World comes to us and I read it through I have a desire to sit down and write you a nice long letter and in that way express my appreciation of your publication. Then the thought comes to me: Good Lord, the poor men are stuffed full to the brim with letters, and then I settle back till the next week comes around. Heavens, this is awful. Every week you take my own thoughts out of me and print them in the World. Man dear, how do you do it?" Another exhibitor writes from a city in Michigan: "If you could see my old Worlds you would not doubt that I read them. There is hardly a whole page left in them after I get through. The manager who tries to get along without the World will soon be in the 'also ran' class." A motion picture man in one of the suburbs of New York says: "I am honestly pleased with the World. It is the magazine I have been looking for." An exhibitor from Hagerstown, Md., is evidently a careful reader of the paper. This is what he writes upon the occasion of renewing his yearly subscription: "The Moving Picture World is the ONE INDISPENSABLE MAGAZINE for the moving picture manager, in my estimation. We believe that you are fair in your criticisms, both good and bad. We further receive wonderful assistance in your 'Advertising for Exhibitors' and your 'Projection Department,' as well as from the general reading matter contained in this magazine." From Utica, N. Y., we get these words of encouragement: "I am very much in favor of your campaign against moving picture censorship and will lend my aid in every possible way." From Everett, in the state of Washington, an appreciative reader writes thus: "I have read the World ever since its inception and I consider it THE BEST of all moving picture weeklies, AND IT IS GETTING BETTER. 'Reviews of Current Productions,' which you installed some time ago, is a move I have wished for for a long time. 'Comments on the Films' is also a worthy department." "The most convenient for ready reference," writes a local exhibitor in renewing his yearly subscription.

I am now warned that I have exceeded my allotted space, but this last tribute I am bound to "get in." This is what one of the biggest film men in Chicago has to say about us: "The Moving Picture World is the ONE AND ONLY MOVING PICTURE MAGAZINE ALL OUR EMPLOYEES IN THIS OFFICE READ. We always look forward with interest to each issue."

We aim at something more than a mere publishing of news. We give the news and all of the news as a matter of course. Our greatest aim is to render practical service to the exhibitor to help him in making a decent profit on his investment and to add to the prestige, the power and the popularity of the motion picture. The tributes printed here and culled from a considerable collection seem to show that we are meeting with a sizable measure of success.

METRO HAS WILCOX'S WORKS.

Metro has contracted with Ella Wheeler Wilcox for her entire works of both poems and prose, which will be made at the rate of six a year.

The Ella Wheeler Wilcox series of pictures will be produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for release on the regular Metro program. Max Karger, general manager of the Rolfe forces, arranged the contract with Miss Wilcox, and it was considered of such moment that a moving picture was made in the Rolfe studio of Miss Wilcox signing the contract. Afterward, when the film was shown in the projecting room at the studio, Miss Wilcox manifested the keenest sort of delight.

In the Wilcox collection there are more than five hundred poems and several books of prose. Most of them are familiar throughout the civilized world, and not a few grace the walls in many homes. In the seven volumes of poems, perhaps the best known are "Poems of Passion," "Poems of Pleasure," "Poems of Power" and "Poems of Problems." Among her notable books of prose are "Three Women" and "Maurine."

Kitty Gordon

MISS KITTY GORDON, one of the most noted of beautiful Englishwomen and a highly accomplished actress, has been engaged by Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, for the forthcoming production of "As In a Looking Glass." The speaking drama of this name was played in this country and England by Mrs. Langtry and Mrs. Bernard Beere in hot rivalry when both actresses were in their prime.

Kitty Gordon

The story, which first appeared in book form, was written by the well known English novelist, F. C. Phillips, and created a great sensation in Europe and America. Its central character was a fascinating and heartless adventuress who toyed with the affections of many male victims until she finally fell desperately in love with a young gentleman into whose society she was thrown. This new lover at first reciprocated her affection, but when the true career of his beautiful consort became known to him, he spurned her, and she took her own life, broken hearted.

Miss Gordon, a splendid figure to look upon, has been prominently identified with the American stage for the past five or six years. She has appeared as the star of several very successful musical comedies playing in every part of the country, so that she is exceedingly well known to the general public. She is also one of the most widely photographed beauties of the present time. Her most recent engagements were with Oliver Morosco and the Messrs Shubert.

In private life Miss Gordon is the wife of Captain Beresford of the English army, who has recently been mentioned for conspicuous bravery in the field. They have one child, a daughter, who inherits the remarkable beauty of her mother.

Fay Tincher Transformed

MISS FAY TINCHER, the dashing office girl of a widely celebrated comic series from the Griffith studio, has been remarkably transformed into the classical heroine of "Don Quixote," and with Rhea Mitchell in the role of Lucinda is supporting De Wolf Hopper in the first of Mr. Hopper's screen plays for the Fine Arts-Triangle. It will be remembered that Dulcinea is a simple village maiden whom the knight errant mistakes for a beautiful princess. She rides a mule named "Dapple" and Don Quixote worships the ground she walks on.

Fay Tincher.

The resources of Los Angeles were sufficient to produce a very complacent mule, not of the Maud variety, but kind and obliging and lending itself to the films. Miss Tincher has taken great delight in her rides on the animal. She has also another pet in the film, a kitten, that she has named "Dulcinea," after her own role. A Spanish-American priest, recently returned from Spain, helped stage the scenes in conformity with the scenery and customs of La Mancha. Mr. Hopper is said to be enjoying his role of the tilter at wind mills better than any legitimate parts he has undertaken of late, for naturally the Gilbert and Sullivan roles in which he was starred on the musical stage grew stale by too frequent repetition.

MARGUERITE SNOW IN NEW YORK.

Marguerite Snow, the Metro star, has arrived in New York from Hollywood, Cal., accompanied by the Quality Pictures Corporation company of players, which she will head in future Metro features. Hereafter, Miss Snow will work in the east. "Rosemary," a five-part picturization of the play of the same name, has just been finished at the Quality-Metro studio in Hollywood, and Miss Snow appears in the stellar role. Paul Gilmore is featured with her, and there is a strong supporting cast, including Frank Bacon, the famous character actor. Previous to her appearance in "Rosemary," Miss Snow was co-starred with Francis X. Bushman in Quality-Metro features, the last picture they made together being "The Silent Voice."

BEERBOHM TREE COMING TO AMERICA.

Recent happenings in the busy Triangle field include the sailings of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree from London for America to act in the Triangle Fine Arts Films; plans for the organization of an eastern Triangle-Keystone company, and the extensive plans of B. S. Moss to show the Triangle service in upper Manhattan. Sir Herbert is under a ten months contract to act under the supervision of Director David W. Griffith at Los Angeles. The great roles he has made famous in England and America will be presented. Among them are Cardinal Woolsey in "Henry VIII.," and probably Bottom in "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

Stanley C. Kingsbury

HENRY "PATHE" LEHRMAN, managing director of the L-KO Motion Picture company of Hollywood, Cal., who has been paying New York City an extensive visit in the interests of his Billie Ritchie L-KO comedies, secured while here, the services of Stanley C. Kingsbury to act as his special representative. Mr. Kingsbury has been identified with the film industry for some years past, first entering the business as a showman, having owned and operated one of the first picture houses in Syracuse. Later he became associated with the Warner's Features, being connected with the Buffalo office, from where he was promoted to the managership of their interests in the Dominion of Canada, with offices in Toronto.

Stanley C. Kingsbury.

After serving for some time in that capacity, he associated himself with the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., with which he became widely known in film circles. Upon his return to the States, Mr. Kingsbury again associated himself with the Warner's interests, which later became the United Film Company.

When Mr. Lehrman came to New York and desired the services of a man of wide experience and extensive acquaintance in the motion picture business, he sought Mr. Kingsbury and after drawing up an agreement satisfactory to both parties, appointed him special representative of the L-KO Motion Picture Company.

George Le Guere

GEORGE LE GUERE, noted for his juvenile characterizations on both the speaking stage and the screen, has been engaged for the role of "Bibbs Sheridan" in "The Turmoil," the five-part feature picturized from Booth Tarkington's famous novel of the same name, which is now in process of production at the Columbia Pictures Corporation studio for release on the Metro program. Valli Valli, the versatile English actress, is starred in the production.

George Le Guere.

Mr. Le Guere was born in New Orleans, and comes of an old Southern family that came to this country from France with Lafayette during the Revolution. He was educated at Georgetown University in Washington, D. C., and was one of the youngest graduates of that famous old university, obtaining his master of arts degree when he was twenty-one years old. Although still a comparatively young man, Mr. Le Guere has created twelve prominent parts in notable Broadway productions.

Mr. Le Guere made his debut on Broadway as understudy to Robert Edeson in "Strongheart." Since then he has supported such well-known stars as David Warfield, Lena Ashwell, Lulu Glaser, Gertrude Quinlan, Eleanor Robson, William Hodge, Gertrude Elliott, Ada Lewis, Blanche Walsh, Dorothy Donnelly, Edmund Breese, Walker Whiteside, Tim Murphy, Jane Cowle and others.

He made his screen debut in "Bachelor's Romance," with Famous Players, and made his first appearance under Metro auspices in "Destiny, Or the Soul of a Woman," in which Emily Stevens is starred. His success in that picture was sensational. Mr. Le Guere is a prominent member of the Lambs Club and is a great lover of the water. He spends all his leisure time fishing, swimming and sailing. He has written a number of short stories that have been published in the magazines, and he has had some success with dramatic writings.

Julius Steger Joins Metro

JULIUS STEGER, the well-known stage star, who recently appeared with tremendous success in the photoplay versions of "The Fifth Commandment" and "The Master of the House," is the latest addition to the long list of stars under the Metro banner, which includes Ethel Barrymore, William Faversham, Emily Stevens, Mme. Petrova and others equally notable. Mr. Steger has signed a contract with the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., to appear exclusively on the Metro program. His first appearance will be in the stellar role in "The Blindness of Love," a comedy drama by Ruth Comfort Mitchell. It will be released on the Metro program in December.

Julius Steger.

Mr. Steger has had a varied career on the stage, displaying remarkable versatility. He has appeared in everything from musical comedy to tragedy, but it is in strong dramatic roles that he excels. He was born in Vienna, the home of light opera, and came to New York when a youth. He first attracted attention on the stage as the leading support of Marie Tempest. Since he has created the leading roles in numerous musical productions on Broadway. His last appearance in light opera was in Victor Herbert's "It Happened in Nordland," with Lew Fields. Soon afterward he appeared in vaudeville as a serious actor, presenting "The Fifth Commandment." This remarkable transition met with the hearty approval of the theater-going public and Mr. Steger has enjoyed seven prosperous years as a headliner in vaudeville.

Mr. Steger is gifted with rare dramatic talent that reaches the heart. He has always been noted for his natural acting, which makes it the more impressive and convincing and adds to his work as a screen artist.

ESSANAY DOES ANTI-TUBERCULOSIS SUBJECT.

Essanay has just completed a two-act photoplay for the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis Association of Milwaukee. The film, which is called the "Power of the Penny," depicts all the horrors of consumption and shows the detail of the work being done by the association to stamp it out. The plot contains a powerful love story and is an intensely interesting romance as well as a technically instructive story. Scenes were made in the streets of Milwaukee, in hovels where entire families were stricken with the disease and at the sanatorium and free dispensary. The work of the physicians in the hospital as well as the life of the patients was shown in detail. It is a story that touches the hearts of all and makes them go out in sympathy to these unfortunates. The photoplay will be shown throughout the state in the association's fight against tuberculosis. It will afterwards be loaned to other organizations for exhibition, in order to show the public the conditions existing and arouse it to determined action to wipe out the white plague from the country. The photoplay was directed by Richard Foster Baker, and a staff of Essanay players take the leads in the drama.

Throwing Away the Scrap Book

By Herbert Case Hoagland.

IN THE Moving Picture World, dated October 23d, there was printed a very interesting and timely article entitled "Footage Presswork," written by the versatile Epes Winthrop Sargent. To quote Mr. Sargent: "There are three kinds of press work, the kind the press man writes to show the Boss, the kind he gets printed to show the Boss, and the kind he gets in to sell film. If the footage standard were replaced by intelligent judgment, there would be more of this third class." The Selig Company is probably the only large concern now manufacturing motion pictures that has absolutely discarded the scrap book. That ponderous volume which in so many offices occupied a most conspicuous place, has been thrown away by the Seilg Company.

What is the good of a press scrap book? To our mind it but feeds the vanity of the press agent, and occupied valuable time on the part of his employer who must drop all work and repeatedly scan the volume when it is carried into the sanctum by the publicity man.

I am not saying that all publicity men carry in the scrap book to the Boss at any and all times, but some of them do—just like this:

"Excuse me, Mr. Jenkins, but I want to show you that last story I wrote and just see how 'The Woman's Own Defender' has eaten it up. Really, I didn't think it would go so well when I ground it out."

And Mr. Jenkins must hoist the big book on his knee and murmur, "Very good, very good indeed!" when he may be thinking of other and more important things.

Alas the scrap book—pooh, pooh for it, say I, and there are many publicity men who will agree with me. There is generally a standing army hovering around that self-same scrap book, cutting and pasting and referring, and commenting, when their services could readily be utilized elsewhere. The Selig Polyscope Company really has no time for a scrap book.

And with the scrap book there should go down to dire defeat the sensational press story which too frequently it contained. The day has flitted by when the falling-off-of-cliffs story is a joy forever. The photoplay editors of newspapers and the editors of trade journals will not countenance this class of copy. It is true that one can hang a narrow escape yarn around a movie actress occasionally and it will yet be placed in type. However, when this class of stuff is published it fails of its purpose. The "rainy day" stuff is not relished by the exhibitor of motion pictures, it is not swallowed by the photoplay public and, consequently the prestige of the publication printing the dope, and the prestige of the motion picture manufacturing company countenancing the circulation of the yarn, are not at all enhanced.

William N. Selig and J. A. Berst, heads of the Selig Polyscope Company, have an iron-clad policy anent publicity. It is this: "Tell the truth." The truth can be told just as attractively, and in time the reading public will learn to put dependence in the publicity statements made by those companies that frown on undue exaggeration.

The old circus stuff is au fait. Those press agents who affect the circus style of copy and label every production released by their particular employers a "masterpiece," will shortly find their occupations gone. The coming publicity men must be men of education and brains, men of newspaper training who are able to know a good story when they see it and are able to write it honestly and brightly. The old-time publicity man had the "front," the publicity man of the future must have the stuff!

It isn't the "string" of clippings that counts in a publicity way in this day and age, whether the publicity be motion picture exploitation or otherwise. It is the medium that carries the exploitation, it is the reputation for honesty and veracity earned by any particular publicity department; it is the nose for news, or the knack of seeing a legitimate feature story and preparing the same conscientiously, that counts.

There is legitimate feature material to be found in the activities of any large motion picture manufacturing company without drawing the long bow. In a modest way we might point to our own exploitation of Otis Harlan in Hoyt's "A Black Sheep." Before this production was released we interviewed Mr. Harlan. He mentioned his life-long friendship with the late Charles Hoyt, during the course of the conversation. The thought came that the personal side of Hoyt from the Harlan standpoint might be not only interesting, but entertaining and instructive. And so it proved.

Mr. Harlan, in his articles on Mr. Hoyt, prepared from his notes by the Selig publicity staff, contributed, according to several theatrical critics, some heretofore unwritten theatrical history. His articles were sent out in plenty of time for editorial consideration. They all bore a certain release date. Some rare professional photographs owned by Mr. Harlan and kindly loaned by him, added great interest to the text. The Red Book Corporation of Chicago, Ill., used a feature story on Hoyt and Harlan embellished with photographs. The article appears in the current "Green Book Magazine" and is one of those rare instances where a feature article exploiting a film production, has appeared in a high class magazine without one cent of cost to the motion picture manufacturer. The Dramatic Mirror, the New York Clipper and many other high-class publications carried the "A Black Sheep" exploitation. The stories were very frequently embellished with pictures of Mr. Harlan in character and with scenes from the Selig Red Seal play.

And to come down to bed rock. Why did the above named and many other influential magazines and newspapers in this and other countries carry the Selig film publicity? Did they do it as a favor to the Selig Company? Not so you would notice it, for "The Green Book" never carried a penny's worth of Selig advertising and the same may be said of a majority of the other publications. Did they print the feature story to fill space? Again, no! Every publication throws daily into the capacious wastebasket more copy than is printed. Then why?

Because Otis Harlan's interview was news. It told unwritten history of one of America's greatest playwrights. It told of Hoyt's methods of work, his personal characteristics; it carried photographs of Hoyt never before published; it was an interesting, readable, yes, an important contribution to the history of the American stage. It was a kind of story that any editor would be glad to get, and they got it! There is scarcely a dramatic editor of standing in this country that was not apprised of the Hoyt story and few of them overlooked it. The story was placed properly, was valuable, and it went over!

The Selig idea of having Selig stars write their own stories of motion picture experiences was another happy publicity thought in our own estimation. It proved a new and novel twist, the stories are bonafide and contain personal viewpoints of notable actors and actresses. They sign these stories and the newspapers and magazines of the country are glad to get them. At least through the Western Newspaper Union, 700 of just one of these feature articles were circulated and used in newspapers and other publications, large and small, in one month. While on the subject of publicity, a word might also be spoken anent the character of the clip sheets issued. The Selig Company had an idea that a miniature newspaper not all Selig—a bright little sheet presenting picture news attractively, briefly, and carrying headlines that would appeal to the desk man and coax him to read the story underneath—would go. An editorial column of short original filler was instituted and due care was taken that the Selig Company was not mentioned in every item. Moving picture page editors were urged to clip and use this material. They have done so, and when we state that Selig "Pastepot and Shears" has a paid subscription list of a hundred readers when no subscription price is advertised, these readers paying each fifty cents yearly and being obliged first to write in and ascertain the subscription price, we believe the fact proves the worth of the publication.

And what of the scrap book? Isn't it better to have good, legitimate news and feature stories anticipated by many editors and read with interest or pleasure by many readers than to bury them within the heavy covers of a scrap book? Why the scrap book? When the story is circulated and read it may live in the minds of the public; it is dead within scrap book covers.

The Selig Company has thrown away the scrap book!

THE LESSON OF THE WAR

When the great war in Europe is over Ashley Miller will be able, if all his actors live that long, to complete what should be one of the most interesting pictures ever made. Two years before the start of the war Mr. Miller toured Europe with a small company and a camera. He had a pretty comedy-drama in preparation then called "When Love Grows Old." He took scenes in all of the countries, where battles are now raging, of these young couples of different nationalities and then "years afterward," in changed make-up. The latter scenes will be retaken showing the change in these countries since the war.

BRITISH NOTES

THE question of film caricature is one that must sooner or later occupy the attention of legal luminaries in something of the nature of a test case. The situation of the motion picture in such an eventuality is indeed difficult to define. In a recent application before the courts by the producers of "Three Weeks" to restrain a contemporary firm from circulating a burlesque upon the same subject, the vague term "visualization" was employed in all its elasticity to synonymise kinematographic presentation. We frequently hear in this country of authors disposing of the "visual rights" of their works to motion picture enterprises, but from specimen contracts of this description I have seen the term is an absolute misnomer. Literally interpreted, visualization means the right to present to the eye, as detached and apart from the verbal accompaniment, through any media. For instance, the adaptation of a play or a novel into a set of still lantern views or to a series of wordless stage tableaux is just as much a visualization as kinematographic reproduction, if not from a financial standpoint as profitable. A year ago in the "World" appeared a news item stating the heavy price paid by an American syndicate for the "entire visual" rights of a masterpiece of a famous English author. When I went to see the filmed version in a certain Eastern seaport town I was not a little interested to observe that the advertising enterprise of both manufacturer and exhibitor was being rewarded by counter attractions, each of a "visualized" nature. The scholars of a local school were the same week "presenting" the piece in silent tableaux and a local big-wig was on the Friday evening discoursing to lantern views taken from the book of the identical story. It is obvious from this that entire visual rights in a contract for kinematographic reproduction has one meaning in precept and another in practice.

To return to the caricature, a type of film that war has popularized, we can safely presume that the kinema cartoonist enjoys the same latitude and freedom as his brothers of the press and the stage. Custom and privilege have made him an exception to be tolerated. We periodically get Chaplin on the film—apart from Essanay releases—faithfully caricatured by Dudley Buxton, and there is no disputing the likeness. Yet the legitimate owners of "C. C." don't complain at this novel visualization, though one hesitates to think what would happen if an attempt were essayed to transplant him into more substantial productions.

A short time ago I mentioned that the Society of Authors were instituting a canvass amongst eminent educationalists in this country, with a view to compiling a thoroughly representative collection of opinions upon the suitability or otherwise of the motion picture as a potential factor in education. The returns of this census are now available and inasmuch that the principals at British Universities were addressed make the returns all the more interesting. The questions asked of each with a summary of the replies were as follows:

(1) "Do you use the kinematograph in your classes or lectures?" Most replies to this query stated that the writers did not, on account of expense, and because their subjects could not be at present satisfactorily adapted to kinematographic presentation. The few affirmations included surgeons, agriculturalists, geographers, a zoologist and a vivisectionist.

(2) "Are you unable to do so owing to the expense, or lack of necessary supplies? (b) Or because you consider this method of teaching unsatisfactory?" To the first question the number of affirmative answers was surprisingly large. To the second opinion was more divided. Exponents of abstract arts and sciences did not hesitate to dismiss the idea as useless, yet on the other hand several saw a ready mission for the film as a capable text book illustrator.

(3) "If you consider the use of the kinematograph desirable but too expensive would you be willing to hire the necessary films if some central organization was established to lease them out at a reasonable charge?" Many of the assentors to the last query voted in favor of this.

Following these were six other questions upon similar lines and mainly embracing the foregoing points in detail.

The film tax continues to be the all-important topic for debate in the trade and the imposition of a three-cent-per-meter duty upon exports from Italy has furnished it with a new phase. Hope is not dead, however, in the British film importer and I hear there is every possibility of a radical revision of the film tariff. Only recently in the Parliamentary debate upon the subject an amendment of a penny per foot upon negatives instead of 8d. was suspended pending inquiries.

The "London Evening News" continues its prattle regarding films and every day discovers some new mare's nest in its praiseworthy attempts to emulate the "Californian Eagle." Apart from the Selig scandal, which was promptly and effectively "nailed" by E. H. Montagu, libellous insinuations continue to be directed against well-known American personalities in the industry. By heeding these the manufacturers concerned are playing into the hands of a paper which is out for the free advertisement it badly needs.

In addition to the thousands of charity performances in moving picture theaters throughout the country on Kinema Ambulance Day, November 9, a special matinee entertainment by celebrities who have appeared on the screen has been arranged to take place at the London Opera House on November 16. Their Majesties the King and Queen, Her Majesty Queen Alexandra and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will give their patronage, and the artistes will include Gladys Cooper, Phyllis Dare, Mlle. Delysia and M. Morton, Clara Evelyn, Florence Turner, Sir George Alexander, John Lawson, Billy Merson, Henry Ainley, Derwent Hall Caine, Albert Chevalier, H. B. Irving, Lupino Lane, Geo. Grossmith, Leonard and Yorke, Geo. Mozart, Charles Rock, George Robey, Ed. Sass, James Welch and others. W. A. Northam, publicity manager of the London Film Company, is the organizing secretary.

I mentioned recently of the prohibition at Saint Helen's (not Saint Helena) among other places of the film "Five Nights." The incident has provided a test case of the legality of local licensing authorities assuming dictatorship of what the public shall and shall not see that will be interesting to follow. The National Film Company, the owners of the English rights, applied in the King's Bench Court demanding the local justices at Saint Helen's to show cause why the prohibition should not be quashed. The application has been adjourned to enable the judges and counsel to obtain information of the nature of the film.

Why does the "Evening News" continue to persistently attack and urge the Government to tax American films? is the summary of a question in Parliament last week asked by Thomas Lough. "Because," says the same gentleman, "the company which owns the paper also owns a large film factory."

The Channel Islands, those remote outposts of the kingdom close to the shore of France, were nearly placed in an unfortunate position through Mr. McKenna's new dictum. Films leaving London for exhibition there would under the ordinary rule have to pay tax upon every journey, but last week, in reply to Mr. King, M. P., the Chancellor stated that British and foreign films which have once paid the import duty will be allowed to be sent for short periods to the Channel Islands under bond and be exempt from further duty. I fancy many films will go to the Channel Islands for short periods for a rest and—a change.

Each will be disposed of on the exclusive basis and each star, the former Hepworth villainers, Elizabeth Risdon, now Mrs. G. L. Tucker. Mr. Elvey is now at work upon picturizations of "The Greatest Wish in the World" and "The Evolutions of Catherine," both by E. Temple Thurston, a popular writer.

Thomas Bentley, of the Trans-Atlantic Film Company, Ltd., has just completed in express time a drama entitled "The Woman Who Dared." This must not be confused with the morality drama of a similar type, "The Woman Who Did," produced by the new Broadwest Film Company and dated for release about the same time.

A batch of the heavier feature plays of the Vitagraph Company is to hand this week and has with few exceptions been disposed of on the exclusive basis. The Gaumont Company has taken the much heralded railroad scena, "The Juggernaut," and a newer enterprise, the Samson Film Company has adopted "The Scar" and "The Criminal." "The Offending Kiss," as evidence of Mr. Smith's faith in the principle, is reserved for the open market.

Climatic and atmospheric disadvantages were for a long time a serious handicap to the progress of British film production, but with the advance of kinematographic and optical science these have been minimized almost as much as ever they will be. Doubtless there are many American manufacturers interested in the development of the photographic side of the profession and the improvement in quality of films produced in this country, particularly in regard to exterior scenes. It would be hard to award the palm to any particular subject or firm, but as a criterion I would specially recommend "The Coal King," by the Neptune Film Company. The story is mediocre, even weak, the acting is fair, but the photography (in the print I saw) is, to say the least, Californian.

Two producing companies were registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts last week. The first is a new undertaking to be called the Vanguard Film Producing Company, Ltd., with a capital of £300 and a field of operations in Yorkshire. The capital is registered as £7,500, and henceforth it will be known as the Holmfifth Producing Company, Ltd.

Chaplin is still very much on the carpet with the picture-going public, despite the many and strong attempts to "shove him under." Supporters of the boycotting policy of the Exhibitors' Association have found a temporary expedient for satiating public taste while at the same time "starving" the Essanay Company. Old successes of Chaplin, both with Keystone and the Chicago house, are being carefully renovated, and in some cases are fetching extraordinary prices for second-hand stuff. A suburban manager stated the other day that he had arrangements in hand for the supply to his circuit of one rejuvenated Chaplin film a week for two years ahead.

Mr. Batley has selected the insignia "British Oaks" as his trade-mark.

Katherine Franek

KATHERINE FRANEK, who is fast forging to the front as a valued member of the Vitagraph Stock Company, says she became an actress through the exercise of a woman's "I will" against the repeated opposition of her parents. Miss Franek was born at West Palm Beach, Florida, December 25, 1888, and is the daughter of Abraham and Sarah Franek. She received her education at the De Land Seminary in De Land, Fla., where she studied until she was sixteen.

Katherine Franek.

Miss Franek's brother was in the managerial end of the theatrical profession, and during one of her summer vacations she decided she would become an actress. Motion pictures appealed to Miss Franek, and, watching them daily, it was but natural, with her inclination for stage work, she should apply for a position as a screen actress. In October, 1914, she joined the Vitagraph Company as a stock member, and in that organization, where there was more opportunity for advancement, continued her climb up the ladder to motion picture stardom. She is fully determined to become a recognized film star and is continually studying to fit herself so that she may gain this destination. The most important pictures in which she has appeared under the Vitagraph banner include distinct characterizations in such special features as "The Dawn of Understanding," "The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning," "Heredity" and "The Battle Cry of Peace," besides the portrayal of half a hundred characters in shorter pictures.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE appeal to motion picture exhibitors to get together and stick together is more opportune at the present time than any other period in the history of the business. It is sincerely hoped that the exhibitors of Ohio will give special attention to it, drop any petty jealousy, or other personal feelings that may exist, and combine for the general welfare of the business. No exhibitors who have any common sense will fail to realize this after learning of the appeal that comes from their fellow exhibitors in the District of Columbia. News comes from Washington that immediately after Congress convenes on the first Monday of December Rev. Crafts, the national spokesman of the official censorship agitators, will renew the fight for an act of Congress providing for motion picture censorship. Unfortunately the exhibitors in many parts of the country outside the District of Columbia have assumed that, being on the battlegrounds, the exhibitors in that territory are in a position to better fight the agitators than those located at a distance. It appears from the appeal that this is a mistaken impression. Mr. H. M. Crandall, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, gives timely warning to his fellow exhibitors throughout the country that the foe is getting ready for a hard fight and that the exhibitors of the District of Columbia feel they are almost helpless because the district has no representative in Congress and it is difficult for its residents to adequately exert their influence there; so that the battle is put up squarely to exhibitors outside the district, who have representatives in Congress and who should lose no time in placing the case before them. The time for the work is short, and quick and vigorous action is imperative. Moreover, it is necessary that the motion picture people prepare at once for proper representation to co-operate with the exhibitors in Washington when the time comes to meet the lobbyists of the opposition. Heretofore the picture people have been slow in getting to the battleground and upon arrival there have found the agitators in a state of wonderful preparedness. These straight-frocked and white-tied lobbyists are slick ones. No one can lose them in the crooks and turns of the lobby, so the motion picture people cannot afford to lose a minute, or allow the slightest opportunity to slip by. Mr. Crandall says the enemy has been at work so diligently since the last session of Congress that he feels the motion picture people will meet a formidable opposition. "I do hope that the exhibitors will take time by the forelock and get busy," he says.

* * *

The Board of Trade, manufacturers, exchange people, dealers in supplies, exhibitors, operators, everybody connected with the motion picture business and dependent upon its welfare should give quick response to the appeal from Washington. Exhibitors can do good work in addition to personal appeals to their Congressmen by securing signatures of their patrons and friends to petitions and urging them to write personal letters. It cannot be disputed that the moving picture "fans" exceed by far the hosts the opposition claims to have and a demonstration of this strength certainly can do no harm, and, to the contrary, may have a good effect. It will at least serve to counteract the intimidatory methods of the opposition and convince the lawmakers that when it becomes a question of political future there is a powerful element to be considered other than the church vote. When the proper time comes it may also be well to recall to the minds of the lawmakers the recent election results in the State of New York. The motion picture people stood together in opposition to the proposed amendments to the State constitution because they were denied representation in them. The proposition went down under a majority of over 400,000, while the Woman Suffrage proposition was beaten by only 150,000. No figures are at hand to show how many motion picture people voted against the constitutional amendments, or the influence they exerted against them, but there is sufficient evidence to show that they gave the proposition such a powerful punch that people who have an eye on their political welfare cannot afford to ignore them, or trample upon their rights. The motion picture people do not ask for anything unlawful, unjust or that may tend to injure the morals of the public. Equal privileges are their sole claim and aim. That was all they asked when their appeal was killed in committee by the constitutional committee at Albany, and if it becomes a case of political intimidation at Washington as it was at the last session of Congress, it would be well to impress upon the lawmakers to remember New York.

* * *

While official censorship is generally opposed in the motion picture centers, there are some people who feel that if it can be demonstrated that they are wrong on the subject and such censorship is necessary they prefer a national regulation, providing that such legislation would displace the bodies that have unnecessarily sprung up like mushrooms throughout the states, creating imposition upon the makers and exhibitors of pictures in even some of the smallest villages in the country. Mr. Crandall, of the District of Columbia Exhibitors' League, says he would welcome a national board if the cities, towns and villages throughout the country would accept the judgment of the members as their own; but he fears the temptation for graft is so great that the creation of such a board would only be an additional imposition upon the manufacturers and exhibitors—simply the creation at their expense of additional soft political berths.

* * *

A curious state of affairs has arisen in connection with the official censorship board of Los Angeles, Cal. After reporting adversely on "Damaged Goods," the board allowed a reconsideration and finally became tired of the arguments, suspending judgment until after the Board of Education has an opportunity to see the picture. This is a sample of the operations of official censorship boards. The Board of Education has as much jurisdiction in the matter as the Board of Health has; and if the censors are not qualified to render a decision, or doubts as to the stability of the claims made against the picture are so strong that the board cannot decide, either the board should resign, or the exhibitor should be allowed to go on in peace. But the case presents a "nigger in the wood pile." A member of the censor board is a feature exhibitor in competition with the exhibitor who wants the picture passed and he strongly opposed its endorsement. It is entirely reasonable to assume that this exhibitor, and any other who holds a similar position, is in favor of official censorship. Be that as it may, his position only emphasizes the claim of the motion picture people that official censor boards have too many opportunities to curtail, or deprive them of, their rights. It would be better if no exhibitors became members of the censor boards. Exhibitors who have any respect for, or a desire to preserve, their constitutional rights should not sell them for such appointments. In the Los Angeles case the argument against exhibitors becoming members of censor boards is made stronger. The exhibitor-member exercised very poor judgment. It was very bad taste for him to sit on the board, or take part in any argument, when the picture of a competing exhibitor was under consideration. He was practically sitting in a judicial capacity and his action is subject to the same criticism as would that of a judge who might preside in the trial of a matter in which he has a personal interest. The latitude official censorship boards have for infringing upon, or depriving others of, their rights is one of the strongest arguments against their existence. Another point against them is that the members may use their office as the Los Angeles member did with impunity. If a judicial officer did the same thing he would be subject to charges. The only charges provided for in the laws creating the censor boards are those relating to the pay they receive for their unconstitutional work.

All hats off to the motion picture exhibitors of Pittsburgh, Pa. To quote the language of the day, "they have the right dope." They made the candidates for city and county offices in the recent elections show their hands on the motion picture business before endorsing them.

* * *

Motion pictures have discarded their swaddling clothes. They are now "grown-ups," developed and strong, fearing no counter attractions. Joseph Brooks, a veteran among legitimate theatrical managers, can testify to this. He created a revival of stage production of "Trilby," with an all-star cast headed by over half a dozen leading actors and actresses of this country and England. He closed the show in Boston and returned to New York last week, saying that opposition of "Trilby" in photoplay form had killed his business. He says advertisements by the picture people, "Why pay $2 when it can be seen for 25 cents?" was the shrapnel that drove his company from the trenches, but such publicity was only incidental. Most of the regular shows today are hanging out signs reading: "This is not a moving picture show," but that has not reduced the number of regular shows that are silently stealing back to the old home town.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Different.

SOUVENIRS of clips of film are common enough, but Paul Gyllstrom, who does the press work for the Palace theater, Santa Barbara, has something else. His letter explains the idea:

> Am enclosing a sample of a souvenir that is being distributed at the Palace theater, Santa Barbara, during the run of the twentieth chapter "The Diamond From the Sky," Sept. 27 and 28. While my main job is with the Morning Press, I look after the Palace press work, and this little idea was my own and sanctioned by President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, who instructed the cutting department at the studio to have surplus negative saved for us. This stunt could only be pulled off in the home of any production and also in the case of a serial, as it took several chapters to provide the couple of thousand souvenirs to be distributed the next two days. We may not have enough for all, but have given notice that they will be distributed as long as they last.

We are not so certain about it being impossible for theaters outside of studio towns getting hold of the negative. Most companies make two negatives of each scene and some throw one of these away. In any event there are always clipped ends they might be glad to sell. The idea is that each envelope contains two frames of negative with the suggestion that the recipient can print up positives on paper or have the frames enlarged professionally. It is a good scheme, but we would suggest that the name of the theater should have appeared upon the card as well as on the containing envelope.

Enlarging on the idea, it might be of service to the press man of some company who wants to reach the exhibitors with a new appeal. Four or five frames of negative from a new production might appeal to the exhibitor and the cost would be small in proportion to the return.

The Right Idea.

In sending in a small program for the Liberty, Jamesburg, N. J., Adolph Hoerl explains:

> The paragraphs as they appear this week on the back page are written on account of a rumor due to the opening of another house. The town can only stand one house and an account of my brother and myself being merely young men some one got the idea that we were going to quit, or else our opposition started a rumor to that effect. We are still "alive."

That's the right idea. If opposition comes, fight it intelligently. The three paragraphs are self-explanatory. They seem to cover the ground. The house has been run properly. Now that invasion is threatened, they can simply point to their past record. It backs them up. That is the way to run a theater when you have the only house in town. The program is a small four-pager, but the facts are set forth well and attractively.

> AN EXPLANTION.
>
> The management regrets a rumor which has been circulated, verbally and otherwise, to the effect that the Liberty Theater is about to close up. We want to say that there is no truth in the rumor.
>
> OUR STANDARD.
>
> Once our standard is set no cause can lower it. We are giving our patrons the very best the market affords, but our extra efforts are more than counterbalanced by the expressions of appreciation we hear on every side.
>
>
> No one, either upon being questioned or voluntarily, has expressed dissatisfaction at any picture shown at the Liberty Theater, even down to the little one-reeler. We are proud of that. If you have seen one you were not satisfied with, help us break this record.

New.

The Circle theater, Easton, Pa., sends in a new form of program with the remark that they have sought to make it as perfect as possible. They now have the weekly program on the front page, but they do not dress it up to look like a program. They use tabulated style for the underline and full face type, but the program for the week goes in plain, solid Roman and no display. It is the current week they mainly seek to advertise. It should be advertised on the front in display type. The underline should be advertised on the back in display type. The details of the current program may appear on the two inside pages. They waste a lot of good space with extended synopses that do not mean as much as ten smartly written lines, and they have no space for house talk because they smear the pages with reprint. It is not necessary to take a page to an attraction. Keep the program to a single page of smartly written stuff, keep a condensed program on the front page and the underline on the back and there will be one solid page and part of another for sound house talk, if they will study how to write house talk. The fault at present seems to be an inability to write pulling stuff. If it cannot be done, they should arrange to have someone else do it for them. It is not enough to have a program. The program must be a worker.

Awkward.

Perhaps other than those people who pay will notice this lapse from a Minneapolis house. It says:

Request for an Address card
at the Blank theater

It is awkward English. You make a request for a card or you request a card, but you do not "request for." Somehow the use of good English suggests good management—and the reverse.

This Is Pantages.

Really this picture doesn't belong in this department, but if the Boss can't think of anyone else to wish stuff on he puts it in our box, and so it happens that we get a letter from the Pathe exchange in Seattle with a picture of Alex Pantages standing between two Lillian Lorraines, which is a most happy situation. The cut is partly reproduced to show a man who from a very small beginning has left his impress on amusements on the Pacific coast. Mr. Pantages is running Neal of the Navy, which is why the picture is sent in by the exchange, but he is doing more than that. He is running regular houses with pictures as an attraction and he is running them right because he is a natural born showman who has built one small house up into a circuit.

Uses Car Cards

J. F. Fleitas, of the Monroe, Key West, sends in a postcard photograph of a car card sign he uses. These are metal signs painted or pasted with one-sheets as seems most advantageous. We gather that the car company makes no charge for this since it brings business to the line. Mr. Fleitas seems to think the idea reasonably new, but nearly thirty years ago it used to be part of our Saturday night outing to take a chance on getting kicked in the head tying theater banners to the horsecars as they came into the stable. It is good advertising not only because the signs are run the entire length of business streets, but because each car carries the same sign and repetition helps.

He also sends a rather long vest pocket with two weeks in one This is all the more reason why the days should be dated, but they are not. A card half the length, issued each week, would probably be better, as it would not have to be carried for so long and would not stick so far above the pocket as to be torn by the coat. Four inches, at most, should be the length of a vest pocket.

Well Planned.

The Stanley, New York City, sends in a private mailing card, four by eight inches, with a weekly program on the back. The card is white and is printed in red and black. The program is run by dated days, the headline title in full face, others in Roman caps and the names of the players in red. A red star still further designates the star features. The double printing costs more, but intelligent use of the second color makes the card doubly attractive. The front carries the line "You can help us," as the attractor, the explanation being that they pick their service from 115 reels weekly and will appreciate the comment and suggestion of the patron; always a strong appeal to the man who wants to attend to the other man's business instead of his own.

Got Him Guessing.

Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty, Spokane, sends in a few samples of newspaper work, including one that he thinks is his, at least he writes:

> I am almost positive the enclosed ad is ours, for I am able to make out "The Liberty" and "Hope-Jones." If it is, I never saw such guys when it comes to sticking to copy. We told them very distinctly that we boasted 1,200 roomy, comfortable divans, and here they've gone and balled it all up by saying "1,200 komfortabla, rymliga divaner I."
>
> It all came about this way: We got wind of a big celebration—a sort of a harvest festival to be held here in Spokane the last three days of this week, and having been informed that there would be in the neighborhood (that's the word, I hope it proves true) of 35,000 Svenskas (Swedes) and other good folks in town, thought it a good gamble to go after all of them and, perhaps, fill up the 1,200 K. R. D.'s with some regular joy seekers. To embellish our program and make it look like it was all for them, we fortunately secured Miss Esther Sundquist, a highly talented and very popular young lady violinist. What's in a name? We shall see.
>
> Along with this you will find several samples of our newspaper efforts, ranging from a full page down to four tens. Sobs of anguish prevent my telling you how much we pay for space in the newspapers of this handsome city, but if you will consult the Clearing House Reports of Spokane, each bulge therein is evidence that the Liberty had paid an ad. bill the day prior. All decreases in same proportion!

That isn't as bad as being called a "Hvilken teater" offering a "Biografprogram." Still it probably paid as it is the only picture house represented in the special issue.

The remainder of the samples are a liberal education in how to tend to business when you write advertising. Advertising costs money, as may be inferred from the last paragraph of the letter, and when they pay line rates they do not experiment. They do not load the space down with all sorts of type. They put in a few big lines and then build up to those lines instead of trying to hide them behind other big faces. It looks like poor argument to say that a few big lines are better than many, but the big lines will lead to the reading of smaller lines if they are given a chance and are not overshadowed, and it is a realization of this fact that makes the Ruffner advertising work for the house. The really clever advertising man is the one who makes a half page do a full page draft.

Advertises for Guests.

The Broadway theater, Charlotte, N. C., runs in its house organ each week a few items like the two reprinted:

> If she will only not be too busy to read Movie News this week Miss D. Y. of 616 East 5th St. will be presented with passes to the Broadway if she will call at the box office.
>
> To, in a measure, show our appreciation of their regular attendance at the Broadway we wish Mr. and Mrs. Jack J. of No. 3 North Fox St. to call at the Broadway box office for complimentary passes.

In a small town every one will read the sheet to see who gets the passes and it makes for general interest.

A Booster Night.

Mrs. R. R. Moore, of the Ideal, Akron, O., who runs her house on brains and personality, has found another new one. She has been running a slide that reads:

BOOSTER'S NIGHT

(Date here)
Bring a stranger to "your theater"
We are always boosting for you.
Here's your chance to boost.

And for that night she planned new hangings for stage and house, new framed photographs and a show a little better than usual. If your patrons are your friends, try a booster night. The stranger is the one you want to get. The regulars you merely have to hold. If your regulars get you your strangers it works two ways, you get more business and the newcomers feel among friends. No matter what you may think about votes for women, you simply have to hand it to Mrs. Moore now and then.

Uses Its Own.

The Mecca theater, Dayton, O., uses its own colored program with a really fine cut of the house apparently falling into a subway trench like Broadway, New York. If the drawing can be worked over to escape the suggestion that the house is headed straight for the bottomless pit, the effect would be much better. Black, blue and yellow are the colors used and these are handled effectively on the back page for a border for the underline. The current program is run on the inside pages with inconspicuous foreign advertising top and bottom. The matter is snappy and well prepared. It's a good program all except the bottom of the front page, but the artist fell down on handling his color.

Spasmodic.

Will J. Glaser, of the Grand, Faribault, Minn., sends in some circulars which he says they use spasmodically with good results. The results would be better were they used regularly, for well prepared advertising such as this gets its best effect from regularity of appearance. Get the people asking for your advertising instead of having to force it on them.

Mr. Glaser uses an exceptional quality of stock, six by twelve. One circular, the first, is printed on both sides and can be folded into three to suggest a mailing card, but is printed with an address to "Mr. and Mrs. Grand Theater Patron, and Family," which is too long. The other part to show reads:

SAFETY FIRST!

Safe to Take Your Mother, Sweetheart, Sister, Wife or Brother—To The— Good Photoplays

Good Music
Good Cheer

GRAND
"The Theatre Beautiful"

The Grand
Has a Charm
All Its Own

In another issue Mr. Glaser gracefully dodges the "Not good Saturday and Sunday" line. He prints a matinee coupon good when presented with ten cents and adds "Not good Sunday, Oct. 3, or thereafter." This sounds much better. Mr. Glaser is fortunate in having a printer who cannot only set type but who can display it.

And It's So.

> MOVING PICTURE WORLD REVIEWS.
>
> The reviews of pictures to be presented at the Olympian that are published from time to time in The News are taken from the Moving Picture World, and represent the ideas of experienced critics, uncontrolled by any influence.
>
> Doubtless many Olympian patrons read the Moving Picture World and they know that the reviewers write truthfully and fearlessly. Many pictures are flayed mercilessly, many others are passed as "fair," and when a picture is called good, it is good.
>
> These criticisms are dependable.

Did it ever occur to you that if you say a thing is so it might strike the man from Missouri that you are prejudiced and that perhaps the comment from this paper will be more readily accepted? Let the paper work for you in every way. Make the fullest and most intelligent use of it or you are not getting all you pay for.

Print and Duplicator.

The National, Cleveland, O., uses for its advertising a folder printed on one side and mimeographed on the other. Presumably a large stock of printed sides is run off and used for multigraph work week by week. The sheet is seven by ten, folded twice and mailed under one cent postage by being sealed with a tiny red wafer. When folded one side presents the address and the other this happy line:

Not Merely "Moving Pictures"
But
Honest to Goodness Photoplays.

The third fold carries a little house talk that is presumably changed with each press run. The other side is left for the reproducing work and this is very well laid out with detailed dated programs and running comment with an underline chat and coming features. Whoever prepared the matter has an orderly mind for the disposition of the text is excellent. If, as would appear, this is done on a flat bed reproducer instead of a mimeograph, it will be possible to use rule and border work to good advantage with a very small outlay for type material.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Mr. Frambers Says:

HERE is a meaty letter from Clarence Frambers, editor for the Selig company. Pay particular notice to the third paragraph. If you are told that a company wants a certain type or types of stories, do not use it as a dumping ground for everything you have in stock on the off chance that it may be sold. This is one reason why so many editors keep their tips under cover and you are robbed of a chance to sell intelligently. Now listen to Mr. Frambers:

> In response to my notice in your department for scripts of a certain character, which you so kindly printed, I am in receipt of some remarkably good material and am buying quite a good deal of it; however, I would like to offer a few suggestions which, if brought to the notice of the scenario writers reading your articles, would save a great deal of time and extra work.
> I neglected to state in my letter to you that we had moved and our address is now 58 East Washington street. When this company moved in April it was so stated in every motion picture trade journal and therefore I took for granted that the alert scenario writer would make note of the change. Two months ago I had a special stamp made reading "Please note we have moved to 58 East Washington Street." This was placed on every rejection slip sent out. And yet I get from 200 to 300 scripts every day addressed "20 East Randolph Street." The post office department are getting after us as this pile of letters have to be readdressed and are held up and delayed.
>
> Despite my explicit letter stating my wants I am getting piles of war stories, slap stick comedy, four and five reel features, one reel society dramas and then a note is enclosed stating "I saw your notice in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD for scripts." These are just what we don't want.
>
> Scenario writers also make a serious mistake when writing western stories. If they are rejected they complain because no one else buys western stories. There's a reason. Most writers will send in western scenarios with several large "sets" and "city" scenes, etc. They don't seem to realize that when a company is making nothing but western stories they are out in the mountains or on the desert far away from a studio, a city, or society hangouts. Western stories must be western throughout and not start in the city and end up on the desert. If interiors are necessary make them very simple.
>
> The only company we have making western stuff is headed by Tom Mix, who is a dare-devil and an expert on horses. He does stunts on horses that no one else ever dares to attempt. Hence you will see when a script comes in calling for a great deal of heavy or emotional acting on the part of the "hero" or a large cast that it is not available for our use. All this could be avoided if the writer only "took in" a few of Tom Mix's pictures.
>
> Scenario writers frequently complain of their treatment at the hands of editors, but I can readily appreciate how some of us busy men lose our patience and close up like a clam. I said in my letter that I would, when deemed expedient, make criticism and offer suggestions on rejection slips. So far about two dozen have "come back" at me saying they don't agree with me and want an argument. This is very discouraging.
>
> Also wish to state that I have some ninety-five scripts in my desk that either have no addresses on them or the scripts have come back undelivered. If an author puts his address on his script and it comes back undelivered, what's the answer?
>

Just Once.

If you sell an idea, sell it unless you tie a string to it that is recognized by the purchaser before buying. Your interest in an idea lies in several forms, if you take the trouble to reserve to yourself all of those forms and give proper notice of such reservation. You can take the same idea and make it into a novel. You can sell first the serial rights, then the book rights and perhaps the second serial rights. Then you can make it into a play, and later, perhaps, into a grand opera. You can make a song or painting from it and copyright each of these forms, but each purchaser of any right must be advised that the other rights are reserved—and it does not pay to try and sell the motion picture rights alone unless you are a very well known author whose work is in great demand.

Recently a woman who had cut down a novel to a few hundred words to submit in a newspaper fiction contest wanted to know if she could take the idea, in the event of winning a prize, and write a novel, too. Another author wrote that he had sold a story to a certain company and that they had produced it so poorly that he wanted to do it over again, as the screen version was almost unrecognizable. In neither case could a favorable answer be returned. If you sell a thing without reserve you relinquish all rights.

The New Touch.

In the November American magazine appears a story that in very similar form has been done dozens of times before. In this case two men are cast upon a desert island after a shipwreck. One, who lands unconscious, holds a draft for a million dollars, the proceeds of the sale of a business established by the other man's father. Before the wreck the financier has been justifying his conduct in taking over a broken down business, building it up, incorporating it and making a profit of $950,000 on a $50,000 investment. When the financier regains consciousness he finds that the other, arriving there first, claims the island as his own. He is able, physically, to uphold his claim, so he amuses himself by taking the other to board at a prohibitive price, and when the million dollar draft is exhausted he pays him a salary on the same fantastic basis and issues script. The financier toils away while the man he called a dreamer lolls comfortably in the shade. Up to this point the story is like a lot of others and probably would not have been accepted by any magazine, but there is a new punch in the climax. When rescue comes the financier not only has script for the million dollar draft, but the other man owes him an additional $150,000, or some such sum. It was this last point that made the story different from the others and gave it a reason for being. It is the same way with stories. You can get the old ideas over if you can get a new tang to the climax.

Distractions.

In the August Green Book David Belasco says that following the first night of Marie Odile the pigeon that flew down and perched upon her shoulder was cut out because people wondered how the bird was trained instead of following the play.

An entire department could be given to instances wherein something similar hurt even where it did not ruin a photoplay. Down stage a tender hero and moist eyed heroine are parting. He is going to the wars. The rest of the army of nineteen persons is standing at the rear waiting for him to come along. The general playfully pricks a private in the calf with his sword. The man yells and his fellows laugh. The scene is spoiled. The director is to blame? Perhaps. Perhaps he thought it was good by-play. More likely he was too busy shouting at the players in the hope of getting them to give a good imitation of acting instead of playing they were a couple of bean poles. But if the scene in the script had the soldiers waiting, then the author primarily was at fault. He should not have left the men on. A scene shows the army. The girl comes in. The hero obtains permission to say good bye. They leave the scene. They are seen in another. Back to the army.

Christmas Stories.

Stop work on that Christmas story you are writing, because it very probably will not sell. It used to be the fashion to release special stories for Christmas and Fourth of July and Memorial Day and Thanksgiving and all the rest, but the exchanges kicked and little of this is done now. A film lasts from 90 days to a year. When an exhibitor using a junk service puts on a Christmas story in May it is a dead giveaway. Such films must be retired soon after Christmas and the exchanges do not get proper booking value out of them, so most manufacturers no longer make seasonal stuff.

Gone!

Recently authors who have submitted scripts to the Keystone company have been receiving letters from Henri Nuss, one of its editors, praising their work, but deploring their lack of technical knowledge; a lack he offered to supply by letting them have the manuscript of a book he had written but was too busy to publish for a consideration

The matter was brought to the attention of the Keystone company and it was found that Mr. Nuss had copied the names of all who had submitted scripts to Keystone and was carrying on an agency from this mailing list. His connection with the company has been severed.

Regular film companies do not find it necessary to augment their income by such petty means and they do not permit their employees to use company property or their standing with the firm to further their own ends. Any time you get a letter supposedly from an editor, offering what seems to be an inside track to the studio, let the others bite

Langley Not Moore.

Kenneth D. Langley writes that he is no longer associated in any way with the "Elbert Moore" concern, but is with a producing company. The "Elbert Moore" advertising is continued and Mr. Langley's note gives the suggestion that he never was other than an employee of that concern.

Both Unconvinced.

Remember, we recently wrote of a man who had read the old Lubin form sheet we prepared long ago, but who could not see the use of a text book. We argued that if he had found a four-page sheet helpful he might gain greater aid from a larger book. He apparently took the general comment for a personal reply, though there have been others with the same idea. He writes:

> I'll take my medicine cheerfully and without a whine. It is certainly bitter, but it is good. I am open to your criticism of my method. To make me feel sore is an impossibility. That column in this week's issue of the Moving Picture World has taught me a lesson, but still I shall not yield. The Lubin form sheet written by you is great. Your "Technique" surely must contain a lot more that is helpful. But let me tell you, without egotism or glory, since I have learned the construction of a photoplay I have discovered another thing. I have found out that there is a God within me—the real self, the soul. That is what shall guide me until I reach the pinnacle of success.

This writer has found that within himself is to be found success and only within himself. This is the Great Discovery for the writer, for the man who seeks to replace his own mind with a printed text book is forever and totally damned in that he will never learn to think for himself but always will be a leaner.

But on the other hand to discard all help, to reject all aids, is almost equally foolish as to seek to get others to do your work for you. There are many things that can be communicated by means of the printed word. If these facts can be acquired and digested it lessens the length of the novitiate and sends the novice forth better equipped. He has been enabled to take the right way from the very start instead of making innumerable detours down blind alleys and cul-de-sacs. He has not profited by these side journeys, he has merely wasted valuable time, where the use of a guide book would have designated the proper paths and he could have concentrated his energy upon reaching the goal.

No text book or lesson course can ever supply the lack of inherent qualification, and no success can ever be based upon other than the author's own effort and experience, but a text book can direct the effort into the right channels, and by enabling the aspirant to avoid useless labor, provides him more time in which to experiment along the proper lines.

Euclid crystalized the principles of geometry. Surely that is no reason why the geometrician should discard the work of Euclid and seek to rediscover the problems for himself. Euclid tells that the line a-b must equal the line a-c. In that simple statement may be contained the result of much study that, once the discovery is made, might be better applied to the practical application of that fact. In the same way the text book on any subject states the theory and leaves the practice to the pupil.

We are not particularly interested in pushing the sale of Technique of the Photoplay. We are interested in starting the would-be writer upon the right path, and it is for that reason and not for the sake of financial returns that we urge the student to provide himself with a guide, then to study it and lastly to do the practice work that ALONE can bring success. For nearly two years we have been giving free tuition to a certain writer. He has made a couple of unimportant sales in that time, but this is the only tangible result he has to show, but he is getting a foundation that, when the sales do commence to come, will enable him to write not one but scores of thoroughly good story plots. We could have coached him to a flash in the pan a year ago, but he wanted to be a real success. It takes longer—much longer—to build the two or three-story foundation of an office building than it does to erect the upper floors, but once the foundation is there the twenty or thirty stories shoot up as though by magic. The foundation does not show, but it must be there. It is the same in story writing. Take your text book and build your foundation. Then when you come to rear the superstructure, you'll have something to build on.

Chances.

"What chance do we little fellows stand?" demands a writer who has seen in print that the market is growing better. He goes on to say that he can write a pretty good one-reel story and now and then a two or three, but does not yet seem able to write five and six-reel features.

What chance does the milk man stand? How about the baker? One sells milk instead of ice cream and the other deals in bread instead of cake, but that is no reason why they should be looked down upon. There is a chance, and a good one for the so-called little fellow, and it is going to get better as time goes on. One and two-reel stories are necessary to the rounding out of a program and there is a slow but certain return on the part of some houses to the mixed program. These one and two reels can be taken care of by the authors who cannot yet get up to the four and five-reel feature standard.

Exhibitors like five reels because they can concentrate their advertising upon a single subject and make the noise tell. Manufacturers like the big reels because they cost less in proportion to manufacture and sell for a larger proportionate rental. So far it looks bad for the one-reel man, but there is the public to be reckoned with. They want one-reels and some of the more alert exhibitors realize this. More will swing into line when there are better one-reel stories put out. Already some manufacturers are beginning to see this and are looking more carefully to the one-reel men. It's easy enough to give the man with the big name a thousand dollars for a five-reel story, but he won't write one-reels for $50 or $75 each, and they must be had from some source. You wait and see. What would happen were all the magazine publishers to suspend their issues and print only novels?

Rejection Slips.

A wrathy novice designates rejection slips as lying swindles in that they do not mean what they say. Quite true, but the self-same correspondent would be still more wrathy if the editor told him what he really thought. It is no part of the editor's business to offer criticism and to do so would be to engage in a perpetual correspondence with those who sought to traverse his opinion, so he simply uses the time-honored rejection slips and lets it go at that. Don't call the editor names. If you write the type of story that such a mental attitude suggests, the best way to get square with the offender is to send him more scripts.

Getting Names.

Herman A. Blackman, being in the Railway Mail Service, has naturally turned to home sources for suggestion. He finds in the U. S. Postal Guide a fund of names for people and places. Mr. Blackman writes:

> I have an idea which it may be worth while to pass on. It is about names. Lots of times it is pretty hard to get names that will exactly fit the characters. Of course, I have unusual facilities for this. I can go to our card index directory and have some 30,000 names to choose from. Or I can watch the names on the letters which pass through my hands every day—between 5,000 and 15,000 of them. But I do not get my names that way. When I am troubled to get a suitable name, I go to my list of U. S. postoffices which the department puts out each July. I can find any kind of name I want—surnames or Christian—male or female—and it is never a very long hunt to find them either. It is a very helpful thing.
>
> These lists of postoffices are of value in other ways, too. If one is writing a story which has been given a definite location as to state and has also to name a town in that state, he must be very careful not to strike the name of a real town of that state. For instance, Jonnson, O., would do for a fiction name because there is no such P. O. in Ohio. But if you used Johnson, Ind., as a fiction name, you might get into trouble, for there is such a P. O. in Indiana. Thus, the book becomes quite handy to have about. It can be obtained at any first-class P. O. for practically the cost of manufacture. Sometimes an acquaintance who is an employee can get an old discarded one for nothing.
> Another thing about these books. There are a thousand stories in them. Hundreds of odd names of postoffices, each containing the germ of a story. "Calico Rock," Pirate Cove, Cave-In-Rock, Greasy Ridge, are just a few of the names which, to an imaginative mind, project a story. If I ever run short of material (which I can't see how it ever could happen) I will go to my list of postoffices and write the stories suggested there.

Unless we are mistaken, the Guide is printed by a concern in Albany, N. Y., and comes in two forms, one listing offices in toto and also by states and a cheaper edition giving only the entire offices and not classifying by states. As Mr. Blackman suggests, there are story plots to be found in the names of towns if you know how to look for them. There are stories to be found in almost anything, for that matter.

As to names, we think that apt naming of characters (and this does not mean calling the hero Jack Goodman and the villain Ben Bendit) helps a lot in giving color. It pays to go to a little trouble to find names. When we get pressed for a surname we turn to a year book of a fraternal order listing some five thousand names. For a foreign name we use the World Almanac, which gives the list of the diplomatic service. For Indian names we have a couple of publications of the Ethnological bureau and found some Arabic names in the index to the Koran. The index to Josephus similarly gives Jewish, Roman and Greek names. Some of the mail order papers offer lists of names under the general classification of "Naming the baby" that will offer plenty of given names, but the extremely old and the long and the uncouth should be avoided.

Certain names suggest strength and others weakness. "Percy" and "Clarence" are "dude names," and even the suggestion of "Percy, the Cowboy" is regarded as humorous; but there are other and newer names, if you will take the time to dig them up, and the novelty might make additional appeal to the editor, though "Clarence," as it stands will do well enough if you do not employ the name in a leader, though a name better selected might be written into the leaders merely for the effect. It will take more than a single book to help you to names, but it is worth while collecting them.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 113.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

> What are the effects of the intermittent sprocket being out of line, sidewise, with the upper and lower sprocket? What is the effect if one side of the intermittent sprocket is higher than the other? What is the effect of worn intermittent sprocket shaft bushings?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 107.

The Roll of Honor on question 107 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida; F. V. Poyser, Brandon, Manitoba; Arthur H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Canada; Wilson Hayes, Barton, Maryland, and George McBath, Tampa, Florida.

These answers, although some were incomplete in the practical end, showed an understanding of the theory, which is, after all, the main proposition. The answer of Brother Larmour was the most complete. I had not, myself, thought of hanging the lines on the screen, and it is a very good stunt.

Incidentally, let me say there is no longer any necessity for giving permission to use names, as the I. A. law which prohibited members writing for publication has been repealed.

Reply to Question No. 107.

By M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

The Question:

Suppose you had a steep pitch in projection and your manager wanted the keystone effect eliminated. What would you do? Would the elimination of the keystone effect correct all the other defects due to steep pitch? What are the other defects?

The Answer:

The most practical way to remedy the keystone effect caused by steep pitch in projection is to proceed as follows: First secure two pieces of narrow black cloth tape a little longer than the height of the picture, and projecting a white light on the screen through the aperture, fasten one end of a piece of tape to the screen at the top at each of the sides of the light image, just below where it completes the bending of the upper rounded corners. Weight the free end of each tape so they will hang straight down, and this serves as a guide in truing up the aperture.

Next remove the aperture plate from the machine and fill in the sides of its opening with solder, making the opening from ⅛ to ¼ inch narrower. Replace the aperture plate on the machine, dim the light (which may be done by removing one of the condensing lenses) so that it will not be too hot, or too hard on the eyes, project the clear light to the screen, and with a fine jeweler's flat file trim away the solder until the image projected on the screen will exactly fit the tape marks previously placed there. By exercising care the lower corners (upper corners of the aperture) may be rounded with a small rat-tail file. Be sure to remove all surplus solder from the face of the aperture, so it will not scratch the film. In filing, bevel the sides of the opening slightly toward the screen.

Inasmuch as the keystone effect is caused by the lower part of the screen being further away from the aperture than the top, this remedy does not correct the defect, but merely conceals it. Wherever possible it is a good idea to also tip the top of the screen back slightly and tip the aperture forward by loosening the screws and placing a small piece of tin under its lower end.

This method of averting keystone effect does not remedy the other troubles set up by this most serious error in motion picture theatre designing. The most objectionable of the other defects is inability to accurately focus the entire picture at one time. Still another serious defect is that there will always be a certain amount of distortion of all images in the picture, caused by the fact that the rays reaching the bottom of the screen must travel further than those reaching the top, hence will spread more, with result that the lower portion of the picture will be magnified more than the upper portion, also all figures will be too tall. In conjunction with the above remedy it is a good idea to outline the picture in black.

[Brother Larmour talks horse sense when he speaks of pitch in projection as being a serious error in theater construction. It is really surprising how often this error is perpetrated without any real cause, meaning by this that in very many instances the operating room might just as well be located practically central with the screen as otherwise, but for some unaccountable reason the location is usually "otherwise." Only a short time ago I received a hurry-up call from Torrington, Conn. They were remodeling the opera house, which runs pictures as well as regular theatrical attractions, and as this particular manager was anxious enough to have things right to be willing to pay for the trip, I straddled Mr. Gasoline-Get-There and created a trail of gasoline smell and dust on the highway, incidentally riding to Torrington and back in one day, 257 miles, spending two and a half hours in Torrington. The proposition was that there was an ideal place for an operating room immediately over the ticket office, and practically central with the screen up, down and sideways. In fact, the pitch would be just a little bit up. The only difficulty was this operating room space was too narrow front and back ways, and it was necessary to shoot under the balcony. The lens had to be located as high as possible in order to clear the passage-way underneath, so that the heads of persons would not interfere in the light. The alternative was to place the machine away up back of the upper balcony, with a steep pitch in projection. The thing was simple. A line stretched from the proposed lens location to the screen showed that by scrimping just a little on the under finish of the front end of the balcony where the light ray passed, a 16-foot picture could be projected to the screen and its lower edge would be two feet above the stage floor, but this would throw the lens six feet from the floor, which was too low. That was easily remedied by dropping the passageway floor down, on a slope, one foot, to give a seven-foot clearance, and by cutting out a brick wall (a simple job), and putting in an iron lintel, the operating room was brought out ahead three feet without in any way interfering with anything, and thus all the requirements were met in the best possible way.

You may say, well the man ought to dope all this out himself. Yet, it looks easy, but really it is not. It requires a special training which will enable one to grasp all the points involved in a situation of that kind, and not only grasp them, but to be able to say with certainty just what can be done and what cannot. In this connection I might say that within a radius of one hundred miles of New York City, so far as my spare time admits, I am willing to go either to a theater under construction, or to an established theater and give advice as to what ought to be done so as to secure the best possible projection. For this service the fee will be reasonable, depending somewhat, of course, upon the distance from New York.]

How Foolish!

Michigan sends the following:

> Have not got your Handbook because I never had trouble in all the time I have been on the job. Have about five years' experience in motion picture machine operating, using all makes and models. Am not a union man because I came to ——— from the West and have not been at my trade for two years. I would like to join the union, but am afraid I will not pass the examination, as I have not studied the latest methods. Kindly give me your advice as to what to do.

How foolish! Here is a man who claims to have five years' experience, yet because he "has not had any trouble," needs no Handbook, or, presumably, projection department. Now he wants to join the union, but he has not "kept up" with improvements in equipment, having been out of the operating game for two years. My brother, if you had studied and secured a good grounding in the theory of your profession, having five years' practical experience to join with that theory, you would need fear no examination, regardless of whether you are up to date on improvements or not. I have not operated for more than six years, yet I will undertake to appear before any examining board in the United States and pass any proper examination they want to put up. Why? Simply because I have had practical experience and I HAVE, IN ADDITION TO THAT, THE THEORY, therefore, if any examining board can stick Yours Truly, they are welcome to the job. And that is not intended as a brag, but just to point the argument that the man who has BOTH the THEORY and PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE need have no fear, but neither one alone is dependable.

My advice to you is to get a set of the Hawkins Electrical Guide, and as soon as it comes out, a copy of my new Handbook, and study the theoretical end of your profession. You may find that projection that would pass muster two years ago will have a good deal of trouble in "getting by" now

Up-to-Date Exhibitor.

Recently by invitation I visited the Lyceum theater, Monticello, N. Y., and was entertained at the home of its proprietor, Mr. L. F. Guimond, and his charming Better Half, both of whom are pastmasters at the art of making big welcome medicine for the stranger within their gate, "Behind the Cobble Wall." In fact, the entertainment reached a point (about 2 A. M., I think it was) when Friend Guimond started to explain some family relationship affairs and mentioned a step-father-in-law, whereupon, without waiting for him to ask if I would have another Fin Giz I retired to the depths of the hay, and slept the sleep of utter innocence.

Guimond is a strictly up-to-date exhibitor. His theater sits back fully fifty, if not seventy-five feet from the street, and at the street line is an elaborate and beautiful cobble-stone wall, which fronts both the theater and residence—the latter having been erected away back somewhere in the 1700's. (A. D., not B. C., you understand.) This cobble wall is used by Brother Guimond as an advertising phrase.

The piano is presided over by Mr. Morris Daniels, who has some note as composer of music, and who uses neither music nor piano light. He sits in the dark and accompanies the pictures perfectly. I have, as you know, always insisted on a low c. p. lamp at the piano, but Daniels goes me one better by reducing the "low c. p." to nothing at all. Afterwards Mr. Daniels entertained us at the piano in Mr. Guimond's home, and I can testify to the fact that he is an artist.

Projection is in charge of Floyd L. Brown, and is indeed excellent. Brother Brown has his operating room and work room in perfect order. Both are scrupulously clean and carpeted with linoleum. The operating room walls are painted dead black all over, as they should be, and the light is a tribute to three elements: (a) the Brush 60 volt plant, which grinds away down in the basement all by its lonesome; (b) to Mr. Guimond, who was far-sighted enough to put in such equipment in a town of 2,000, and (c) to Operator Brown, who knows how to handle the current to get the splendid result he does. Oh yes, I must not forget that Guimond and Brown have followed the department and Handbook closely, and have worked hard to get their lens system so that it delivers results par excellent. The light on the screen is white and brilliant. It is all that could be desired, and the projection light and sign lights together only cost, via the Brush plant route, 12 CENTS PER HOUR, the consumption being 50 to 55 amperes. Brown uses resistance, in four steps, in series with his arc, the actual voltage registered by the voltmeter being close to 70, and the method of wiring is unique and interesting. Mr. Brown promised to supply us with wiring diagram and description later. The picture is 16 feet wide.

And now here is a tip for other small town exhibitors: Guimond planned the building, which is of concrete, and below, in a commodious semi-basement, are six high class bowling alleys and six pool and billiard tables. As already said, the town is only 2,000, and will not support a six-day-a-week, high-class program, so Friend Guimond has comfortable folding wooden chairs fastened together in threes, and one night a week these chairs are removed and the place is given over to the local militia company for drill, and on another night the basket ball team rents the auditorium, which just makes a full-sized court. Of course this entails a flat floor, but the bottom of the picture is about two feet above the stage floor (yes, there is a full size, excellent stage), or about eight feet above the floor, so it is not so bad, and the extra income derived from rental to the ball teams and militia "helps out." The other four nights Paramount program holds forth. The lobby is lined with neatly-framed pictures of actors and actresses. There is a fully-equipped soda fountain also, but that did not pay.

The Abuse of Film.

Recently a certain operator sent in a bunch of faults cut out of a certain film. Following my usual procedure in such matters I sent the film faults, together with a letter, to the general manager of the corporation handling the exchange. Now, it so happened that there was only one theater in this particular town, therefore when the matter was taken up with the exchange manager by the general manager of the corporation he instantly knew who it was who had sent in the report, and began to look things up. A copy of my letter to the general manager had been sent him, and he wrote a very courteous letter, in the course of which the following paragraph occurred: "It has just been brought to my attention that this same operator has returned a new film, entitled 'Stolen Voice,' literally loaded with oil. This film was thoroughly inspected and cleaned before leaving this office, and by looking up the release date you will note that the film is very new, which does not show that this particular operator is very careful with his machine."

Now while we are endeavoring to secure the rectification of exchange abuses, let us not forget that he who throws stones should not reside in a house made of crystal. There is no manner of doubt but that many exchange managers send out films in wretched condition. When they are "caught with the goods" on this proposition they invariably have some excuse, which, when it is all summed up, really is no excuse at all, because there is not and cannot possibly be, except in rare cases of emergency, any earthly excuse for the sending out of film in other than good mechanical condition. The fact that there is not time after a film comes in to inspect and repair it before sending it to another theater is no excuse, because you cannot, on such grounds, justify committing an outrage on an innocent audience, to say nothing of the operator who must run the film. But, looking on the other side of the proposition, we cannot find any possible excuse for theater managers who commit the most damnable imaginable crime against films by ordering their operators to "speed up," thus not only putting an undue and highly injurious strain on their projection apparatus, and committing an unpardonable sin against their audiences, but also putting an undue strain on the sprocket holes of the film, which may be sufficient to be highly injurious and forever after ruin the perfect performance of the film if the tension of the projector happens to be just a little too heavy, and in addition to all this perpetrates what amounts to a swindle against their audience by presenting to it a jumping jack performance, instead of the properly projected picture which they have paid to see. Moreover the theater manager is responsible for other, and even more serious, abuse when he fails or refuses to provide suitable repairs for his projection machine, and thus compels his operator to run the films in a machine with hooked sprocket teeth, which will strain or tear the perforations, and with a worn intermittent movement which causes the picture on the screen to jump, instead of being projected steadily and smoothly.

The work of the film producer is, however, not only at the mercy of the careless, or over penurious exchange manager, and his twin brother, the overspeeding theater manager, but also must run the gamut of the careless operator or indifferent operator, who, instead of having a small squirt can and putting a single drop of oil on a projection machine bearing (one drop of oil is, as I have pointed out hundreds of times, ample and abundant for any bearing on a projection machine), has an oil can with a snout apparently designed to lubricate a farmer's mowing machine, or a locomotive, and placing that big oil can snout, with a half pint or so of oil behind it, in or near the oil hole he squirts oil over about everything in sight, with result that a pool of oil collects at the base of the mechanism, and is smeared on the film from one end to the other. This is one of the things for which there is absolutely no excuse.. IF I HAD MY WAY ABOUT IT I WOULD TAKE THE OPERATOR WHO SMEARS FILM WITH OIL BY THE NAPE OF THE NECK AND RUB HIS NOSE OVER HIS OIL-PLASTERED MACHINE UNTIL FOR ONCE IN HIS LIFE HE GOT ENOUGH OIL. If not big enough to do it myself I would cheerfully pay for help. The operator gets blamed for many things for which he is not responsible, but he absolutely IS responsible for oil smeared films, and, as I have said before, there is no valid excuse for it. It is the result of crass stupidity, infernal laziness, rank carelessness, or, pardon the language, don't-care-a-damnedness. I believe that, as a general proposition, operators keep their machines in as good repair and adjustment as their knowledge and their managers' willingness to purchase repair parts will permit. There are, unfortunately, many operators who have no adequate knowledge of their profession, but this, I think, is quite largely due to the managers themselves, who would like to have good service in their operating rooms but are either unable or unwilling to pay for it. You know if every locomotive engineer in the United States quit tomorrow there are plenty of men who would climb into the cabs and try to run those engines, and be glad of a chance to do it for half the money the locomotive engineer gets, but I don't think any sane man would expect that cheap labor to be as efficient as the present corps of engineers. Cheap labor is cheap labor the world over, and it is never, so far as my observation has gone, efficient labor. You cannot get something for nothing in this vale of sin, sorrow and tears.

Toronto Local Forging Ahead.

From Toronto, Canada, comes the following:

> I want to thank you and the other brothers for the work you have done in connection with the light ray articles, which I am studying with much interest.
>
> I am pleased to report that there are two circumstances which now make membership in the Toronto local far more desirable, and more pleasant and profitable than in the past. One of these circumstances is the removal of the prohibition regarding writing to the department on matters pertaining to our profession; the other is the unity now in evidence in Toronto local 173 which is in marked contrast to the condition of affairs in the past. With the men all pulling shoulder to shoulder, and "quality before quantity" as a prominent motto, the slide "Union Operator" will surely become something more than a name when it refers to members of Local 173.

I am indeed hugely pleased to have this favorable report. I have, in the past, been grievously disappointed in reports from Toronto. Frankly, so far as I have been able to discover, nine-tenths of the trouble was due directly, wholly and entirely to that most despicable, damnable thing, "union politics," an article which in time will weaken, if not entirely disrupt any organization. But I have faith to believe the Toronto men are, at bottom, of the right sort, and there is no one who more heartily welcomes the news that the local is on the up-grade than does the editor of this department. Keep pulling "shoulder to shoulder" my brothers, and the editor of this department is "wid ye" to a hard boiled finish.

New Company.

In the August 1, 1914, issue, I described the Cameron Projection Machine, which was then presumed to be ready for the market, but owing to financial difficulties, the whole thing came very near going up in smoke. At last, however, Mr. H. B. Coles, well known to the fraternity through his connection with the Nicholas Power Company, and later with the Precision Machine Company, organized a company known as the Coles Picture Machine Corporation, which has reached a working basis, opened offices at 120 West 41st street, New York City, and proposes to place the Cameron machine, which has been, to some extent, remodeled, and made more effective, on the market.

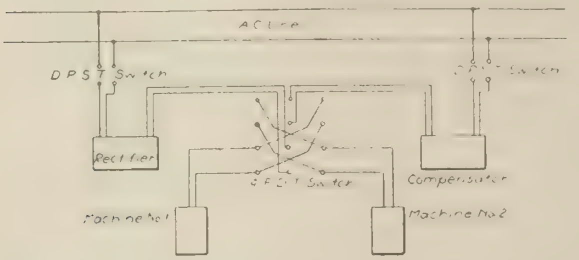
Mr. Coles needs no introduction. The machine is, I believe, basicly a good one. Its intermittent is, as those who can dig up the issue of August 1, 1914, will find, decidedly novel, but, nevertheless, I think it will be found to be effective.

Later on we will describe, and probably illustrate the remodeled machine for the benefit of our readers.

He Does Not Agree.

F. H. Geer, Colonial theater, Upland, California, sends in the following:

> The original of the enclosed article, clipped from the "Electrical Review and Western Electrician," appeared in the projection department of a certain motion picture publication in April this year. It has been given so much attention by electrical journals as a "motion picture problem solved" that I am going to set forth my experience with it, at the risk of being accused of experimenting first and thinking afterwards. It may be well to first remember that with D. C. it is common practice to use a cored carbon above, a somewhat smaller, solid carbon below and a three-wing shutter, whereas with A. C. two-cored carbons of equal size and a two-wing shutter is the thing. When using a three-wing shutter with A. C. there is a synchronous speed which produces flashing. The article in question refers to "operator," not operators. One minute before the end of the reel on machine No. 1, which is working on a rectifier, we have a clean picture. We change over to the compensator and the arc instantly begins not to "sputter" but to flutter around like a caged wild bird. Bing! Our clean picture is changed to a dirty brown and we have the synchronism flashes. But we "don't need to know anything about electricity," so we do not know what is the matter, but anyway there is only one minute to settle the D. C. arc on machine No. 2, so we cannot delay if we are going to bring it into action on time. When the time comes to change from No. 2 to the compensator, we repeat our experience, and as No. 1 comes on we find that the A. C. has left the D. C. crater all ragged, and we have a D. C. arc with fluttering light on the screen, which requires several minutes to get straightened out. I defy any operator to make use of this scheme "without its being detected by the audience,' if the audience in question knows anything at all about good projection. Wire your lamps in multiple and the same time and energy expended in perfecting "stealing the current" will bring infinitely better results. Methinks that a certain Mr. A's machinist operators will find that they have need of a little electrical knowledge if their guiding star makes a practice of handing down predigested electrical stunts such as this.



As to the article in the "Electrical Review and Western Electrician," why that distinguished publication has simply gone off half-cocked on something it don't understand. The scheme proposes that about one minute before the end of the reel on machine No. 1 is reached the operator throw the four-pole, double-throw switch to the right, starting the arc on machine No. 2 through the rectifier, while machine No. 1 is transferred to the alternating current circuit through the compensator, and the reel completed in this manner. This is supposed to give the carbons on No. 2 time to come up to their proper brilliancy, ready for the beginning of the second reel. The process is repeated toward the end of the second reel on machine No. 2, or the procedure may be reversed if desired.

All of which is quite true, but the only trouble is, as Brother Geer has pointed out, it don't work out in practice. That man does not live who can transfer an alternating current arc to a direct current arc, or vice versa while the picture is on the screen and not have the audience detect it, and moreover ninety-nine times out of every hundred it will be detected good and plenty. Of course, the plan will work after a fashion, but you can take it from me, it won't work with any degree of satisfaction to the man who wants to put on good results. Brother Geer is, in my judgment, perfectly right. I have never seen the thing in actual practice myself, but it does not take any prophet or son of a prophet to tell what will happen when the switch-over is made. As to the "Mr. A." in question, he has retired to the oblivion from whence he came, so far as the handing out of authoritative dope be concerned, but some of that he did hand out will, I think, long remain a classic of its kind—yes, of its kind.

New Theater.

Bert Meester, Hobart, Indiana, sends in answer to Question No. 102 and says:

> G. D. Bullock claims to have a take-up which produces the same tension throughout the run; he also claims he does not need an adjustable speed motor with this take-up, as he can vary the speed of the machine with his device. We have started to erect a modern, up-to-date picture theater. The machines are the latest model Simplex projectors. Vincent R. Boyd, under whom I am serving an apprenticeship, is to be in charge of projection, and Mr. Coons will be the manager.

Suppose you come across with the dope on that take-up, Brother Bullock, and don't be so stingy. As to the new theater, we wish it all sorts of success. Brother Meester is taking the right course in serving an apprenticeship, and in the first part of his letter, which I have not quoted, he says: "With regard to question 102, I don't know so much about optics, but I want to learn, and am perfectly willing to study and pay for information." That is the kind of man who will, or at least ought to, succeed. He not only realizes his lack of knowledge on certain subjects, but is willing to make the effort necessary to remedy the deficiency.

Improvements on Power's Speed Controller.

The Nicholas Power Company has made a number of improvements on its speed controller, as follows:

On the old style speed controller the driving disc was connected to the motor shaft; the motor shaft acting as driver for the speed controller. This was changed on the new style speed controller by connecting the friction pulley with the motor shaft, the result being that the friction pulley now acts as driver for the speed controller. The purpose of this change was to prevent the leather disc from wearing flat. Should there be too great a friction on the friction pulley the pulley will revolve, regardless of this fact, thus preventing the wear of a flat surface on same. Having the friction pulley connected to the motor shaft does away with the end thrust on the motor bearing, allowing the motor to run free. On the present speed controller the friction pulley shaft is connected to the motor by a universal coupling for the purpose of keeping the motor steady and preventing any give from which the shaft could run from side to side.

Non-oiling bearings have been placed at each end of the friction pulley shaft to eliminate any possibility of the shaft running tight.

The friction pulley on the new style speed controller is made up of two pieces of the best quality of chrome leather on the outside and with a disc of specially prepared sole leather in the center. This combination has been found satisfactory after many tests, inasmuch as there is but little wear on the friction pulley, while at the same time it has a firm grip on the driving disc.

The spring tension on the old style speed controller is replaced by a screw adjustment for the purpose of regulating the tension on the driving disc.

The Nicholas Power speed controller always was a good device, but, of course, like all products of the human brain, it could not be expected it would be evolved as a perfect mechanism, not susceptible to improvement. The thing I like about the projector manufacturers is that they are, almost without exception, alive to the necessity for improvement in their apparatus, and let me say that the Nicholas Power Company is a shining example in this respect. The improvement in the speed controller are all excellent, and the device is now probably as nearly perfect as it is possible to make it.

What's the Use?

Ray Miller, Anderson, Indiana, says:

> Enclosed find piece of film taken from one of our today's fourteen day old reels. I think if exchanges would use a little more and better cement and a little more time, the operator would not have to use a ten-penny-nail cement. In several cases I have found my reels in this condition.

The piece of film contained a splice open half way across its width, and about six inches of the track was entirely gone on one side—bad enough surely. But what is the use of sending me this sample without telling me what exchange it came from, what day the reel was received, and the name of the film? If that is done I can do something really worth while. I can and will send the fault to the headquarters of the company controlling that exchange, and thus get action which will have some effect; but to merely send in film faults without any identification does not do much if any good.

Difficult to Answer.

A. E. Bahrman, Rochester, New York, says:

> Am projecting a 7-foot picture at 25 feet to try out motion pictures for quality, using 14 amperes. How many amperes should be used to correspond to the average motion picture theater in judging density? Am I too low?

In my opinion it would be extremely difficult to answer this particular question accurately. Modern practice in the higher class theaters is to use from .2 to as much as .4 of an ampere of current (D.C.) for each square foot of surface, which in your case would not mean more than 7 amperes for the lowest figure and 14 for the high—say 10 for an average. But so much depends on the proper setting of the carbons, the size of the carbon, the kind of carbon, the condition of the equipment and the angle of the lamp that I don't believe you could base the proposition on amperage with any degree of correctness. For 10 amperes you should not use, I think, more than a ⅝-inch upper and a ¼-inch lower carbon, the lower being preferably solid, though with some makes of carbon you might get as good or even better results from ½-inch and ⅜-inch. The only way to determine that point would be to try it out and see.

I would suggest, in the absence of any really scientific basis for a proposition of this kind, you will do better to, using the same kind of screen some theater you are acquainted with is using, adjust your amperage so that the projection on your screen and the theater screen looks, as nearly as you can judge, equally brilliant, being sure that the illumination of the room is the same in both cases. This would be crude and unsatisfactory, however, and if some of our correspondents can suggest a really correct answer to Friend Bahrman's question I shall be glad to hear from them.

Inspection.

Los Angeles, California, says:

In August 14th issue, in an article on the "Feaster Film Feed," you say: "Produces a better show when the Feaster is used, because damage to film is far less." In five years' experience I have found it to be absolutely necessary to inspect films, no matter whether first run or junk, after every trip or every other trip through the projector. This is true of all bands of film, including the V-L-S-E. We ran all the twelve episodes of Pathe's "Who Pays?" and every single three reels of the episode had to be inspected and put together before being put in the machine. The patches (there were an average of 475 to 500 to each three reels) did not have to be pulled apart—they came apart on the rewinder, and to all appearance had hardly been cemented at all. They were first run too. The splices were scraped for about 1/16 of an inch and lapped over fully ¼ of an inch, and we made about 45 or 50 new splices in every set of three reels. A certain topical weekly is put together in the same way, and we are compelled to put in an hour or so before the show, at every change, in making splices in this stuff; also we have some come in with five or six sprocket holes out on one side, and have had a patch fully two inches long. How can an inspector miss such a thing—and in first run too? The V-L-S-E put their films together very well, as a general thing, but the splices break out at the corners, and unless you want to take chances you had better make them over again. The Essanay put their films together better than any of the licensed manufacturers, and they stay together too. Why not advise the Lubin, Vitagraph and Selig to get some pointers from them? These are some of the reasons why the Feaster cannot be used by conscientious operators, until the manufacturers get busy and keep the number of patches down to at least six in an untinted reel, and not more than a patch for every change of color in a tinted reel. (I do not understand what you are driving at my brother. The Feaster Film Feed does not prevent you from inspecting the film and making repairs the same as you would with the ordinary upper magazine. What is the idea anyhow? I cannot see that the Feaster has anything to do with this proposition one way or the other except that you propose inspecting at about every rewinding, which is, I think, entirely unnecessary.—Ed.) And now let me say something with regard to your persistent comment on the operator who never looks at the screen. It takes from seven to ten minutes to properly make two or three patches, or probably a dozen or two. During this time the operator is supposed to keep a perfect light on the screen, possibly using old lamps having no adjustments, and cheap carbons, keep on schedule to the second, and do a few other things besides inspecting film. How do you suppose an operator is going to keep his eyes glued to the screen when doing all this? (Yes, Mr. Manager, how DO you expect it?—Ed.) You know that out here one man runs the operating room in most theaters, and handles two machines. We run thirteen hours a day, and are inspecting film about two-thirds of the time. Would probably get eight or ten dollars a week for doing the same amount of work at an exchange, and then someone comes in the theater, sees a slight shadow on the screen and says: "Gee! What a rotten operator!" He then forwards the report to the projection department and we get roasted. Let those fellows come up in the operating room first and look at the equipment, watch the operator run the show, and do his inspecting, etc., etc., etc., and then send in the report, and you will get the real meat of the nut. With regard to the films, if any of the manufacturers want proof of my statements I think we can dig him out a few hundred of his particular brand of patches. We use approximately a full bottle of cement every week on patch work. Thirteen dollars a year for cement! And mostly first run too. Why don't all the operators get together and tell the producers what they want in the way of patches, and find out why it is necessary to put two, three or five patches in the middle of a scene. Now don't mistake what I have said as a knock on the Feaster. It is not meant as such. I am only trying to show the necessity for producers to get busy and splice their films properly. In issue of August 28th, with regard to article on punching films, we use no punch marks, but memorize the end of every reel, and when a certain subject makes a certain move we know it is time to get busy on the other machine, and any number of reels can be memorized after one trip through the machine. (You must have some memorizer, Los Angeles.—Ed.) Operator Berner's plan is very good, but it is not always, in fact very seldom, practical for the producer to put a title at the end and beginning of every reel. (I would like to know why? I don't at all agree with you.—Ed.) The best method I have found is the above mentioned, and a cue sheet is made for the relief or second trick operator by writing down the subjects' movements at the end of every reel, so that he knows just where to change over. In issue of September 4th, Operator Mitchell's plan is surely the best way of patching, as such splices will not break out at the corners, due to double thickness of film at that point, whereas when the sprocket hole is cut, the cement weakens the film at that point and it invariably breaks at the corners. Here is a patch we have found to hold better, and last longer than any other with which we have had experience. (This patch was supposed to have been enclosed, but if it was it got lost. As I understand it the brother makes his patch by cutting the film between sprocket holes and then rounding off the sharp corners just a little.—Ed.) Our patches are made with Edison cement which sticks N. I. or inflammable equally well. Have heard lots of reports to the contrary, but have never had this cement fail to stick N. I. Well, I have a Handbook, and read it as well as the department. Needless to say get much good from both, and I want one of your new ones as soon as they come out.

Sorry you would not let me use your name, Los Angeles. I am publishing most of your complaints on manufacturers' patches because I think they are fully justified. Manufacturers' assembly departments are altogether too careless, and it is a notorious fact that nearly all manufacturers' splices are unreliable. I am glad to have the good report on the Essanay. Have had a great many complaints about the factory patches of nearly all the producers. Have had the matter up with them time and again, but they seem to be so busy making money that you cannot get them to attend to such (in their estimation) trifles. I think it is entirely practical for the producer of multiple reels to put a sub-title at the end and beginning of each reel if he wants to. In other words, I think Brother Berner's plan is entirely practical, and one which ought to be adopted. As to your plan of memorizing ends of reels, well, old boy, maybe you can but I could not, and what is more I would not undertake that kind of proposition. There is enough to do without burdening your memory with the ending of half a dozen reels every day; also your argument, my brother, defeats itself at this point, because in order to catch the particular move warning you to change over, you certainly would have to be watching the screen pretty closely, and you have just told us that is exactly what you cannot do. As to failure to watch the screen on account of being compelled to make patches and do half a dozen other things, why I know what you say is absolutely true. I also know perfectly well that the operator has absolutely no business in the world doing these things. As I have said time and time again, when the picture is running the place for the operator is right there beside his machine. Well, you say you have to do it, or get fired. Yes, that probably is true, but, nevertheless, every day that operators go on doing these things that they are not paid to do, and taking chances with their projection, makes it just that much harder to break away from the practice. It is a difficult question I know, but this department can only take one position on this kind of thing and that is to roast poor projection whenever and wherever we find it. It is not our fault that managers demand outrageous things of the operator, nor is it our fault that managers are so short-sighted and apparently mentally incapacitated that they cannot understand the simple proposition that the income of their house largely depends on the excellence of projection, and that no operator can deliver high class results when he is doing anything else except attend to his projection. Yes, your letter is very long, Los Angeles, but also it is interesting. This department is doing everything it can to educate the operator in the technical end of his profession, and to educate the manager to the necessity for high class work in the operating room. But that, my brother, is about as far as we can go in the matter. It is no pleasure to "roast" an operator, when we are convinced that the fault really lies as much or more with the manager than it does with the operator. But what are we going to do? Sit down, keep our mouth shut and let these abuses continue without comment? Not on your life, Los Angeles—not as long as your Uncle Dudley is on the job. As to inspecting film more than once a day, why I cannot agree with you. If your machine is in proper adjustment and repair one good inspection should be enough.

Fine Work.

William F. Wood Chicago, Illinois, writes:

Something like two years ago I sent you several sample slides I made myself. At that time you, through the columns of the department, pronounced them to be very beautiful, etc. I am now sending you by parcel post four more, and would like to ask if I have improved. The dope I use for coating is my own mixture, and it is some mixture too.

And the night shall be filled with music
The cares that infest the day,
Shall fold their tents like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away.
Longfellow
Welcome

Yes, Brother Wood, you have improved. Those slides are really so classy that I showed them all around the office, with my chest swelled out considerably, calling attention to the grade of work pulled off by an operator. In some of the slides Friend Wood uses colored gelatine over a portion of the design. In the one published he used a dark green over the little scroll at the left of "Welcome," and yellow over the parallel lines below, the rest being clear white. I was obliged to remove the gelatine in order to get a decent photograph of the entire slide.

School of Photography at Syracuse University.

J. B. S., Bessemer, Ala., inquires as follows about the course in Cinematography at Syracuse University:

> I would thank you if you would give me through your department your opinion of the course in Photography of the University of which Professor Wahl is in charge. I am contemplating taking this course next year, and before I make arrangements to do so, I wish to know the standing of the school. I would also appreciate it if you would tell me your opinion of the work as a profession and what the chances would be of succeeding after I had a practical education along that line.
>
> I understand the course at the above school includes motion picture work and would be pleased to know whether I would be likely to be able to enter some studio as an apprentice after I had finished the course. I have been doing a good deal of elementary photography and have had a year in Physics, which includes optics and lens work in a small way, and have a liking for the work and if in your opinion there is a better school for the above work I would be thankful if you will recommend it to me.

The editor of this department was afforded the pleasure of a visit to the Photographic Department of Syracuse University at Syracuse, New York, only a few days ago.

Prof. E. J. Wahl, F. R. P. S., the able head of this department and a distinguished authority on photography, said that it was not the intention of that department to undertake to train students to become professional cinematographers.

The primary cause for the establishment of such a course, was to supplement the education of students in the engineering branches, so as to enable them to apply intelligently and scientifically the principles of the art of photography in any way that would assist and develop the manifold engineering problems which they might encounter.

Of the eighteen graduates of this course in the past two years, the professor said that he knew of only one of the eighteen who was following the profession of cinematography exclusively.

The department owns two motion picture cameras, a printer, projector and the necessary dark room equipment. Motion picture work is confined to the elementary principles of negative and positive making with practical exercises, the projection of pictures and construction of projectors.

No attempt is made to give instruction in practical motion picture studio conditions such as would be met in professional work.

He stated that he had been inundated with requests from students who wished to take a special course in cinematography, but under the present limited facilities of the department he had refused them all. It is practically impossible for the average student to master the requisite subjects for a thorough training in photography unless he has a good foundation to start on and a willingness to devote himself for at least two years to mastering the elementary principles of the art.

The manifold applications of Photography to scientific, artistic and commercial purposes, has led Syracuse University to establish a Department of Photography, giving instruction in all its branches.

Much has been accomplished in this field, but the result of a combination of the scientific side of Photography with adequate instruction in art lines has not heretofore been considered, and it is this combination which the University now offers. The instruction will be eminently practical and will at the same time give theoretical explanations of every process, with the essential principles of composition.

The aim of the department is to provide for students a thorough grounding in the optics and chemistry of photographic processes; a practical course dealing with every department of Photography; the art-training necessary for the utilization of Photography for expressing artistic feeling, and advanced or specialized courses to enable students to take positions as studio operators, photo-chemists and investigators.

Candidates for admission to the course in Photography are required to show by examination or by certificate that they have studied with satisfactory proficiency, the following subjects, viz.: English Grammar, Geography, Arithmetic, American History, together with two years of High School work, or give satisfactory proof that they are suitable for admission.

COURSE OF STUDY.

FIRST YEAR.

General Optics.—Reflection, refraction, dispersion and diffraction of light. Elementary Photometry. Light standards.

Photographic Optics.—Optical Glass; the general principals of lens construction; lens aberrations; choice and use of lenses for special work.

Exposure.—The illumination of the subject. The factors controlling exposure.

Sensitive Materials.—Plates and films, ordinary and color-sensitive. Color filters.

Development.—The chemistry of developers and development. Time, thermo and tank development.

Printing.—Silver printing; development processes. Platinum.

Transparency Making.—Lantern slides and projection.

Art.—Elementary composition.

Chemistry.—A course of lectures and recitations on the elementary principles of chemistry. One exercise a week is devoted by the student to laboratory work.

SECOND YEAR.

Studio Work.—General principles of lighting by day and artificial light; groups, copying of black and white and colored objects. Retouching the negative.

Printing.—Printing in iron salts; carbon, gum bichromate oil and bromoil.

Color Photography.—The spectroscope; the science of color and photographic reproduction of the same by the additive and subtractive processes.

Photomicrography.—The microscope, principles of construction and use; high and low power photomicrography.

Elementary Emulsion Making.—Negative and positive processes; printing-out emulsions.

Enlarging and Reducing.—Principles and practice of the two methods.

Motion Picture Work.—The elementary principles of negative and positive making, with practical exercises. The projection of pictures, and the construction of projectors.

Art.—Advanced composition.

Chemistry.—Qualitative and quantitative analysis

The Department is located in a new building expressly constructed for it, and which is equipped with the latest apparatus, studios, darkrooms, etc., but students will be expected to provide such sensitive material as may be considered necessary for carrying out ordinary practical work.

Research Work.—Students who are sufficiently advanced will be assigned a problem for investigation, occupying one or more semesters. Students who have satisfactorily passed the ordinary course may elect special subjects for further study.

It would probably be of much greater advantage to the average camera aspirant, especially those who cannot afford the time and money, to spend those two years in a studio working up through practical experience at even the most meager salary than to spend two years in school and then find that he would have to practically repeat his course again in a studio under commercial conditions.

This, of course, is not meant to deter the man who can afford to take such a training; for, undoubtedly, the man with the thorough technical and scientific foundation will, in the end, far outstrip the man who has only the rule o' thumb training.

Interested parties can obtain further particulars concerning the course in photography at Syracuse by writing to Prof. E. J. Wahl, F. R. P. S., Dept. of Photography, Syracuse University, Syracuse, New York, but do not write unless you feel that you can devote at least two years to obtaining a thorough training in the science of photography.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

THE WALL BETWEEN (Lubin), Nov. 15.—It takes but three people o tell the story of this one-reel drama, and William E. Parsons, L. C. Shumway and Velma Whitman accomplish this very creditably. Paul M. Powell, who wrote and directed the picture, has conceived a tragic ale of life in the West, and transferred it to the screen in an effective manner.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 91, 1915 (Selig), Nov. 15.—Society riders of San Francisco organize a Cavalry Troop; fatal factory fire in Brooklyn; school fire drill; Washington police instructed in the care of the injured; Chicago Equestrian Association on a ride; railroad accident at Los Angeles; General Carranza and American diplomats, Mexico; Mexican refugees at Douglas, Ariz.; crippled children at flower show, Chicago; Harvard-Princeton football game, and Italian soldiers at the front, constitute the news items of this number.

SONNY JIM AND THE GREAT AMERICAN GAME (Vitagraph), Nov. 15.—In this one-reel comedy, Bobby Connelly proves that he is a genuine "chip of the old block," in his love of a game of baseball. Elaine Sterne has conceived a human and humorous vehicle to illustrate Sonny's devotion to the Great American Game, and Bobby Connelly's winning personality and acting ability do the rest. Tefft Johnson and Mabel Kelly are members of the cast.

A BARGAIN IN BRIDES (Kalem), Nov. 16.—The burlesque comedy situations in this one-reel photoplay may safely be relied upon to perform their mission in life. The supply of fun is a generous one, the efforts of Ethel Teare, Bud Duncan, Rube Miller and Julia Rand contributing largely to this result.

AN ACCIDENT POLICY (Lubin), Nov. 16.—Edwin McKim is the author and producer of this one-reel comedy. His work is an amusing specimen of broad farce, and well suited to the comic methods of D. L. Donn, Eleanor Blanchard, Carrie Reynolds, John J. Dolson and George Egan.

THE TENDERFOOT'S TRIUMPH (Selig), Nov. 16.—Tom Mix is the tenderfoot of this one-reel comedy, and proves conclusively that he can portray something else besides cowboys. The scenario was written by Cornelius Shea and is good material for Mr. Mix and his support, which includes Hazel Daly, Sid Jordan and Pat Chrisman.

HIS WIFE'S SWEETHEART (Edison), Nov. 17.—A lively little comedy in one reel, J. E. Hungerford has taken on old subject and given several new turns to the plot. Raymond McKee contributes one of his amusing grotesque comedy impersonations and Jean Dumar is happily cast as his wife. Bob Walker, Grace Williams and John Sturgeon render valuable service.

ANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL, NO. 2 (Essanay), Nov. 17.—The news items in this number are strictly up to date and, as presented by the clever pencil of Wallace A. Carlson, also strictly humorous. Scenes in the Canadian Rockies are on the same reel.

COUNT 'EM (Vitagraph), Nov. 17.—The original title of this one-reel farce was "The Counts," but it is just as funny with either name. Ralph Ince wrote and produced it, and Anita Stewart and Earle Williams have the leading roles. This is a strong combination. Albert Roccardi and the bunch of counts score heavily also.

THE EYES OF THE SOUL (Biograph), Nov. 18.—The incidents of this one-reel drama are very emotional, a blind girl being the principal part. The story is an appealing one and Claire McDowell is sympathetic and natural as the blind heroine. Jose Ruben is earnest and effective in the opposite role.

SNAKEVILLE'S EUGENIC MARRIAGE (Essanay), Nov. 18.—Margaret Joslin, Victor Potel, Robert McKenzie and Bell Mitchell realize the comic possibilities of this one-reel farce to the fullest extent. The subject is amusing as well as timely, thanks to the astonishing tests made by the health officer, Dr. McSwat.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 92, 1915 (Selig), Nov. 18.—The list include Italian troops at the front; Roebling fire, Trenton, N. J.; Washington-California football game, Berkeley, Cal.; hunting season opens, Newark, N. J.; start of the Inter-Scholastic cross-country race; fire at San Francisco, and using moving pictures in rogue's gallery, Chicago.

A MOTORCYCLE ELOPEMENT (Vitagraph), Nov. 18.—The material in this one-reel comedy is novel and decidedly amusing. The title gives a good idea of the plot, and the author has made the most of his opportunities. Jewel Hunt, Arthur Cozine and Bruce Montague justify their positions in the cast.

TOO MUCH TURKEY (Essanay), Nov. 19.—The comic possibilities of this one-reel comedy are immense. The idea has done duty in a vaudeville sketch, but is just as laughable on the screen. G. M. Anderson appears in the picture as a light comedian and enters heartily into the fun.

THE VEILED PRIESTESS (No. 4 of "The Ventures of Marguerite"—Kalem), Nov. 19.—Another of Marguerite's surprising adventures occupy the one thousand feet of this reel. Her experience is filled with thrills, an Oriental mystic being the deus ex machina. Marguerite Courtot is supported by Richard Purdon, F. B. Vernoy, Walter McEwen and Anna Reader.

THE DEATH WEB (Lubin), Nov. 19.—The situations and climax of this one-reel drama are admirably expressed by the title. Robert E. Rhinehart wrote the scenario and his conception does not lack entertaining qualities. L. C. Shumway, Lucelle Younge, J. G. Harper, Melvin Mayo, J. A. Morley and Sidney Hayes make up a very good cast.

DIPLOMATIC HENRY (Vitagraph), Nov. 19.—Sidney Drew is Henry of this one-reel comedy and his efforts at diplomacy end in his own discomfiture. O. W. Newman's scenario is amusing and original. Mr. Drew is assisted in the laugh-getting by Mrs. Drew and Florence Natol.

BLACK EAGLE (Edison), Nov. 20.—This one-reel photoplay is a revival of the "popular" drama that flourished in the last decade. There is no dearth of strong motives in the plot, the scenes being laid in the West. The story has been put on the screen with good effect, and the acting reflects credit upon Margaret Prussing, Richard Tucker, Augustus Phillips, Brad Sutton, Louis B. Foley and Florence Stover.

THE GIRL ON THE BRIDGE (Episode No. 54 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), Nov. 20.—A gang of jailbirds measure wits and nerve with Helen, in this one-reel drama, and the girl telegrapher treats them to a number of surprises. Her big stunt is all that the expression implies, and the entire reel moves on fast time. Helen Gibson, Clarence Burton and Franklin Hall do excellent work.

HIS WIFE'S NEW LID (Lubin), Nov. 20.—In writing this one-reel farce, Mark Swan has not clapped the lid on Billie Reeves nor his opportunities for fun-making. On the contrary, there is a lot of clean-cut nonsense in the picture, and the star makes it thoroughly amusing. (Fashion note: Mr. Reeves no longer wears his trousers baggy in the rear.)

General Film Company Specials.

A NIGHT IN THE SHOW (Essanay), Nov. 15.—This two-reel Chaplin release, which is founded on the well-known English Music Hall sketch, "A Night in a Music Hall," permits Charlie Chaplin to revive the character of the man with the jag, and add highly laughable bits of new business to the old situations. Mr. Chaplin also impersonates a "tough" in the gallery. The picture closes with a "hot finish," although every one in the cast is soaked with water from a fire hose.

THE UNDERTOW (Essanay), Nov. 15.—The leading characters in this three-reel drama are underworld types, and the plot shows a young girl's battle against vicious influences. Although offering nothing new in the way of material, the construction of the photoplay has been done with skill, and the production is altogether worthy. Richard C. Travers, June Keith, Harry Dunkenson, John Lorenz and William Burns make up the cast.

THE PITFALL (Kalem), Nov. 15.—Melodrama of the quick-moving, ultra-sensational sort abounds in this four-reel photoplay, written by Howard Irving Young. It deals with the fortunes of a young girl who marries to please her father and finds that her husband runs a gambling house in his own home. Mr. Young has worked his plot out interestingly, and the production is lavish. Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson, Thomas Lingham, Paul C. Hurst and True Boardman act the leading roles with good effect. James W. Horne made the production.

THE VENGEANCE OF RANNAH (Selig), Nov. 15.—Valuable jewels are stolen from a temple in India, and the novel way in which the thief is punished for committing the sacrilege forms the motive of this two-reel drama, written by James Oliver Curwood. The atmosphere of the story is well sustained, and the acting has been intrusted to a competent cast, which includes George Larkin, Leo Pierson, Lafayette McKee and Marion Warner.

THE CHIEF INSPECTOR (Biograph), Nov. 16.—There is plenty of good drama in this two-reel photoplay, dealing with an attempt to defraud the government. The plot is skilfully articulated and the incidents are plausible. The playing of Vera Sisson, Jose Rubin, Charles H. Mailes, G. Raymond Nye, Madge Kirby and Ilean Hume does justice to the theme.

A BIT OF LACE (Essanay), Nov. 16.—The situations in this three-reel drama call for quiet, forceful acting, and the demand is met in a highly satisfactory manner by Darwin Karr, Edna Mayo and Sydney Ainsworth. The subject offers strong dramatic possibilities and has been fashioned into a photoplay without being incumbered by any extraneous characters or incidents. The settings are very effective.

GONE TO THE DOGS (Vitagraph), Nov. 16.—The romance of a gypsy who falls under the spell of a "Painted Woman" and then returns to his gypsy sweetheart and makes her his wife is told in this two-reel photoplay, of which Paul Kester is the author. Scenically and dramatically it is a picture of decided merit, Antonio Moreno, Frankie Mann, Donald Hall, Josephene Earle, Harry Handworth and Nellie Anderson forming a most efficient cast.

THE GAMBLER OF THE WEST (Biograph), Nov. 17.—Owen Davis is the author of the play from which this four-reel screen drama was made. It was a successful melodrama, in its day, vigorous of action and possessed an interesting story. Made into a photoplay, it presents a number of picturesque scenes of frontier and Indian life, which the director has fully utilized. The large cast of characters has been well chosen, the prominent members including Charles Perley, W. J. Butler, Robert Drouet, Charles H. West, Linda Arvidson and Clara T. Bracey.

THE NIGHT OF THE EMBASSY BALL (Kalem), Nov. 17.—Diplomatic intrigue is the foundation of the plot in this two-reel drama, by G. Doty Hobart. No less an exalted personage than a prince is the hero, and the entire story has a Richard Harding Davis air. It can safely be recommended to lovers of modern romance. Guy Coombs' assumption of the prince makes the title gentleman a right good sort. Anna Nilsson, Joseph Baker, Theodore Branch and Martin Strong are capital.

MARGIE OF THE UNDERWORLD (Lubin), Nov. 18.—An excellent example of its class, this two-reel drama opens in a sensational manner and melodramatic incidents are of frequent occurrence. The human note, however, is a strong one, and the excellent acting of Lucille Younge, Madge Philbrick, Melvin Mayo, J. A. Morley and R. H. Gray brings out the best points in the picture.

THE PRINT OF THE NAILS (Selig), Nov. 18.—Modern politics is the subject of this three-reel drama, written by Mrs. Owen Bronson. The author has handled her theme with due regard for the truth, several scenes taking place in a questionable resort. The house is raided as the result of a plot against the heroine. The story is a forcible one, and has been cleverly directed by George Nicholls. Earl Foxe and Vivian Reed head a satisfactory cast.

A CHILD IN JUDGMENT (Edison), Nov. 19.—A three-reel production treating of the perfidious actions of an employer toward his clerk, whose wife he attempts to lead astray during the clerk's absence from the city. The idea of the child in judgment is rather far-fetched, if one should stop to think, but the picture has been developed in such an interesting manner that it holds the attention throughout. Augustus Phillips plays the villain in finished style.

THE RIVER OF ROMANCE (Essanay), Nov. 20.—John Lorenz, Chas. E. Ashley, Elizabeth Tinder and Charles W. Racy have the leading roles in this two-reel drama. The adventures of a young engineer, who starts ont on a railroad survey and runs a line that leads him to his future wife, makes the picture an interesting one. The scenery is picturesque.

HEREDITY (Vitagraph), Nov. 20.—Seymour Galland, the author of this three-reel drama, has handled his subject with intelligence and skill. The result is a powerful photoplay in which inherited criminal tendency furnishes the motive. William Humphrey has given it an excellent production. Carolyn Birch, Katherine Lewis, Rose Tapley, Thomas Mills, William Humphrey and Denton Vane are the leaders in a lengthy and capable cast.

Fox Film Corporation.

A WOMAN'S PAST (Fox), Nov. 15.—Nance O'Neil gives an intense performance in the emotional role of the wronged woman in this five-part melodrama, produced under the direction of Frank Powell. The story carried through the picture is interesting and the trial scene at the climax is strongly presented.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SOMETHING IN HER EYE (Novelty), Nov. 8.—An amusing situation arises in this comedy when the girl's father arrives from the West and her various suitors also arriving on the scene with flowers, candy and all sorts of nice things, take to their heels upon hearing that "papa" is a crack shot. The formidable parent proves to be in a conciliatory mood, however, and gives them a trial at fist fighting to see who is most deserving of his daughter.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 46, 1915, Nov. 18).—Interesting items of this issue are, the world's biggest 16-inch gun on its way to Panama, Thos. A. Edison visiting the Garden of Gods, speed kings of the air and water in an interesting race at San Francisco, in which the motor boat wins from the aeroplane, and a number of interesting scenes from the battle front of Europe.

THE HOUSE PARTY Casino), Nov. 21.—Harry Volks is featured in this comedy. It has the advantage of being clean comedy, but the story is slight. The picture has been well produced and is interesting for that reason. The average audience will get a good many laughs out of it.

SPRING ONIONS (Novelty), Nov. 22.—The spring onions of a certain man's garden prove to be such a fine and extensive crop that he overeats and creates great disturbance by the strength of his breath. He is operated on at last as a means of purification. George Derr, comedian, is presented in the leading comedy role. The production has a good deal of originality in its makeup and will be found entertaining.

THE DRUMMER'S TRUNK (Beauty), Nov. 23.—John Steppling, John Sheehan and Carol Holloway appear in this comedy. The latter, a hotel slavey, hides in the traveling man's trunk. She gets a rough trip and he is suspected of white slavery. This is improbable in plot, but quit amusing in its situations.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 11 (Gaumont), Nov. 23.—A half reel in which the Mutual Traveler visits New Haven and Hartford, Conn. Entertaining views are shown in each city. The Yale College buildings and the great punch bowl are shown.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Nov. 23.—A half reel, shown with above. In this number Pa McGinnis buys a Flivver and has some startling adventures. The animated drawings by H. S Palmer are clever.

TAMING A GROUCH (Novelty), Nov. 24.—A good deal of amusemen can be obtained from viewing this comedy. The old grouch is unabl to make his temper behave, and so loses his housekeeper, whom he ha treated shamefully. A ruse planned by the ex-housekeeper and the employment bureau places in the home of the grouch a negro man wh dresses as a woman. The result of his attacks on the negro cause hin dire distress, and he is forced to become subservient to the command of his former housekeeper. Featured in this comedy are William Sloa and Margaret McWade.

THE VILLAINOUS VEGETABLE VENDER (Falstaff), Nov. 25.—Thi is an amusing farce comedy in which the villain and others get som rough handling. The average audience will find it very entertaining.

THE BLUFFERS (American), Nov. 26.—A one-reel comedy number featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. The young couple marry on a $15 salary and borrow a flat to fool their father when he visit them. This is a bright, pleasing offering, with a good comedy punch in it.

A DEAL IN INDIANS (Cub), Nov. 26.—Another of the George Ove comedies that is noticeably commendable. The picture shows how a escaped convict is picked up by Indians, and is overburdened with affection from a squaw. He makes his escape the second time only t be tracked by the Indians to the home of the convict's benefactor. Th affair ends in the final capture of the convict by the authorities.

CUPID BEATS FATHER (Beauty), Nov. 27.—An original comedy, i which two small children give away their sister's plan to elope. Th father holds up the lovers and marches them into the house, where h has made all arrangements for a wedding. Neva Gerber and Fran Borzage play the lovers. The guardian's son who desires her hand, becomes seasick and gives up the chase. Th latter feature furnishes the chief amusement of the number.

FOILING FATHER'S FOES (Falstaff), Nov. 29.—A knockabout comed number, in which the daughter of an editor rigs up numerous traps an devices for punishing angry visitors at her father's office. She make short work of two politicians, showering them with a hose and the dropping them through a trap door into the water beneath. The number is a laughable example of the rougher type of comedy.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN AND THE MERRY WIDOW (Beauty), Nov 23.—Billy's experience with the widow was one of huge mortification Not knowing that the woman whom he had rescued from drowning wa wearing mourning during the absence of a live husband, his attention are treated to a most embarrassing removal from the garden seat b said husband on his return.

SPIDER BARLOW CUTS IN (American), Dec. 3.—This is an excellent one-reel crook story that dissolves itself into a comedy. A full review of the production appears on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

BUCK PARVIN AND THE MOVIES (Mustang), Nov. 13.—The thir of this excellent series of three-reel comedies adapted from Chas. E Van Loan's stories and which are being made at the American Film Company's studios, is entitled "This Is the Life." It compares wel with the previous numbers of the series, and afford Adele Farrington Arthur Acord, Chas. Newton, Lawrence Peyton and others ample opportunities for good work. A full review will be found on another pag of this issue.

THE KEY TO THE PAST (American), Nov. 2.—A two-part production featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen. The story i of a woman and her child who have been cast on the seashore by a shipwreck. They are picked up by a man known to the woman in the past Her memory gone, she is unable to relate what has happened to her i the years during which they have not met. One night the house is struc by lightning and the woman regains her memory. The theme is an ol one, rather too hackneyed for successful repetition.

COULD A MAN DO MORE (Centaur), Nov. 24.—In this three-ree production the story of which was written by Crane Wilbur, who ha also played the leading masculine role, there is rather too obvious a effort made to force the star. The production has been ably directed b R. B. Broadwell, but there is a feeling that the story has been stretche beyond its natural limits. Many fine photographic effects have been obtained, and it must be admitted that the ambitions of the productio have in part been realized. The work of the weakling brother is especially commendable.

THE BABY AND THE BOSS (Thanhouser), Nov. 23.—A two-reel production, built around the recent police games in which New York's police force participated. The police games furnish some very entertaining and informing incidents, including a sham battle, a rookies' drill, fire drill, work by police dogs and the like. The plot is slight but clever. It pictures the way in which The Kidlet prevails upon Boss Hinkey to promote her favorite policeman. The number is fresh and interesting throughout.

STANLEY AND THE SLAVE TRADERS (Centaur), Nov. 25.—A two-reel number of the Stanley series that holds considerable interest. Mona Dark-Feather still holds her own in the role of Ada, who has been captured by a native African tribe who have a white king. THE STRIFE ETERNAL (Mutual Masterpicture), Nov. 25.—This five-reel production was made in England, and features the English actress Blanche Forsythe. Many of the scenes of the picture claim to have been photographed on the very locations where the Wars of the Roses were fought. The picture centers much about the tragic story of Jane Winstead, of whom Edward IV was enamoured, and pursued even after her marriage with Matthew Shore. Some of the scenes of the production cover wide perspectives, and are especially effective. Apparently innumerable numbers of people have been spread over these perspectives and are at other times massed effectively in closer views. The picture is entertaining and valuable as a historical feature.

THE VALLEY FEUD (Mustang), Nov. 26.—A lively two-reel number, with Anna Little, E. Forrest Taylor and George Armstrong in the cast. This tells a story of range warfare and is full of action from start to finish. Herds of cattle and sheep add to the picturesqueness of the scenes and the reality of the story. There is a love affair between a cattleman and the niece of a sheep herder, which results happily after much adventure. The blowing up of the dam, to get water to the cattle, was a good feature. A fine out-door subject.

THE FRIENDS OF THE SEA (Reliance), Nov. 28.—A two-reel drama of the sea coast, the story treats of the rivalry of two friends for the hand of a certain young woman, daughter of a fisherman. The scenes of the picture are all laid among fisherfolk, and are attractive. The story is not an especially strong one, but has the human element strongly enough to make it acceptable to the average audience.

THE SILVER LINING (American), Nov. 29.—A two-reel picture that has a distinct appeal. Charles Newton as the father does an excellent piece of work, and Winnifred Greenwood as his daughter is very charming. Alfred Vosburgh is attractive as the young ranch owner and hero of the play. The butler is then arrested, having shown signs of fear and possible guilt.

THE FORBIDDEN ADVENTURE (Mutual Masterpicture, No. 49), Dec. 2.—A five-reel production made by Chas. Swickard. Louise Glaum and Chas. Ray have the leading roles in a story of an adventure in the Arabian desert, it is presumed. The production is well-directed in spite of the abundance of American cacti exhibited in the backgrounds. North American Film Corporation

He still persists in trying to get the diamond, which is now in the possession of Marmaduke Smythe. The number is made with the usual care and attention to details which has characterized the serial throughout.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE GENTLEMAN FROM INDIANA (Pallas), Nov. 25.—The first of the Pallas pictures is an excellent adaptation of Booth Tarkington's famous novel, with Dustin Farnum giving a forceful portrayal of John Harkless. He is progressing with considerable spirit, when the cruel news arrives that a mistake has been made and that the deceased uncle whose fortune he is enjoying is somebody else's.

A SQUABBLE FOR A SQUAB (Starlight), Nov. 27.—Heinie and Louie strike what appears to be a streak of luck in this picture which, however, later dissolves itself into a pillow fight in a room full of pajama attired school girls. The fact is, Heinie and Louie have been commissioned by her sweetheart to kidnap a girl who has been placed in the school by her irate daddy. The girl escapes without their aid, and in their desperate search amid the sleeping beauties for the right girl they are discovered.

THE PENITENTS (Fine Arts).—A story of religious fanatics in Mexico some two hundred years ago. Some good massed effects and acting, but the story scatters too much for sustained interest.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD (No. 7, "The Bang Sun Engine"—Pathe), Nov. 15.—"The Bang Sun Engine" is one of the best of the new Wallingford adventures. Mr. Bang with his new invention attracts the sympathy of the Ward girls, who soon discover that Bang's persecutor is by name Morley, another of the clique that ruined their father. Wallingford and Blackie Daw are soon on the job to swindle the swindler and repair the damage done by him. There is much that is interesting in this episode which is head and shoulders over some of the previous episodes of the series as regards quality.

NEAL OF THE NAVY, NO. 13, "Backed by the U. S. N." (Panama Films), Nov. 25.—"Backed by the U. S. N." is the title of this excellent number of the series. In this episode Joe Welcher surprises us by at last living up to the manhood that's in him, and puts up a good fight with Hernandez in favor of Annette. The brute is also changed somewhat, but only in appearance, by being treated to some new clothes and a hat. This episode is an impressive one.

MARY'S LAMB (Gold Rooster Play), Nov. 19.—A five-part adaptation of Richard Carle's play, with the author in the role of the "lamb." The screen version of this well-known play is a success. A full review of the production will be found on another page of this issue.

NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD (No. 8, "A Transaction in Summer Boarders"—Pathe), Nov. 22.—In this number, "A Transaction in Summer Boarders," takes place that is highly amusing and well staged. Another of the swindling clique comes to his own in a deal that is sprinkled with kerosene to increase its market value. The comedy of the episode is good.

AT BAY (Gold Rooster Play), Nov. 26.—This is an excellent adaptation of the George Scarborough play of the same name. Frank Sheridan, Florence Reed, De Witt C. Jennings and Chas. Waldron are prominent in the cast. A full review of the production will be found on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

PROMISSORY NOTES (Victor), Nov. 12.—This first of a series of "little stories from real life," by Jacques Jaccard, is very promising. It is compact, well constructed and tells an entertaining story of a young broker with an extravagant wife. The cast includes Fred Aldis, Peggy Condray, Raymond Russell and A. D. Blake. The number is complete in itself and very entertaining.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 193 (Universal), Nov. 17.—Edison laying a corner stone at Universal City, a "wet" parade in Chicago, football, aeroplaning and interesting sidelights on the war are contained in this number.

DAD'S AWFUL DEED (Joker), Nov. 27.—A knockabout number, featuring Max Asher, Wm. Franey and Lillian Peacock. This is the old melodrama of the cruel mortgage holder and the poor father who can't pay done in comedy form. Familiarity with the plot seems to help in this instance as several of the scenes bring laughter.

INSIDE FACTS (Laemmle), Nov. 28.—A number, written by James Dayton, featuring Barton Wilson, Myrtle Gonzales, Hayward Mack and Jack Nelson. The story concerns a factory owner's daughter who seeks employment in the works in order to learn how the laborers are treated. A very familiar plot, well presented by an agreeable cast.

OPERATING ON CUPID (Nestor), Nov. 29.—A brisk little hospital comedy of the knockabout, burlesque type. Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns and Ray Gallagher appear. The action and settings are good and there are numerous laughable incidents.

SAFETY FIRST AND LAST (Imp), Nov. 30.—An army burlesque on the Mexican frontier, with Victor Potel in the cast. There are some quite amusing battle scenes and the hero finally brings in the enemy leaders with his lariat. This is fairly strong.

LIZZIE'S WATERY GRAVE (L-KO), Dec. 1.—An amusing juvenile subject, introducing Little Billy and Olive again after a considerable absence from the films. Billy's rival throws the girl's doll in the lake, in a fit of jealous rage. Billy plays hero and rescues it. A slight plot, but well pictured and pleasing.

THE DEVIL IN IDLE HANDS (Laemmle), Dec. 3.—A unique offering, written by Lenora Ainsworth, with Wm. C. Dowlin, Gloria Fonda and others in the cast. The story itself is not so new, as it merely follows the adventures of a young man who has been intrusted to deliver money, but the picturing of the various hands makes a novel and interesting feature. A good offering.

MRS. PRUNE'S BOARDING HOUSE (Joker), Dec. 4.—A comedy number, by James Dayton, featuring Gale Henry and Max Asher. The Italian ventriloquist keeps a lady dummy in his trunk and the landlady suspects murder. The situations are of a knockabout sort and fairly amusing.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

HONOR THY HUSBAND (Powers), Nov. 12.—A two-reel number, by Harvey Gates, featuring Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn, Abe Mundon and Val Paul. This has quite an unusual plot, which works out quite well. The young owner of the vineyard takes extreme measures in order to make his extravagant young wife know that she loves him and not his money. He breaks up a party by sending the guests home and pretends to lose his fortune. After cooking and washing clothes the wife changes her views considerably. He then presents her with a new home and they find happiness. A domestic story with some new situations in it.

THE MASKED SUBSTITUTE (Laemmle), Nov. 14.—A two-reel number by Leonia Ainsworth, featuring Wm. C. Dowlin, Gloria Fonda and Wm. Quinn. There is a strong romantic touch in this, where the mountain girl, who is wild to attend the ball, is induced to take the place of a masked dancer who wants to elope. The substitution brings a crisis in two love affairs. There is considerable good drama in the scenes at the country roadhouse. The number makes an entertaining variation of a familiar theme, and holds the attention.

THE KINGDOM OF NOSEY LAND (Rex), Nov. 28.—A four-reel production, made by H. C. Matthews, telling a very delightful and whimsical story of a fairy kingdom, where a big nose is the sign of beauty and distinction. The baby princess is born with a nose of average size and is banished to the wilderness, where she grows up with wild beasts. Later the young prince comes and restores her to her throne, by aid of a witch woman. This is staged throughout in adequate, if not expensive, style. But the best thing about it is the splendid humor and good feeling; the animals are good imitations and the picture should be a particular favorite with women and children. Elsie Albert is the princess. A good offering.

THE SUPREME TEST (Broadway Universal Feature), Nov. 29.—Henrietta Crosman is featured in this five-part subject. The famous stage star is supported by an excellent cast, including Wyndham Standing, Adele Farrington, Stella Razeto, Jack Wilson and Sylvia Ashton. The story interests at times, but contains no big moments, if we except a railroad smash which carries more of a shock than a thrill.

WHEN A QUEEN LOVED O'ROURKE (Universal Special), Nov. 29.—This is the second of the new series, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan as Terence O'Rourke, soldier of fortune. The scenes in this occur in Bombay, where Terence finds himself involved in some exciting incidents at the court of the king of Sundia. The plot development is a trifle vague in places, but there is a good swing to the action and the number is entertaining.

GILDED YOUTH (Laemmle), Dec. 2.—A three-reel number, by Rupert Julian, with the author, Elsie Jane Wilson, Hal Cooley and others in the cast. This is a strong number, with a great deal of fine feeling in it. The plot is one in which three men artists raise the son of a former model. It is reminiscent of the play, "When We Were Twenty-one" in certain phases. The youth's first violent love attack is very amusing and Hal Cooley is pleasing in the juvenile role. The production as a whole is well above the average.

THE CONNECTING LINK (Bison), Dec. 4.—A three-reel number, by Burton Wilson, with Rex de Roselli, Sherman Bainbridge, Edythe Sterling and Norbert A. Myles in the cast. The story is melodramatic in tone throughout, picturing the evil wrought by a dishonest mining man. He first brings about the death of his partner in order to gain full control of the mine; later he and his tool try to blow up the daughter in the powder mill. This last deed is frustrated by a stolen ring, which short circuits the wires and brings about the death of the leading villain by a premature explosion. The story is carefully constructed and makes a good offering of this particular type.

World Film Corporation.

NOT GUILTY (Triumph), Nov. 29.—Joseph A. Golden's five-part drama is an adaptation of a play once popular on the stage. The picture deals with the trials of a man sent to Sing Sing under a death sentence for a crime he did not commit. The role of the unfortunate clerk is sincerely acted by Cyril Scott, supported by Catherine Proctor, Ada Boshell, Mark Ellison and Charles Hutchinson.

Miscellaneous.

THE VICTORY OF VIRTUE (Exclusive), December.—A combination of modern drama and spectacular allegory is found in this five-part picture, directed by Harry McRae Webster with Gerda Holmes and Wilmuth Merkyl in the leading roles. The production is elaborately staged and very well acted. Miss Holmes, in particular, giving an effective performance as the young woman who selects the path of virtue after a severe test.

EIGHT RELEASES A MONTH FOR "BIG FOUR."

Beginning with the first of the year, the V-L-S-E's program will include at least eight strong productions a month. Vitagraph will supply four of these; Essanay two, and Lubin and Selig each one or more.

Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid Co-Stars

TAKING their place among the popular stars of the screen, Miss Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid, it is announced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, will appear as co-stars in the Lasky production, "The Golden Chance," which will be released soon through Paramount Pictures Corporation. It is an interesting incident in relation to the announcement that the photoplay, which, more than any other, lifted Miss Ridgely to stardom, was the Lasky picturization of "The Chorus Lady," by James Forbes, in which she appeared in the title role. Wallace Reid, who has won exceptional fame by reason of his characterization of Don Jose in support of Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," appeared in the principal masculine role in "The Chorus Lady."

Cleo Ridgely.

Wallace Reid.

Both Miss Ridgely and Mr. Reid have been members of the Lasky Company for some months. Miss Ridgely has gained an international reputation as a portrayer of adventuresses, a reputation quite difficult to maintain in these days of motion picture villainesses. She has played in numerous Lasky productions more recently, "The Puppet Crown," "The Fighting Hope," "The Marriage of Kitty," "The Secret Orchard" and "The Chorus Lady."

Wallace Reid need to have done nothing finer than his playing with Geraldine Farrar to stamp him as a screen player of exceptional talent and popularity. The versatility he shows in "Carmen" is an indication of the wide range artistically which he possesses. It is believed the combination of the two "R's"—Ridgely and Reid—will be a successful one in their first photoplay, "The Golden Chance," now nearing completion at the Lasky studios.

BOWMAN JOINS DAVID HORSLEY.

William J. Bowman has just been added to David Horsley's staff of directors at the Horsley studios in Los Angeles to put on Centaur Feature animal pictures with the Bostock animals. He is now at work on his first Centaur picture.

Mr. Bowman is one of the best known and at the same time one of the most capable directors in the business. For a long time he was associated with the New York Motion Picture Company putting on productions for them at Inceville. His most recent engagement was with the Quality Films, a Metro release, for whom he produced the Francis X. Bushman features. Among these were "The Second in Command," the first Bushman picture for the Metro, and "The Silent Voice," which followed.

SCOTT TO DIRECT FOR METRO.

Virtus R. Scott, who has been a successful director with the Biograph, Famous Players, New York Motion Picture Company, Equitable and other companies, has signed a contract to work under the Metro banner, as assistant director to Lionel Belmore, who will direct future Quality-Metro features in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starred. Mr. Scott is a former newspaper man, and has had a wide experience in that field. He was born in New York City, and considered an authority on appropriate and interesting "Locations," where exteriors can be photographed.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

The Selig-Tribune to Supplant Hearst-Selig Pictorial News.

WILLIAM N. SELIG tells me that arrangements have been completed for the launching of the Selig-Tribune in the near future. This great news film will take the place of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, and Mr. Selig believes that it will have no equal.

The Chicago Tribune can boast of one of the finest news services possessed by any of the great dailies of the world, while its sketch artists and cameramen stand at the top of the list. In every part of the world the Tribune news service has its alert and up-to-date correspondents, and wherever an incident or important happening of world interest occurs, the Tribune representative will see to it that a negative is secured for the Selig-Tribune news film by an expert cameraman. Every army engaged at present in the European war has a Tribune correspondent, while in Mexico there are others who attend to the daily occurrences in that distracted land. In the United States and Canada the news will be gathered as with a fine comb, so that nothing that is worthy of a place on the screen will be overlooked.

Special attention will be devoted to the editing of the Selig-Tribune, and for this purpose a carefully selected staff of editors has been appointed. As progress and still more progress is absolutely requisite in the making of moving pictures, and especially in news films, it is promised that the Selig-Tribune will reveal several innovations that will make a strong appeal to the public.

The fact that the Selig Polyscope Company and "the world's greatest newspaper" have joined interests and forces in the issuing of an animated publication, gives fine promise of success, a success that should be marked by bright originality and daring enterprise.

The Selig-Tribune will be released on Monday and Thursday, every week. The date of the first release will be announced in due time.

Ye Country Editor as Critic and Censor.

Messrs. G. S. Shuggman and Chas. Dahler, proprietors of the Abingdon theater, Abingdon, Ill., under the date of November 18, have written me as follows:

"Enclosed find a marked copy of one of our city papers, which shows how our business and pictures are censored by the editor. He would sure make a great censor for the Illinois State Board. We hope you will enjoy this as much as we did."

Here is one of the articles taken from "The Editor's Corner" in the Abingdon Argus, which has to do with "A Little Brother of the Rich:"

> This great story of Joseph Medill Patterson, was told in photography at the Abingdon Theater one night this week. Aside from the beautiful love tale the display focused up a scene of salacious symmetry that startled a bevy of Methodist blushes summersaulting all over the auditorium. This scene was illustrative of the libidinous lure of the idle rich. A line-up of exquisitely symmetric and beautiful nude women ran, cavorted, leaped, dived and swam. In passing on this the censor's eye may have closed for a siesta, but it is hard to conceive how he could have missed going one eye on the rich and racy scene.

This is another which treats of the merits of Marguerite Clark in "The Crucible," and of the demerits of the musical accompaniment, which I consider both humorous and worthy of space:

> "The Crucible," because vitalized by beautiful little Marguerite Clark, drew a good crowd Friday night. The part of Jean, the neglected little tom-boy sister, would radiate but little beside the unseemly pathetic in any other hands. But Marguerite's nimbleness, beauty and chic, rescue it from the thraldom of the trite and put it on the pedestal of popularity. An incident somewhat droll in character sandwiched itself within the plaits of the play that spattered a pot full of piquancy into the performance. In some way the records got mixed, dishing up "The Canter of the Snail" intended for Marguerite's mournful march to the reformatory, while she was doing the quick and devilish scene of changing the tags on the picnic lunch baskets, and rolling uproariously in merriment on the grass. Had she moved and kept time with the tune she never could have accomplished her turn before the baskets were put up at auction. The aspect became decidedly funeralish, so much so that a pert school girl up near the front was moved to announce: "The friends may now come forward and have a last look at the corpse!" The dirge continued sweetly with its interlarded staccato squawk until Marguerite could stand it no longer. Forgetting that she was escaping from the prison dishabille, she hiked down to the footlights in her "nighty" and a paroxysm of exasperation, breaking out with: "Will the mutt who manipulates the mainspring of the music machine stop stroking the fuzz on his upper lip and compress the throttle of the tune thriller? How can I be expected to patter down the path, leap from the cliff to the lake and swim to Craig's tepee to such a slow and sepulchral sonata as this?" Then a quicker tune was substituted and Marguerite went on with the show.

Banquet and Housewarming at Reel Fellows New Club Rooms.

The banquet and housewarming in the new quarters of the Chicago Reel Fellows Club, given Wednesday evening, November 17, was a big success, from all accounts. One hundred and sixteen covers were required at the banquet tables, and about one hundred and fifty people were present at the meeting and entertainment afterwards, which lasted until 3 A. M.

At the business meeting held immediately after the banquet F. J. Flaherty was elected vice-president of the club to succeed R. E. Bradford, who is now in Minneapolis as Triangle representative. E. A. Hamburg was appointed chairman of the house committee, in full charge of the new club rooms. These club rooms are located at 17 North Wabash avenue.

The entertainment was comprised of vaudeville and musical talent. Speeches were made at the banquet by the following:

Henry B. Walthall, Richard C. Travers, R. R. Nehls, F. J. Flaherty, Rapley Holmes, Joseph H. Finn, Albert Levy, Wm. J. Sweeney, F. M. Brockell, M. G. Watkins and L. A. Boening.

Chicago Film Brevities.

J. A. Berst left Chicago, Tuesday evening, Nov. 16th, for New York City, to assume the duties of president of the General Film Co. His resignation from the Selig Polyscope Co., as its vice-president and general manager, was sincerely regretted by all of the large force in the Chicago office and at the Chicago plant.

Mrs. Maud Moor-Clement, well known as a photoplaywright, gave an address on scenario writing before the Chicago Press Writer's Club on Monday evening, Nov. 15th. In addition to covering all the essential points of scenario writing, Mrs. Moor-Clement related many amusing experiences in her career while furnishing producing companies with scripts. She also read one of her own scenarios which contained nearly everything that should not be written in such compositions. This was very cleverly constructed, and proved interesting and beneficial to all the script writers present.

Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Loew, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Jones, arrived in Chicago Tuesday, November 16, from California, where they had been touring for some time past. A grand charity ball was given at the First Regiment Armory, Chicago, on Saturday evening, November 20, under the auspices of the American Theatrical Hospital Association. The ball was given with the object of securing more funds to begin the building of the new hospital at Irving Park Boulevard, near Sheridan Road, where medical and surgical treatment, as well as hospital care, will be given those engaged in the amusement profession, who are unable to pay for the same. The list includes actors, actresses and other employes of theaters, of road shows, circuses, carnivals, lyceum bureaus, musicians, bill posters, stage employees and moving picture operators throughout the country. The American Theatrical Hospital will be a charitable organization, incorporated, but not for profit, and when completed will be the first and only theatrical hospital in the world. Joseph Hopp, president of the Union Film Co., and Alfred Hamburger, of the Hamburger Enterprises, are president and secretary, respectively, of the Association. Mr. Hamburger extended an invitation, several weeks ago, to Francis X. Bushman and Miss Beverly Bayne to come on to Chicago to lead the grand march, and both consented. While in Chicago Miss Bayne and Mr. Bushman were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Hamburger at their home, 4344 Grand Boulevard.

The village trustees of Winnetka, Ill., have passed an ordinance prohibiting the exhibition of moving pictures, except those shown at the community house, which is connected with the Congregational Church. Clark T. Northrop, one of the trustees, expressed the opinion that he did not expect the courts to uphold the ordinance. It has also been said that the Congregational Church community house must also stop giving moving picture entertainment. Trustees have said that the ordinance will prevent any future church fairs, at which home talent or professional vaudeville are the feature. The fight for the passage of this ordinance has been waged by the housewives of Winnetka for the last year, in opposition to the maids and other servants in the village who demanded moving picture entertainment.

The Epoch Producing Corporation is again in the Chicago courts demanding that the city permit "The Birth of a Nation" to be presented to minors. The matter is at present in the hands of Judge Marcus Kavanaugh, and it is expected that considerable time will elapse before a decision is reached. George Bowles, manager of the Colonial theater, where "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown, states that protests continue coming in to his office against the ruling now enforced, which permits adults only to attend. He says that most of these protests are from parents who visit the theater, expecting to take their children into the show, only to be turned away at the door. "We are refusing admittance to minors, because we are showing with that understanding," says Mr. Bowles. "We believe that if parents bring their children to the Colonial, they should not be denied the right to say what is best for them or not. It might be different if these men and women did not know what they were about to see. But they do. They have seen the show themselves and want their children to see it."

The Triangle Film Corporation has given the following official explanation for its withdrawal of the $2 picture program at the Studebaker: "Motion picture exhibitors and theater managers in Chicago have brought considerable pressure to bear upon the Triangle Film Corporation to have the Studebaker released to one of their number on the ground that it is commercially unethical for a distributing corporation to engage in competition with its customers. Granting this, arrangements have been made with the Jones, Linick & Schaefer interests, whereby on the payment of a substantial bonus, they will conduct the theater."

Wm. Hale Thompson, Mayor of Chicago, sent the following letter to the management of "The Battle Cry of Peace," at the Olympic, on Tuesday, November 16: "I visited the Olympic theater to view 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' thinking that I was to see the ordinary photoplay which has engaged the attention of the theater-going public these years past. I was astounded when I saw the magnitude of the photo-spectacle by Commodore Blackton, and amazed when I realized the extent to which the movie camera can be put for the education of our people. I do not think there is now in existence a stronger plea to the patriotic feeling of our men and women than 'The Battle Cry of Peace.' I do not believe a decade of development on the part of men engaged in this wonderful business pursuit can develop a stronger or sterner argument in behalf of our country's welfare than that which has been given us by Commodore Blackton in his remarkable photo-spectacle. 'The Battle Cry of Peace' teaches us patriotism, urges us on to patriotic doings, calls on us to heed the warning that our country needs us—needs us badly—needs every able-bodied man and every red-blooded patriot, to be prepared to meet the threatening foe. Commodore Blackton has written a lesson that no true American can fail to heed. He has written himself into the list of America's truly patriotic citizens. I would urge every man, woman and child who can do so to see 'The Battle Cry of Peace.'" "The Battle Cry of Peace" continues to draw good houses to the Olympic.

Some evil disposed person recently started the rumor that David Wark Griffith, Thomas Ince and Mack Sennett would henceforth produce moving pictures without any regard for censorship. The rumor reached Mr. Griffith at his studio in Los Angeles, and he immediately denied the rumor in the following emphatic telegram to C. W. Hately, who represents the executive board of the Triangle Film Corporation, in the Otis Building, Chicago: "It has been reported to me that a rumor has been given out that I had said I would make pictures without regard to censorship. I wish to brand this as absolutely false, and I wish you would, knowing my work as you do, set me right with the people of Chicago. Naturally knowing that there are boards of censors in several States of the Union, and it being my business to make moving pictures for the people of these States, it is hardly likely that I would make such a ridiculous statement. Trusting that you will use your best efforts to right this wrong, which has been done me and my associates, Messrs. Ince and Sennett, I remain, etc."

Moving pictures were substituted for the regular Sunday evening services at the South Park Methodist Episcopal Church, this city, Sunday, November 14. The change was made in order to increase the attendance, and the pastor, the Rev. John P. Brushingham, expressed himself as pleased with the result. At the close of the service, he said: "You will see that pictures are a success in bringing the people to the church, for, in spite of unpleasant weather, there are very few seats unoccupied. The children get enough melodramatic stuff at the theaters. Let us give them something educationally uplifting. I promise you there will be more of these pictures shown throughout the winter season." Three reels were shown on the occasion, two of them being studies in the growth of plants and in the habits of birds, while the third gave illustrations of passages from the Bible.

"Damaged Goods," at the La Salle theater, drew capacity houses during its first week's run, and it has been retained for another week. The criticisms of the daily press have been varied, but the leading papers, while being critical, have not written anything against the pictures from a moral standpoint.

Recently, in the Circuit Court of Jacksonville, Ill., suit was brought by two negro women against G. M. Luttrell, manager and proprietor of the leading moving picture theater there. It appears that Manager Luttrell has been segregating the negroes and the white people in his theater, and the women brought suit in the Justice Court, charging unjust discrimination. That court decided in favor of Manager Luttrell, and an appeal was taken to the Circuit Court, where the jury returned a verdict in favor of sustaining that of the lower court. It is expected that the case will reach the Supreme Court before the matter is brought to a close.

Milwaukee Notes

By Paul C. Hinz.

Frank Cook, the hustling manager of Saxe's Princess theater, in Milwaukee, is still doing remarkable things in the way f drawing Milwaukee moving picture patrons to his theater. called on him Monday evening, November 15, during a rief visit to the Cream City, and he showed me throughout he house. The Princess has a seating capacity of 1,100, runs arge features, exclusively, and charges an admission price of ve and ten cents. The musical accompaniment is furnished y a five-piece orchestra, and the program is changed daily. On this particular evening the Princess featured Blanche Sweet in D. W. Griffith's "The Escape." Mr. Cook then scorted me to the Alhambra theater, the finest house owned y the Saxe Amusement Enterprises. At the Alhambra we ried to find the manager, George Fischer, but, unfortunately, e happened to be out. Mr. Fischer, by the way, has been with the Saxe Enterprises for the past eight years, and is a ery popular figure in moving picture circles in Milwaukee. n his absence Mr. Cook volunteered to make me acquainted with the way things are done at the Alhambra, which is Milwaukee's largest moving picture theater. It is very artistically decorated, and the operating system is so perfect that not once has there been a blank screen during the exhibition of a picture. There are two operating booths in the Alhambra, with an operator and an assistant for each machine. Although I did not have a chance to inspect the repair department, which is underneath the stage, I was told that it is inely equipped, and that the mechanicians go over each machine at the close of each day, and if any defects are found, they are immediately attended to. The program at the Alhambra, for the week beginning Sunday, November 14, included Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly" for the first four days, and Charles Cherry in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," and Paramount travel pictures for the balance of the week. The stage setting at the Alhambra is changed about once a month, and scenic artists are constantly employed at the theater. A large orchestra renders fine musical accompaniment to the pictures, the pit where the musicians are seated being out of sight of the spectators. Mr. Cook reported fine business at all the Saxe houses.

"Out of sixty-five theaters in Milwaukee," said Mr. Brimmer, manager of the Milwaukee branch of the Universal Exchange, located in the Manhattan Building, "we supply twenty-three with Universal service." Mr. Brimmer has been in charge of the Milwaukee branch of the Universal for three years. The business offices, shipping rooms and poster departments of this exchange occupy nearly the whole second floor of the Manhattan Building. Mr. Brimmer stated that this was the result of the growth of his business in Milwaukee, since he first took charge there. He showed me the offices first leased by him, which took up about a 30-foot square of one corner.

The Jacobs Film Booking Offices are in the same building with the Universal, occupying a part of the third floor. This concern successfully exploited the two Universal features, "Neptune's Daughter," and the Williamson Submarine pictures in Wisconsin. W. A. Baier, one of the partners, told me that "Neptune's Daughter" had been booked for return dates as many as four and five times in the same house, and that it is still being booked throughout Wisconsin, at $25 a day. Both of these subjects had long runs in Milwaukee.

W. M. Simmons is now managing the Butterfly theater, on Grand avenue, in Milwaukee. Mr. Simmons was formerly purchasing agent of the Mutual Film Corporation in New York. He came to take over the management of the Butterfly and brought with him an assistant who is looking after the bookings and other work. The Butterfly is doing a very good business with Mutual features, at an admission of 10 cents. It is located in the heart of Milwaukee and runs day and night. The lobby is most attractive, and a large butterfly design of electric lights is situated above the box office, and blazes in dazzling brilliancy at nights.

The New Merrill theater, situated on Grand avenue, near Second streeet, is nearing completion, and will be officially opened for business in about a month. This theater and building is owned by the Merrill Amusement Co. Harry Graham, the manager, informed me that there will be a dress rehearsal of the first presentation, and that the company is preparing to put in use the latest achievements in screen arts and settings on the opening night.

The Strand theater, in Milwaukee, is located at Grand avenue and Fifth street, and is managed by Phil Gross. Metro and Fox features with one and two reels of General Film service form the programs. The seating capacity is about 1,000, and the admission price is 10 cents. The program is changed daily. Mr. Gross told me that the Strand is getting its due share of Milwaukee business.

The Weickardt organ, manufactured by the Wangerin-Weickhardt Mfg. Co., has been installed in a number of Milwaukee moving picture theaters, including Saxe's Princess. For a long time this company catered only to church business, but since the organ has gained prominence in the accompaniment of moving pictures, the Company has been fairly swamped with orders. Adolph Wangerin, president of the company, informed me that his company had enough business on hand, from moving picture proprietors alone, to keep his factory busy for some time to come. The Weichhardt organ is not a stock organ, but must be built in the theater from the plans of the architect of the building.

Victimized by Fake Agent

Two Pennsylvania Girls Promised Employment by Man Pretending to Represent Kalem Company.

THE unpleasant experiences of two young women seeking employment in a motion picture studio have been brought to the attention of the Moving Picture World. According to a letter written by the two to the Kalem Company they "studied" to become motion picture actresses under the direction of a concern in Chicago. Early in September they received a letter from a man who represented himself as an agent of the Kalem Company. This was followed by a visit of the man to them in the little town in Pennsylvania where they lived, when, according to their letter he told them about the work in studios. Later another letter informed them there was a position for them with the Kalem Company and that the two would be sent for before November 1. "Having received no reply will you tell us if he really is an agent or if you have no position yet?" continues the letter to the Kalem Company.

William Wright, of the Kalem Company, replied to the young women, informing them they had evidently been imposed upon and suggesting that they take up the matter with the police in the town in which the pretender was doing business and have him prosecuted. Mr. Wright also advised the young women to inform the Moving Picture World. The World has received a letter setting forth the facts as stated and adding that the two were in Philadelphia, out of work.

"This case is not unusual," said Mr. Wright to a World man. "We receive a large number of letters, many of them written by persons plainly illiterate, and couched in phraseology singularly identical. The same language is used in the initial part of the letter so frequently that evidently a bad condition is widespread. Some concern is doing a big business. Every time one of these cases is brought to our attention we advise the parties to take up the matter with the police.

"It is a crime to take money from girls, many of them inexperienced and ignorant, on the promise to get them employment in pictures. Many of these are factory employees, working for small wages, and cannot afford even the five dollars charged them for their alleged instruction. The Kalem Company will back up any efforts of victims to prosecute these fake agents who have swindled them or misled them. We will swear these men are not connected with this company."

The Moving Picture World advises its readers to warn any screen-struck acquaintances or friends to beware of men prentending to be agents or representatives of companies and to have communication only with those they know to have authority. To deal direct with the management of a studio is the only safe method. To those who have not had experience on the stage or before the camera, opportunities for employment are worse than slim. There are in New York City trained and skilled players who have difficulty in securing engagements even of a temporary nature.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

LAST CENSOR LEAVES LOS ANGELES.

But First Passes "Damaged Goods" Which Crowds Quinn Theater—City Decides to Try Censorless Pictures.

THE climax to the battle which lasted about three weeks came on November 15, when the last member of the local board of censors departed on an extended vacation. The last member was Mrs. Earl Rogers, wife of a prominent attorney in this city.

The first member, an official, President Tugwell, as was related in this paper two weeks ago, was the first to go. He resigned by request. Then the secretary went, and in turn the other members resigned, until the board was reduced to one member, Mrs. Rogers, And now we are without any censors, other than city officials, the police department, and the largest board of censors, the public, who will look at and pass upon the films that are to be shown here in the future—unless the city should put on a board, but that is not likely.

Crowds Waiting to See "Damaged Goods."

As a result of the demolition of the board, when the last member was on duty last Saturday, she met, called the board to order, and held a preview of "Damaged Goods," and passed the picture with only a few minor trimmings. Mrs. Rogers called the meeting to order and conferred with Mrs. Rogers about the film, then consulted again with Mrs. Rogers, and the picture was allowed to be run at Quinn's Superba theater, starting November 15.

A. P. Tugwell, former president of the deceased board, will be given a public hearing some day this week so that he can endeavor to clear himself of the charges mentioned in certain affidavits which were used to show him up before the city officials.

So Los Angeles is evidently one of the first cities to wisely disband the censor board, save money, and at the same time permit pictures to be censored by the general public as they are presented in the theaters.

Mr. Quinn is presenting this picture in the best possible manner and the publicity has drawn many persons to the box office who would not have otherwise gone.

After the first music and the showing of Universal weekly, the curtains fold down and an elderly man steps from the deep folds and addresses the audience, explaining that the idea of presenting this picture is to educate the public and not to amuse it.

It is enough to say that the theater is "packing 'em in" and every day and night for a block the line in waiting remains patiently for entrance. The police are aiding the management in handling the throngs. All seats are reserved, and the sale goes on apace, and the booking is indefinite.

As a result of the influence of the film manufacturers, a petition is now being circulated which requests the mayor and council to appoint one man to see that all films booked here have been passed by the National Board of Censors and that the proper eliminations have been made before they are exhibited here. If this goes through Los Angeles is to be highly congratulated on ridding itself of the leech-like board of censors.

PALO ALTO FILM CORPORATION.

A New Film Manufacturing Enterprise, Endorsed by the Stanford University of California, to Build Studio at Palo Alto, the Birthplace of Motion Pictures.

The Palo Alto Film Corporation is the name of a new film producing concern, incorporated under the State laws of California and capitalized for $300,000. The company has acquired twenty acres of ground for studio location at Palo Alto in the vicinity of Stanford University. One of the officers of the Palo Alto Film Corporation is Professor Harry C. Peterson, director of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University Museum and a member of the faculty of the California college which, we understand, has endorsed the formation of this new film company and will give it its support and co-operation.

Palo Alto, as perhaps not everybody knows, is the birth place of the motion picture. It was here, on the famous Palo Alto stock farm, relates Prof. Peterson in an interesting article in the November Sunset Magazine, that Edward Muybridge in 1878 built the first motion picture plant in the United States and in the world. Already in 1872, at the request of Senator Leland Stanford, Muybridge had taken a series of pictures in Sacramento of the Senator's race horse "Occident," to prove Senator Stanford's theory that a trotter at one period of its stride has all four feet off the earth at once.

These exposures were made with only one camera, and therefore only showed one portion of the stride. Several years after the work at Sacramento Senator Stanford sent for Muybridge to continue the experiments and use several cameras instead of one. Muybridge was told to procure the best of equipment, regardless of expense, and to go down Palo Alto stock farm and build a studio. This was in 1878.

"The studio," says Prof. Peterson in his article, "resembled a vegetable stall at a free market more than it did anything else, as its whole front was open. Instead of carrots, turnips and cabbages displayed upon its counters he had twenty-four of the most expensive cameras fixed rigidly side by side, each with the center of its lens exactly twelve inches from its neighbor.

Opposite the studio in a position to receive the best available light, was erected a wooden fence or background about fifty feet long and fifteen feet high. This was covered with white muslin and subdivided by heavy black lines into twelve inch vertical spaces.

About eighteen inches out from its base was an indicator board twelve inches high on which were lateral lines four inches apart to show how high the horse raised its foot from the ground.

In front of all was laid a special rubber covered roadway, over which the horse ran. Running under this rubber at intervals of each twelve inches were transverse wires. These were so exposed at one edge of the roadway that the wheel of the sulkey would depress them as it passed over and each wire as depressed would release the shutter of the corresponding camera."

Prof. Peterson states that two years and $40,000 were spent in these experiments. All kinds of animals were run before the battery of cameras. Wrestlers, boxers, runners, acrobats and professional athletes were also used as subjects.

MORE LAND FOR CULVER CITY STUDIO.

Present Site Not Large Enough for Big Plant and Thirty-one Acres to Be Added to the Present Twelve-Acre Tract.

We learn from Inceville this week that Thomas H. Ince is at present negotiating for the purchase of thirty-one additional acres of land immediately adjoining his Culver City property. Producer Ince finds that the original site of twelve acres won't be large enough for the plant he claims to require for the production of forthcoming Ince-Triangle features. The acquisition of thirty-one additional acres would allow the construction of more stages, dressing rooms, property quarters, etc., and still leave plenty of space for great street settings and other big sets.

Building a Set at Culver City.

The construction work at Culver City has progressed rapidly and the plant is expected to be in full operation before Christmas. The heavy iron frame work of most of the buildings has been completed and now remains only the erection of the walls. The work is rushed night and day and at night under the glare of several hundred electric arc lights. As an interesting detail in connection with the structural work might be mentioned that half a ton of white lead is being used in each of the stages. This is being packed in the cracks between timbers to prevent warping.

Plans for the formal opening have been discussed and probably will be in the nature of a grand ball in the glass covered studio. This event will take place on New Year's eve or New Year's night, and everybody will be invited to attend.

Griffith Makes Speech by Long Distance Telephone to Banqueters in St. Louis.

D. W. Griffith in Los Angeles on the night of November 15 made an address over long distance telephone to five hundred banqueters in St. Louis.

The occasion of the long distance speech was the celebration in St. Louis by the Million Club of the 150th performance of "The Birth of a Nation." No other play has ever had such an unprecedented run in the Middle West city, and Mr. Griffith was asked to attend the banquet. As he could not do so he did the next best thing and made a speech by telephone.

In the St. Louis banquet hall a loop had been run around the table connecting with a score or more of telephones, and this gave every person at the banquet an opportunity to hear a part of Mr. Griffith's speech, the banqueters taking their turns at the telephones.

For forty-five minutes the motion picture producer talked, interrupted now and then by bursts of applause or by comments made by Governor Mayor of Missouri and Mayor Kiel of St. Louis.

What made the feat the more notable was the fact that New York joined in the sending of greetings to St. Louis, and a three-cornered conversation took place, Mr. Griffith incidentally taking advantage of the opportunity to send his New York manager, J. J. McCarthy, instructions regarding some of his productions being shown there.

Then followed a general conversation between the three cities, during which everybody who could possibly get a word in edgeways sent a message to some friend or relative in Los Angeles, St. Louis or New York.

Harry E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, arrived in the city Monday afternoon this week. He was met at the train by Messrs. Griffith, Sennett and Ince. Mr. Aitken was accompanied by his brother, Roy Aitken.

Practically all the members of the Biograph Company will be present, including the four beautiful leading women, Gretchen Hartman, Queenie Sisson, Claire McDowell and Louise Vale.

The committee in charge also plans a confetti battle and serpentine shower. The general public visiting Meiklejohn's on Saturday evening will share in the festivities.

The new electric light studio at Universal City is being built on record time. Although it is scarcely more than two weeks since Thomas A. Edison laid the corner stone for the big structure, the steel frame work is finished and the business of laying the stage floor and adding the side walls is well under way.

Pat Rooney is now working in Universal pictures. While playing a two weeks' engagement at the Orpheum theater he made a visit to Universal City. This was his undoing. Before he knew it his name was on the bottom of a contract to appear in a two-reel Joker comedy, entitled "The Bell Hopper." Roy Clemments is directing the picture and the cast includes Victor Potel and Lillian Hamilton. So now poor Pat is sweating all day before the cameras and all night behind the footlights.

Griffith's Fine Arts studios, has received a telegram from the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York City asking if he would consider a proposition to write the music for a new production of "Romeo and Juliet" to be staged by Jacques Coinois, the well known operatic producer. Mr. Breil bound by his contract with the Triangle Film Corporation, was compelled to reject this brilliant offer. Since joining the Fine Arts studios Mr. Breil, and his staff have written the musical scores of "The Lamb," "Old Heidelberg," "The Martyrs of Alamo." "The Sable Lorcha," "The Lily and the Rose," "Double Trouble," and is now engaged conceiving music for forthcoming Fine Arts releases.

Ford Sterling and his company of Keystone players have been out fox-hunting for the pictures at the Ortega Ranch, some thirty miles out of Los Angeles. Twenty-five people mounted on horses and fifteen fox hounds participated in the steeplechase. Miss Dot Hagert of the Players sustained fractures of both wrists when the horse she was riding stumbled. The hunt is an incident in a coming Keystone production.

Because ten men came prepared to sleep in the open near Griffith Park a few days ago, the other 990 men out of the thousand extras who had been engaged by a company to work in some big scenes precipitated a riot and shredded the blankets of the ten men. When the fellows with the coverlets started to say "nighty," the others tore into them and ripped the whole lot of bedding to pieces. If they all could not sleep warmly no ten were to be peacefully in dreamland while the others shivered in the night air. The film company expected the men to provide their own bedding, but so much excitement reigned that the sleep matter was forgotten until the hour of turning in arrived when the riot happened. Anyway—the picture was made.

Seth D. Perkins, one of the live-wire managers of Los Angeles, who directed the last season's exhibitors' ball here, has been named to pilot this year's event on New Year's. The affair will be a farewell to 1915 and a welcome to the new Sixteen.

Mr. Perkins, always a "regular" fellow, is a strong advertising man, and he uses that work and word as a prayer. He first came to the front some time ago when he resurrected the Optic theater on Main street and put it on its feet. At that time the Woodley house was suffering from Nickelitis and he used magnetism on the ticket seller and now that theater is showing the Paramount service. Lately he took over the Garrick after J. A. Quinn had put it on a running basis and is making good with this house. He is indeed able to handle the big event on New Year's.

The building is being built by John Cassou and will have a frontage of 96 feet, the theater to have a frontage of 48 feet, while two stores will take up the other half of the space. The house is to be equipped for road shows, but pictures will be the everyday show. The theater will have a depth of 160 feet, and will be equipped with all the latest exhibition essentials. The building is to be fireproof.

Powell a Benedict

FRANK POWELL, one of the most widely known and distinguished photoplay directors in this country, has joined the ranks of the benedicts and was married October 14, last, in Jersey City, to Miss Jane Miller, of Jackson, Miss., but owing to the fact that Mrs. Powell wished the first announcement to come through the Jackson press, the wedding was kept secret.

Miss Miller is the third daughter of the Hon. William Jones Miller, State Treasurer of Mississippi, and belongs to one of the first families of the Southland. She is well known in high society circles in Jackson, Miss.; New Orleans, Memphis, Tenn., and has the distinction of being one of the South's most beautiful women. She was Queen of the New Orleans Mardi Gras two years ago and has long devoted herself to social settlement work and is known to be as kind as she is beautiful.

Mrs. Frank Powell.

Mr. Powell neeeds no introduction to the motion picture public, as the discoverer of Theda Bara, the famous screen Vampire woman, as the director of the sensational production of "A Fool There Was," the producer of all the Nance O'Neil pictures and director of many other noteworthy productions, he has ascended the highest rungs of the ladder of his art. Mr. Powell recently announced his connection with the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and will commence with that company on December 1. Mr. and Mrs. Powell will reside in Bayside, Long Island, on the famous Teller estate, which Mr. Powell has recently purchased.

Two Triangle Houses

The Knickerbocker in New York and the Triangle Theater in Brooklyn.

EXHIBITORS throughout the country who are running the Triangle service will be interested in seeing how the Knickerbocker theater, New York, and the Triangle theater, Brooklyn, look. Here are the pictures of these two notable houses as now presenting the Triangle plays. The parent house, the Knickerbocker, is part of a large theatrical office building at Broadway and Thirty-eighth street.

Knickerbocker Theater, New York.

So general display on the walls of the building is impracticable, but there are large electric signs at the corner and at the main entrance, giving the names of the attractions and the stars currently playing. These signs are of the type that are visible by day as well as when lighted at night. A color scheme of red, green and white imparts great brilliancy. The names of the directors, Griffith, Ince and Sennett, are permanent parts of the sign, while the advertising below is changed from week to week. Portraits of twenty-four of the leading stars are on fixed frames on either side of the main entrance.

W. H. Kemble, in introducing the service to Brooklyn, had the advantage of extensive side walls of the Crescent (now the Triangle) theater. He has converted the exterior of the house into by far the most attractive looking place on the plaza at the junction of Fulton street and Flatbush avenue. It will be noted that Mr. Kemble has put the name of his theater even upon the water tank. The characteristic Triangle trade-marks, names of directors, plays and stars are everywhere, and the eye cannot fail to be strongly impressed by the display nor can curiosity fail to be aroused. Mr. Kemble says he has had splendid results from this sort of wall advertising which has made his playhouse the mecca of many thousands of Brooklynites, with big business each week.

Reviews of Current Productions

"The Ring of the Borgias"

A Modern Drama in Four Reels, With a Highly Romantic Plot, Released by the Edison Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE drama of passion and intrigue, of fierce hate and mysterious murder—the school of dramatic art that once delighted past generations—has been revived by William Addison Lathrop in this four-reel photoplay, "The Ring of the Borgias." The author has given his work a modern setting, but the incidents, the motif and the working out of the plot, are closely related to the old costume play in which Lucretia, the most infamous of the Borgias, had the leading role. This is not to say that Mr. Lathrop's screen drama is not interesting or that he has not handled his material with a keen eye to effect—quite the reverse. No attempt is made to deceive the spectator as to the nature of the play, and no time is taken up by analysis of character or moral deduction. Progressive and super-dramatic action marks every moment of the work, and the final climax totals three as the number of persons in the drama who come to a violent end.

Scene from "The Ring of the Borgias" (Edison).

Briefly, the story relates of the love of an adventuress for a married man and her killing of his wife, with the aid of a ring fashioned after the celebrated poison ring of the Borgias. The characters and situations incidental to the telling of the story have been skilfully chosen, and director Langdon West has accomplished his share of the work with equal dexterity.

Cora Linton makes a physically impressive adventuress, but lacks the "fiery expedition" of soul tóward things evil, demanded by the character. Augustus Philips, Helen Strickland, Richard Tucker, Margaret Prussing and Carlton King show aptitude for their respective roles.

"A Woman's Past"

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

NANCE O'NEIL is emotionally intense in her presentation of the tragic woman around whom this story centers. From first to last her portrayal maintains a sombre, not to say lugubrious, tone. Right at the opening of the picture her hopes of a literary career are given a setback by the return of a manuscript sent to a magazine, and from that time on misfortunes of ever increasing severity are her lot. She buys favor with an editor at a foolishly high price; then marries a worthy man, who does not realize that he is not the father of her son, and lives to suffer terrible abuse at the hands of the disreputable editor, the man who placed a black mark on her past and materially interfered with her future. If Miss O'Neil wanted to depict the most miserable of miserable women, she found her ideal in this picture.

Director Frank Powell's production achieves its purpose. It is impressive photoplay melodrama handled after the most approved method. Few opportunities to arouse sympathy for the woman and to impress an audience with the horror of her predicament have been missed. The plot works up to a dramatic trial scene, reminiscent of "Madame X," in which the son defends his mother on the charge of murdering the man who ruined her life. He does not know that the poverty-stricken woman he is defending is his mother, nor that the murdered man was his father, until the situation is cleared by a sensational confession. The suspense in these scenes, marking the climax of the picture, is strong and they are forcefully acted by Miss O'Neil and those in her support.

Probably the least impressive passages of the production are in the first reel, when Alfred Hickman is supposed to portray the editor in the office of a large magazine. His waistcoat suggests a gambler and his manners bear out the suggestion. Magazine editors may be villainous, but not in just that way.

"A Bush Ranger at Bay"

Fifth Installment of the Kalem Serial of the Australian Bandit "Stingaree"—Well Acted Character Drawing—Interesting Incident.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE center of interest in these two reels, "A Bush Ranger at Bay," falls between the bandit, Stingaree, and Guy Kentish, husband, it will be remembered, of the singing woman in the second episode, "A Voice in the Winderness." The bandit is of course played by True Boardman and Guy by Thomas Lingham, as in the former episodes. Boardman's work is, as usual, well adapted to the character; but Lingham's typical Britisher will be more noticeable in this installment, because, bulking big as it does here, it is a new interest in the serial. It will be found an ably drawn character, wholly unconscious of absolute fearlessness and sincere and unaffected in actions, yet with an exterior full of exaggerated, almost apish Britishisms. It brings out Lingham's power and versatility in a brilliant way. Marin Sais's part is short; but, as usual, she carries what is put in her charge with good ability.

It is Guy who brings the bush ranger to bay. Guy is on the stage that Stingaree robs of mail and, recognizing him as an old-time fellow clubman, and knowing how it came about that he fell from civilized life to the savagry of a bush bandit, agrees to bring back the mail. He gives a note to the driver and starts off alone on foot. Back in the hills, he stumbles into Stingaree's camp. Being found unarmed, he is permitted to sit and they have a smoke. The talk is led into old times. When he proposes to take back the mail to the depot, the bandit threatens him, but Guy warns him that, if he does not come back with the sacks, the police will open the note and so find out who Stingaree really is and this gives him a cold shiver. He finally helps Guy get the sacks back in time.

It is all clearly pictured and the photography is good. The dramatic interest never falls or fails to hold the spectator markedly. It impresses one as a good, sincere story pictured honestly and is an excellent and wholesome offering.

"The Nation's Peril"

A Stirring and Vivid Plea for National Preparedness Is Visualized in This Five-Reel Lubin Photoplay—Released Through V. L. S. E., Inc.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"PEACE hath her victories, as well as War," but there is something in the average human being that makes him, or her, enjoy the victory a great deal more if it comes as the result of a stubborn contest. The sight of marching men, of a great fleet in battle array, of mighty guns belching forth flames and the missiles of death—all "the pomp and circumstance" of War—how it quickens the blood and stirs the soul of even less ardent patriots than Col. Roosevelt! When these things are shown on the screen, as part and parcel of a vivid plea for National preparedness, coupled with a well worked out love story and all the concomitants of an engrossing photoplay, the combination must appeal to every good American. Such a picture is "The Nation's Peril," the five-reel Lubin drama, written by Harry Chandlee and George Terwilliger, and produced under the direction of Mr. Terwilliger.

The scenes of the drama are laid at Newport, in the year 1918, and the ruler of a foreign nation, who has apparently paid no attention to the peace propaganda of William J. Bryan, decides to attack the United States. A young naval officer is the hero of the story, and an aerial torpedo, of his invention, plays an important part in the plot. Foreign spies, a secret wireless station, harbor mines controlled by the enemy, and a masked battery on shore also occupy their places in the action; and, when it comes to the battle scenes, the Atlantic fleet, under Admiral Fletcher—ships, men, landing forces and great guns—are employed in the most realistic manner. The night attack on land is particularly well done, but the most awe-inspiring incident of the fight is the cannon fire of the big ships, as the bursts of flame light up the gloom. The vivid red glare of reality has been imparted to the flash of the powder. Another incident that arouses enthusiasm concerns the heroine. Tricked by a foreign spy into betraying her country, she seizes her father's sword from the wall and kills this enemy of Uncle Sam's. It is hardly necessary to state which side is the winner in this suppostitious war. The naval officer here receives the proper reward at the finish of this splendid object lesson to the peace-at-any-price adherents.

Earl Metcalfe and Ormi Hawley head an excellent cast, which also includes William H. Turner, Arthur Matthews, Herbert Fortier and Eleanor Barry. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, appears in the picture; also Admiral Cameron McRae Winslow, Admiral Fletcher, Vice-Admiral Mayo, and the officers of the Naval Training Station at Newport.

"In Love's Own Way"

A Three-Reel Lubin Photoplay of Modern Life, Written by Shannon Fife.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE locale of "Love's Own Way" is not given by the author, nor is this necessary—the happenings in Mr. Fife's drama could take place in two-thirds of the states in the Union. It deals with the life of today, the characters being men and women from several different levels of society, but all easily recognized types of normal human beings, with the average amount of good and evil to their credit. A State Senator, who is elected to the Governorship, is the hero of the story. To satisfy his ambition, he discards the woman he really loves, and marries a lady of much greater social rank. His wife contrives to entangle herself with a scheming politician, but is saved from disgrace by the quick wits and generous nature of the former sweetheart. As the Governor has learned really to care for the woman he married, Author Fife's drama ends happily for all concerned, the discarded lady, like a sensible little woman, accepting the love of the Governor's secretary.

The details of the foregoing plot have been joined together in a workman-like manner, and will appear to the average spectator as an authentic reproduction of certain phases of our national existence. The "big scene" is fashioned from well seasoned material; and, during the progress of his play, the author does not attempt to drive home any great truth nor suggest means for any political or moral reform. Events are always interesting, however, and John E. Ince has produced the picture with intelligent and pleasing effect. Mr. Ince also gives a good account of himself in the part of the Governor. Mary Charleston gains the requisite amount of sympathy for the discarded lady, and Josephine Longworth, William H. Turner, Francis Joyner and Clarence Jay Elmer deserve a word of commendation as members of the cast.

"Mary's Lamb"

A Five-Part Adaptation of Richard Carle's Play, with the Author in the Title Role—Gold Rooster Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WHEN a stage favorite steps from his accustomed place before the footlights, to the screen, the first question that arises in the mind of the prospective spectator is, "Will he get over?" The expression, fraught with tragic suspense, has earned for itself so important a place in the diction of the critic as well as that of his victim, that it ceases to be associated with what is known as slang, establishing a reasonable excuse for its use in the present instance.

Richard Carle "gets over." As the "lamb" in the above named production he is as funny as the funniest, and with Jessie Ralph playing opposite him coaxes a laugh at almost every turn. No somnambulist ever turned a cleverer trick than did Mary's "lamb" on his unwitting spouse, when she came upon the scene in the home of the widow next door, and the "lamb" did his sleep walk with as much fidelity as though it were a reality. Nor could there be a much more amusing tangle than the welcome given the pair of them in the insane asylum.

Scene from "Mary's Lamb" (Pathe).

Donald MacKenzie, who directed the picture, is deserving of a great deal of credit for the able manner in which the play has been handled, as well as its adapter. There are no moments in the production that drag. The action of the play is sufficient at all times to keep interest pitched to a high point; and, although at times it treads on delicate ground, the comedy is never allowed to descend below the high water mark.

A competent supporting cast has been chosen for the portrayal of the various types.

"A Poor Relation"

Biograph Picturization of Heart-Interest Drama Is a Great Success—Thomas Jefferson Plays Noah Vale.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AN EARLIER generation of theatergoers will recall Sol Smith Russell's performance of Noah Vale in "A Poor Relation." It was one of the most popular characterizations of his career. With Thomas Jefferson playing the poor inventor, the Biograph company's version of the venerable drama makes a three-part picture that will touch the emotions of photoplay patrons, just as the stage performance reached the sympathies of audiences in the past. "A Poor Relation" is without a doubt one of the strongest of recent Biograph releases and may be highly recommended to exhibitors, irrespective of the character of their patrons, for its appeal is general. Wherever a sincere, artistically produced drama is enjoyed, these three reels deserve a showing.

Scene from "A Poor Relation" (Biograph).

The situation at the basis of the story is simple enough, in fact it has been used in many photoplays of varying lengths—that of a poor inventor and appealing children dependent upon him for a livelihood—but the treatment is so thoroughly human, the acting so natural and the detail in incidents and settings so convincing that the picture takes on a semblance of life such as few directors have been able to create in handling similar material. Jane Starrett is deserted by her worthless husband; she falls ill, is taken to a hospital and her three little children are given shelter by the kindly Noah Vale, whose heart is out of all proportion to his pocket book.

Scene from "The Painted Lady" (Biograph).

Mr. Jefferson's playing of the scenes in the unheated room that he calls home, and into which he welcomes the pitiable, half-starved children, goes straight to the heart and if these passages of the story need any further appeal to the emotions it is found in the three winsome children who share the inventor's penury. Mildred Foster is an ideal Scollops, Millicent Evans is well cast as the wife and other roles are presented with equal success. The picture follows the original play in all its essentials and offers several spectacular scenes, which, of course, were impossible on the stage. The strike at the factory and the interference of the mounted police is a strong scene handled with plenty of spirit. Many of the exteriors were photographed when the New York streets were covered with snow.

"The Painted Lady."

In some respects this Griffith production, to be reissued by the Biograph company, is a model single-reel drama. The story is perfectly balanced with just enough material for a short subject and it is flawlessly acted. Blanche Sweet has played in a great many pictures since she portrayed "The Painted Lady," but it is doubtful if she has given a more thoroughly artistic performance. She appears as a country girl, too demure and modest to enhance her charms with paint and powder, as does her frivolous sister. She is ignored by the young men of the village, but presently a suitor comes and after a few happy hours the romance ends in a tragedy—a tragedy that wrecks the girl's mind. Miss Sweet's playing of these scenes is superb.

THIS is not Florence Reed's first appearance on the screen. She has appeared to good advantage in other screen productions, but never has she had a better opportunity to do her best, nor has she ever done a better "best" than in the screen version of the George Scarborough play, "At Bay." As the district attorney's daughter she is a wonderful, impetuous creature, rushing headlong into an abyss where she is brought to bay by an overwhelming avalanche of circumstances, from which she is released by adherence to a policy of honesty which is a natural adjunct of the impulsive nature with which the character is imbued.

Power With Pike's Peak.

Edward F. Power, who has been engaged to play characters and act as assistant director with the Pike's Peak Photoplay Company, of the Associated Program, has had a very varied experience in all branches of the theatrical profession. He began his stage career with the old Proctor Stock Company of New York City, graduating from that to the support of such well known stars as Grace George, Mary Mannering, Max Figman, Clara Bloodgood and Ezra Kendall. For the last few seasons he has been in vaudeville, varying that with occasional picture work at the studios of Selig and Essanay.

Betty Gray in "Sunshine and Shadow."

"Sunshine and Shadow" is the name of an Imp-Universal picture soon to be released in which Betty Gray is starred. It was written by her director, Brinsley Shaw, who produced the picture. It is in two reels and Miss Gray reveals a sort of "Peg o' My Heart" type with an entirely original portrayal. Harry Spingler plays opposite Miss Gray in this picture.

D. J. West With Rolfe.

D. J. West, a strikingly fine appearing juvenile, who has been signed by the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., to appear in "Black Fear," a five-part Rolfe-Metro feature in which Grace Elliston is starred, is comparatively a newcomer to motion pictures. Until the big slump in immigration, beginning with the outbreak of the European war, Mr. West was one of the best immigration inspectors in the employ of Uncle Sam at Ellis Island. John W. Noble is directing "Black Fear," and an all-star cast will be seen in the production including, besides Miss Elliston, Edward Brennan and Grace Valentine.

with the utmost clearness in the screen version. Its treatment is thoroughly human, and the effective manner in which what serves almost as a prologue to the rest of the play, establishing a dominant reason for the raid on Flagg's gambling den, has been presented, is worthy of note.

Frank Sheridan as the district attorney, De Witt C. Jennings as Flagg, Charles Waldron as the lover and hero of the play, and Lyster Chambers as the tool of Flagg are names that add weight to a play that is at once a revelry of types and a conquest of moving picture direction.

"I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier"

A Patriotic and Affecting War Photodrama in Four Reels, by Selig, Featuring Harry Mestayer and Miss Eugenie Besserer—Scenario by Gilson Willets.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

GILSON WILLETS, under the title appearing above, has given us a story of deep heart interest and one that will strike every partriotic American as being very timely just now.

The Selig company engaged in its poduction under the direction of Frank Beal shows competency on the part of every member in it, and the war spectacle near the close, while not participated in by real soldiers, has the ear-marks of modern warfare, a statement, however, that must be qualified by excepting a contingent of the enemy's forces, which is seen fighting in white shirts, instead of uniforms.

Chief interest centers in the characters of Mrs. Warrington and her son, Jerry, who are impersonated by Miss Eugenie Besserer and Harry Mestayer. The calls of war claim from Mrs. Warrington both her husband and her only son, and the heart anguish of the wife over the loss of her husband is repeated fifteen years later, by the death in battle of her boy, the hope and joy of her declining years.

It will thus be seen that the part assigned Miss Besserer calls for artful emotional acting, and the pictures reveal that she meets the requirements in a way that commands the sympathy and tears of the spectator. Her strong emotional scenes are not of the maudlin type; they show a deeper seated sorrow, as expressed by the tense face, the quivering lips and the bowed, shrinking figure.

Scene from "I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier" (Selig-V-L-S-E).

The scenes between Miss Besserer and Mr. Mestayer, as devoted mother and son, are always tender and appealing. Mr. Mestayer's acting in the scene where he tells his mother that he has enlisted is brimful of filial devotion and tenderness, and only the ardor of true patriotism enables him to break the news.

That is an affecting scene where the old mother visits the attic in her home while her boy is at the front. We see her bring out of a long forgotten trunk the toy soldiers and cannon which he had played with; also the hat he had worn when wearing his tiny sword. We notice that she shrinks from the toy emblems of strife, but that she presses the battered little hat to her lonely heart.

No one can see Miss Besserer in the role of Mrs. Warrington without being impressed that the lonely women back at home, in war time, are called upon to play a braver part than their men at the front.

James Warrington, the husband, and John Archer, his business partner, are splendid types of the American free man, as impersonated, respectively, by Harry De Vere and Guy Oliver. How Archer attempts to tell the war-made widow that her husband died bravely on the field abounds in compelling sympathy. With his left sleeve dangling empty from the shoulder and his face expressing the pain that his message must bring, Guy Oliver's John Archer is a soldierly, manly character.

Miss Anna Luther presents a most attractive, sweet and winsome American girl, in the role of Mercy Archer. The skillful manner in which she shows that she would much rather have her lover, Jerry Warrington, take his chances with dear in the vanguard, rather than have him at her side scathless, is praiseworthy.

The release date is set for Dec. 23,, through V-L-S-E, Inc

"Body and Soul"

A Feature Starring Florence Rockwell and Released by the World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS production opens most promisingly. There are indications of a strong and simple story, of clever directing and of some degree of originality. The rest of the story does not live up to this promise.

The dramatic basis is the loss of a woman's memory. The woman changes in character and disposition as she loses and finds and then again finds and loses her memory. The convolutions following this shifting memory are at times quite perplexing.

Scene from "Body and Soul" (World Film).

Florence Rockwell, the star of the play, does a lot of hard and conscientious work. She has a most attractive personality, engaging manners and considerable histrionic ability. There are some good settings. The photography is not uniformly good. I think it my duty to say a word about the titles in this picture. They are everything titles should not be. They seek in flowery phrase to explain situations which are perfectly obvious, while some of the obscure situations are left without any illuminating text.

Two Attractive Americans

"Spider Barlow Cuts In" and "The Silver Lining," Creditable Productions Appearing on the Mutual Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE first of the above-named productions is a one-reel comedy-drama to which we hesitate to add the term drama for the reason that in spite of the fact of its being a crook story, comedy is the dominating attribute.

Spider Barlow is impersonated by George Field, who requires no introduction as a successful moving picture crook, who not infrequently steals the honors from the hero. Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen are the lovers in the throes of a prolonged betrothal scene to which Spider is the uninvited witness; while other fortunately endowed players compose the supporting cast.

A cleverly contrived situation, skillfully handled, has served as an excellent vehicle for the comedy business that has been added by way of embellishment, and nothing could be funnier than Spider's ruse to put an end to the love-making, when he takes advantage of a line in the conversation sweetly spoken by the female of the incident: "If you don't go home Father will come down and put you out," and treads the stairs with a heavy tread akin to father's. In a sequel to this situation he hugs the lady from behind the portieres at the same time obtaining the betrothal diamond, while the maiden, believing that her lover has returned, runs playfully away without turning to look. Later a further complication develops while Spider is making away with his burden of household silver, etc., for the lovers have words over the phone on the matter of the disappearance of the diamond. This film is well worth seeing.

The second number of this review, entitled "The Silver Lining," features Winnifred Greenwood, Charles Newton and Alfred Vosburgh, and is a drama which has a strong human appeal. It has not been singled out on account of any particular merit it holds as regards its story, but because of the fidelity of its characterization ,and the simplicity and truth of its detail.

The story treats of a situation frequently portrayed, wherein a young girl is forced to relinquish a position because of the persecutions of her employer. This hackneyed situation, however, resolves itself into another of pathetic interest wherein the consumptive father of the girl commits forgery to save his daughter from reconsidering her decision to hold her virtue. He is, even, in his delicate state of health, sentenced to a long term of imprisonment, but escapes and is harbored by his daughter who is now employed as companion to the mother of a rich young ranchman. Villain number two now comes on the scene and brings the sheriff to rearrest the man, who is found dead on the sheriff's arrival. The production ends prettily when the love story of the girl and the ranchman is brought to a climax.

"The White Scar"

Hobart Bosworth Starred in Five-Part Broadway Universal Feature of Dramatic and Pictorial Quality.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

STAGED in a remarkably picturesque country and finely photographed, "The White Scar," the five-part Broadway Universal feature, to be released on Dec. 6, will delight the eye of picture goers and those who love the primitive. The pictorial quality, however, but supplements the strong drama finely enacted by Hobart Bosworth and his associates. Mr. Bosworth portrays the role of Na-ta-wan-gan, a white trader at a post of the far north. Besides writing the script of the picture, the leading player also is the author of the sub-titles. These take the form of blank verse or free verse, which in substance remind of "Hiawatha." They are not devoid of a certain dignity, in spite of the fact that the rhythm is far from faultless.

Scene from "The White Scar" (Universal).

"The White Scar" is the tale of the love of Na-ta-wan-gan and Janet, the young daughter of the factor of the trading post. The unrequited affection of Wehnonah, an Indian girl, for the trapper provides an interesting subsidiary theme; her self-sacrificing devotion to the interests of Na-ta-wan-gan and those he loves adds to the charm of the story. There are many red men in the cast, and among them are several who show an appreciation of the drama in the making of which they are a part.

Mr. Bosworth's portrayal of the bearded trapper will add to his fine reputation. It is dignified, powerful. Anna Lehr makes an impressive Indian girl. Norval McGregor is Mackintosh, the factor who rules the little community of white and red inhabitants. Jane Novak, is the daughter, who, with her brother, encompasses the escape of the trapper when he has been condemned as a thief and sentenced to go to his death via la long traverse. Her portrayal of Janet, who elopes with Na-ta-wan-gan, following his assumption of the theft for which the girl's brother had been adjudged guilty, is well done. Ronald Bradbury is Henri, the bad young man who makes all the trouble—a convincing characterization—and Frank Newberg is Robert, the brother of Janet.

Na-ta-wan-gan is one of Mr. Bosworth's best impersonations.

"The Victory of Virtue"

Allegory Is Important Part of Five-Reel Picture Released by Exclusive Features, Inc.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

A FORMER Essanay director, Harry McRae Webster, using several players who gained prominence in Essanay productions, made "The Victory of Virtue," which is being handled by Exclusive Features, Inc. That the picture will meet with popuuar approval seems almost certain, for it is an interesting blending of a story of modern life in Washington society and spectacular allegory—the allegory being accounted for by the dream of a young woman who is conscience stricken after she has made one false step. The author, Penelope Knapp, presents the case of the average inexperienced girl, who is in danger of succumbing to the allurements of a social circle in which manners are placed quite a bit higher than morals. The tempter is merely a typical man of the world and their meeting and subsequent affair is made to appear entirely reasonable as the story develops.

Scene from "The Victory of Virtue" (Exclusive).

In fact the opening reels, correctly staged and intelligently acted as they are, present little that is new to society drama. It is only after Penelope has come to taste the bitterness of her experience that the picture takes an unexpected turn. While seated disconsolately in her boudoir, brooding over her indiscretion of the previous night, the Spirit of Virtue comes to take command of her threatened soul and his sway is seriously questioned by the Spirit of Evil. There are a number of excellent double exposures in the scenes preceding Penelope's entrance into the land of make-believe.

During the course of her journey, under the guidance of the two opposing spirits, in turn, she meets figures typifying the seven cardinal sins, visits a joyous court of love, tastes the pleasures of revelry and then finds herself old and discarded. At the conclusion of the dream it is no surprise to learn that Penelope pledges herself to a life of the strictest rectitude. Gerda Holmes acts with feeling throughout the picture and displays considerable versatility in effecting the radical changes in manner and appearance required by the part. Wilmurth Merkyl, playing the man, is of almost equal value to the picture and other essential members of the cast are Rapley Holmes and J. H. Gilmour. The spectacular scenes in the allegorical part of the production are much to the credit of Director Webster.

Triangle Program

A Kay-Bee Production Heads the List for Excellence at the Knickerbocker Theater This Week.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

FIRST on the list is an admirable piece of work by Ince and Sullivan, "The Edge of the Abyss," graceful in spite of its awkward title, strong in spite of occasional weak spots, original in spite of its old situation. The graceful treatment shows an entirely new side of Ince—it is beautiful during social ensembles, a perpetual delight to the eye. There was always a nice balance in his big war ensembles, a sense of proportion and perspective all too rare in massed effects, and this holds good in glimpsing the social life which aroused the ambition of a society girl and caused her to marry less in response to natural impulse than to gratify her selfish desires.

Scene from "The Edge of the Abyss" (Triangle).

The situation soon becomes familiar, busy husband, wife longing for attention, and the other man, in this case a rejected suitor. Following a bitter quarrel, the husband accords his selfish wife freedom by going to live at his club. It is now the other man's turn, and he uses an evening visit to urge an elopement. Now enters a highly moral burglar, of the kind absolutely unknown off the stage, and finds the lover trying to destroy the young wife's future. The burglar owes a debt of gratitude to the husband, so he ties the lover in a chair and reads the wavering wife such a lecture as any good old clergyman might deliver with pride.

Scene from "The Penitentes" (Triangle).

Mr. Burglar saves the young wife, and all ends well, but this would be rather tame material if not handled with rare skill by the director and interpreted by such artists as Mary Boland, Frank Mills and Willard Mack. Every role is finely acted, even to minute psychology, and the settings are exquisite, but honors in this case go to the director.

"The Great Vacuum Robbery" is strong in its appeal to those who "hee-haw" whenever a blow aimed at one individual lands on the head of the very one who was not to be hit, for the action is little else than "see a head and hit it" from start to finish, but it has a lot of real merit beside, particularly in the very original conception of robbing a bank through vacuum tubes from the offices of a bank-protective association. Some of the principals strain themselves at times in an effort to be funny, but there is one artist among them, Louise Fadenza, and a delightful one at that—she is headed straight for success.

"The Penitentes" is a weird story of religious fanatics in Mexico of the 17th Century, given to a yearly repetition of the Crucifixion as an offering to God. It is characterized by a lot of hard and elaborate work and some tremendous ensembles, but it lacks picturesque significance and drags because of constant repetition, especially in the almost perpetual flaunting of the cross. Orrin Johnson gives the only character portrayal that stands out from the mass. The story begins to gather force towards the conclusion and reaches an effective climax, but its forces are too greatly scattered on the way.

"The Gentleman from Indiana"

First of Pallas Pictures Is Excellent Adaptation of Booth Tarkington's Novel Featuring Dustin Farnum.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE Pallas brand of pictures is most auspiciously introduced by this five-part adaptation of one of the finest novels ever written by Booth Tarkington. A more sympathetic and interesting picturization of a famous story seldom has been offered to photoplay patrons, for which the author of the scenario, the director and the able cast headed by Dustin Farnum may divide the credit. "The Gentleman From Indiana," as seen on the screen, is an admirably balanced production, logical in its plot development, true in characterization, dramatic when the big moments of the story are reached and spectacular in the presentation of scenes requiring a large company of supers. And best of all, the picture, in its entirety, is faithful to the phase of American life with which Mr. Tarkington dealt.

Scene from "The Gentleman from Indiana" (Pallas).

Dustin Farnum makes a strong, likable figure of John Harkless, the young man who buys the nearly defunct newspaper in the little town of Plattville, Indiana, and immediately begins doing things. With nothing but his courage to rely upon, he announces a policy that includes the wiping out of the Whitecaps, a band corresponding to the organized gangsters of a city, and the defeat of McCune, who is working for a congressional nomination. Needing a competent assistant in running his paper he picks up a derelict, once a university professor, and through kindness and tact effects his regeneration. Together they win the respect of the honest element in the town's population and against the heaviest odds they vanquish the Whitecaps and the despicable McCune. This conflict forms the central thread of the plot, but a legitimate element of the story is the pretty romance developed between Harkless and Helen Sherwood, played by Winifred Kingston.

Three parts of the picture warrant special mention—the elaborate depiction of a country circus, the storm introducing a number of realistic lighting effects, and the uprising of the people of Plattville when they believe that the Whitecaps have murdered Harkless. If an exhibitor wants drama and excitement in a picture he will find it here and there is much else besides. Herbert Standing, as Joe Frisbee, gives one of the telling characterizations in this admirable production.

Jewell Hunt Joins Vitagraph.

Jewell Hunt, well-known society dancer who formerly conducted the Dolly Varden Studio in Manhattan under the patronage of several society women, is the latest member of the Vitagraph Company. Her dancing ability will be shown to advantage in the films.

"Chimmie Fadden Out West"

Victor Moore as the Bowery Boy Scores a Splendid Success.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

HERE is a feature that I feel safe in praising without any "ifs" or "howevers." As an actor and a laugh-producer Victor Moore is a host in himself. His adventures as a spurious gold digger, his experiences in the sleeping car, his encounters with the miners, his trip through the desert with the intelligent and highly trained mule "Ramona," the mix-up with the "Duchess," the passing through all sorts of dangers after his "discovery" of the golden nuggets will set any audience to laughing loud and long. The titles in the early scenes might have been shortened, but every title after the appearance of "Chimmie" is well chosen and heightens the comedy.

There never was an actor better suited to his part than is Victor Moore to the portrayal of the Bowery Boy who, with all his toughness and all his odd and puzzling ways, has a heart of gold and a very fine sense of honesty. What makes this feature stand out is the total absence of padding and the interesting plot. The laughter comes in an ascending scale, the fun grows faster and more furious as the action develops. Nor is fun the only merit of the feature. There is a vein of pathos which the audience in the Strand appreciated very highly. For this pathos Mrs. Lewis McCord is largely responsible. This artist is absolutely unsurpassed in such parts as that of an old Irishwoman. I have seen nothing finer since the days of Annie Yeamans. The evident lavishness of the play makes an irresistible appeal, too. Take but one example. "Chimmie Fadden" by mistake pulls the emergency rope in his berth. Instantly we see the result in the cab of the engineer—the sudden confusion and disturbance, and then we see it no more. Not a single flash-back to a scene that must have involved lots of labor and lots of expense, but the action did not call for a "flash-back," hence there was none. In these days of unconscionable padding an incident like this deserves special mention.

Scene from "Chimmie Fadden Out West" (Lasky).

Some of the minor characters did not show up as well as they might have, neither Ernest Joy nor Henry Hadfield were as convincing as they might have been. Camille Astor as the "Duchess" gave a most satisfactory portrayal of the sweetheart of "Chimmie." Summing up I would say that the feature was wholesome, laughable, interesting from start to finish and replete with the touches of beauty and perfect detail for which Lasky productions are known and loved.

"Not Guilty"

Triumph-Equitable Five-Part Picture Based on Play of Same Name—Cyril Scott Starred.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE lesson in the five-reel picture, produced by Joseph Golden for the Equitable program, is wholesome and sufficiently obvious. Several lives are ruined and many years of misery result from an act that seemed harmless enough in itself. A blameless clerk goes to a saloon with a friend to drink a glass of beer to the health of a new member of the family, just arrived. And another man standing at the bar picks a fight. The blow that he invites results in his death, and the innocent clerk—his friend struck the blow—is convicted of murder. After a persistent struggle to save his life, the clerk spends twenty years in Sing Sing before receiving a pardon from the governor. Such is the basis of the story, used in a stage play and successfully revived in a picture.

Now if the clerk had remained at home on the fateful evening that a child was born to his wife he probably never would have become entangled in the network of misfortune from which there was no escape. There would have been no such drama as one finds in "Not Guilty" and photoplay patrons would have missed an appealing heart-interest picture, carefully produced by Director Golden and sincerely acted by Cyril Scott as the clerk, Ada Boshell as his mother and Catherine Proctor as his wife. Mr. Scott, generally seen on the stage in light comedy, gives an entirely natural interpretation of the clerk, who becomes so hopelessly the victim of circumstances. His transformation from a happy youth to a man broken in spirit is convincing.

Some of the most effective scenes in the picture were photographed at Sing Sing, others at Albany, where the convict's mother appeals to the governor for commutation of the death sentence imposed on her son. The trial scene was conducted with a due regard for legal procedure and even in less dramatic parts of the picture the director evidently took pains to make the production lifelike. There is a true touch in the last reel, showing how difficult it is for an ex-convict to re-establish himself in society after he has been released from jail.

"Graft"

Universal Presents First of New Serial in Which the Various Episodes Are Suggested by Famous Authors.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE will undoubtedly be great public interest in this new serial, as each of the sixteen two-reel instalments will be sponsored by a famous American author. Hobart Henley, Glen White and Jane Novak have the principal roles and are to continue through the series. Hugh Weir and Joe Brandt are doing the scenario work.

Scene from "Graft" (Universal).

Action and highly-colored incidents are promised for the series, judging by the first instalment. This features the young hero rounding up a combination of liquor dealers, known as "The Fifteen." The second instalment will deal with the tenement-house trust, so the observer can get an idea of what may be expected. In addition to telling a lively, exciting sory of a melodramatic turn, something will be accomplished for the public welfare also, which gives the various instalments a good central motive.

In the first number, which bears the separate title, "Liquor and the Law," the district attorney is murdered by order of "The Fifteen," after a vote taken in secret session. His son takes us the work of fighting the liquor interests, at his father's dying request. The love interest is nicely worked in, the girl being the daughter of one of the band, unknown to the hero.

"A Submarine Pirate"

Two-Reel Triangle-Keystone on Entirely New Lines.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

SENNET has masked some fascinating and vitally interesting pictures of a real submarine in action behind a bright farce comedy called "A Submarine Pirate," has pretended to submerge the live question of submarine attack in a roaring farce, and he has produced a winner, one of the best examples of his art yet shown. The movements of the vessel in a sham attack on a passenger steamer are taken from aboard of her part of the time, part of the time from a third boat, a swift series of operations such as have never before been shown on the screen, the company performers playing their parts on what has every sign of being a genuine coast submarine from the United States Navy.

Scene from "A Submarine Pirate" (Triangle).

The company scenes are not confined to the studio-built interior of the submarine; they take place on the needle-like vessel while she is running on the surface, diving and emerging from hidden depths. Syd Chaplin, in a second-hand Admiral's suit, is in charge having seized the vessel by a strategem, and there is apparently nothing faked about his exploits on the deck when he is shut out of the manhole as the vessel is about to dive. The realistic touch, brought constantly into contrast with a running farce in the imaginary hold of the boat sets the whole story apart as a noteworthy achievement in that difficult, if delightful, art of making people laugh.

"Madame La Presidente" Selected for Anna Held.

Closely following the arrival of Anna Held in Los Angeles to appear before the motion picture camera at the Oliver Morosco studios, the Eastern offices of this Paramount organization announced its acquisition of the screen rights on the international stage success, "Madame La Presidente," in which production the famous star will make her film debut.

In securing "Madame La Presidente" for Anna Held, Oliver Morosco has obtained a vehicle in which the noted star should prove a big success, as the title character is particularly adapted to her talents. The play, by Maurico Hennequin and Pierre Veber, has proved itself a big international success, having toured the principal Continental cities of Europe, including Paris, Berlin, Vienna and Milan. In this country it was first produced on Broadway at the Garrick theater, where it played to record business for over a year, with Fannie Ward in the title role.

The story deals with the adventures in a staid French provincial town, of Gray of Gobette, the beautiful leading woman of a musical troupe playing there. She has given a late supper at the hotel to some of the other thespians and this meets with the disapproval of the village president, who orders the players from the hotel. Gobette, having no place to spend the night, goes to the house of the president. His wife is absent and she makes herself at home. He finds her there when he returns from seeing his wife off on her way to Paris. His superior, the Minister of Justice, arrives unexpectedly and to avoid suspicion the actress is introduced as the president's wife. The minister falls in love with the actress and a series of complications ensues when the president's real wife returns, which are finally straightened out after much cause for worry on the part of both the minister and the president.

Matters in Litigation

Sues Edison, Inc., on Contract.

AN UNUSUAL action in equity has been filed in the United States District Court against Thomas A. Edison, incorporated, on what is alleged to be a refusal to repay some $80,000 which had been paid over in this city on a contract to rent kinetophones, films and records. The plaintiff is Charles B. Clendenen, of New York, as assignee of the contract entered into by the Societe Kinetophon Edison Gesellschaft, of Austria.

The bill alleges that in June, 1913, a contract was made between the Edison company and the Austrian concern whereby the latter was to have the sole right to use the synchronizing machines, films and records produced by Edison throughout all of Europe, Britain excluded, for two years. The Austrian company was to pay 400,000 Kronen, at the market rate in advance for the rights and $500 each for every machine and its accompanying films, records, etc.

There was a clause in the contract whereby it should be void under circumstances of the act of God, rioting or war, if the laws of the homeland of the Austrian contracting party made it illegal to trade with belligerent countries, or their laws affected Austrian interests in this manner.

The bill alleges that on June 14, 1914, the sum of $80,322 was paid in this city to Edison in carrying out the contract and an additional sum of $500 under the terms regulating the actual use of the machines, etc. This sum represented the then market value of 400,000 kronen, Austrian money. In less than two months the outbreak of the European war and the sudden embargo placed by belligerents against each others' industries, etc., made it impossible for the Austrians to carry out the contract.

The contract was assigned to Clendenen, who sues in equity asserting he has no adequate remedy at law. He claims the money paid was paid for a complete fulfilment of the contract and that it was not the fault of the Austrian company that it could not go on with the business. He says the Edison people, though requested, refuses to pay back the sum or any part of it. He demands the $80,322 with interest from June 14, 1914.

The defending company insists it has carried out its full share of the contract to date and is ready and willing to complete it for the contractural term of two full years. It says it is not at fault that the contract is rendered void and should not be held to account in equity for conditions it neither created nor can control.

Happy Hooligan in Court.

Suit has been filed in the United States District Court by The Star Company against the Nonpareil Feature Film Corporations, of 1482 Broadway, setting up an infringement of the copyright to the cartoons and character of "Happy Hooligan."

The Star company, successor to the New York Journal and Evening Journal, shows a lot of exhibits of the cartoons and its acquirement of the rights to them in all methods of publication from the newspapers. The bill then says that the defendant company commenced the display of a photo play of this noted picture series at the Park Row theater October 15, last.

The bill sets up that the photoplay is built around the Hooligan series designed and created by Frederic Opper and of which plaintiff owns the copyright. It is alleged that the defendant's play could not have been constructed from any other design and that the plaintiff's rights have been invaded. The prayer is for injunction, forfeits of all reels, negatives, etc., and an accounting. Judge Charles M. Hough issued an order to the defendant to show cause on Nov. 26, why an injunction should not be issued.

The withdrawal of the complaint in the case of Bray against Palmer, brought in the United States District Court on charges of infringement of processes claimed to be the inventions of the plaintiff for adapting cartoons to motion pictures, notice of which was published in the Moving Picture World of last week, brings out the further fact that Mr. Bray withdrew his first action for the purpose of bringing another which would include further patents just granted to him.

The case against Palmer was called just two days before the latter patents were granted—Nov. 9—which fact was explained to Judge Thomas, before whom the case was to be tried. It was upon this representation that the plaintiff was allowed to withdraw his suit. Other action will be started at once and the merits of the inventions of Mr. Bray will be properly adjudicated.

"The Grey Mask."

The release date of "The Grey Mask" has been hastened from Dec. 13 to Dec. 6. This is a very powerful detective drama, over which Frank Crane, the producer, has taken the greatest pains. Frank always gives you a story and a thrill. In this picture the famous actor, Edwin Arden, makes a contribution to the motion picture screen in the part of the young detective who has to wear a grey mask in order to shield his ends, which will rank him as one of the most consummate motion picture actors of the time. Miss Barbara Tennant makes a welcome appearance in the picture. It will be found a striking story with good sets and admirable photography. The cast is excellent. Frank Crane is a sure-fire director.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"BROADCLOTH AND BUCKSKIN" (Mustang)...

"Broadcloth and Buckskin," the latest of the American's two-reel Mustang dramas, is a breezy story of the West, with F. Forrest Taylor, Jack Richardson, Anna Little and Louise Lester in the leading roles. A "tenderfoot" goes to the far West, and with his polished city manner airily walks off with the prize of the West—the charming Ruth Cameron, with whom Jack Richardson, in the role of Walt Baird, is desperately in love. Jack mournfully muses that "women love the city men—and only the cows love the cowboys." There's a wealth of spectacular action in "Broadcloth and Buckskin," plenty of shooting and an artistic bit of rope climbing furnished by Jack Richardson. Jack manfully goes to the rescue of his "cityfied" rival saving him from the clutches of an evil band of Western bandits.

Scene from "Broadcloth and Buckskin" (Mustang).

Miss Little appears at her very best in "Broadcloth and Buckskin" which is scheduled for release through the Mutual on December 3.

PERSONALITY IN "MOLLY MADE GOOD."

Personality, and plenty of it, is the corner stone upon which the success of "How Molly Made Good," the Kulee Feature film with twelve stars in its cast, is built. The picture was released for New York showing early in November and has been going a round of the city's picture houses since then and scoring heavily at each performance.

There is plenty of good plot in the feature film. Burns Mantle, dramatic critic on the New York Evening Mail, took care of that when he wrote the scenario. But when all is said and done it is the personality represented in the picture which makes the biggest innings with the public. The Kulee Features, Inc., were clever in putting to account the fact the personality is the basic factor in the making of an artist.

In "How Molly Made Good" there is a greater marshalling of personality than has ever before graced any single cast either in the legitimate or moving picture fields. It is a case of personality raised to the twelfth degree. The Kulee Features, Inc., have combined twelve of the biggest artists in the dramatic world—Leo Ditrichstein, Henrietta Crosman, Robert Edeson, May Robson, Cyril Scott, Julia Dean, Julian Eltinge, Lulu Glaser, Henry Kolker, Charles J. Ross, Mabel Fenton and Mme. Fjorde, of the Royal Opera, Berlin. Each and every one of these is supreme artist and master craftsman in his own right and each and all of them are featured in the cast of "How Molly Made Good."

To make the toll of personality complete, the Kulee Features have provided each of these artists with a role best fitted to exploit his individual appeal. The picure brings to the screen an intimate glimpse into the home life of these artists. Their families and friends are all as necessary and vital a part of the story as are the actors. And through it all the "Molly" interest runs—the chain upon which the diversified star interests are linked into a continuous whole.

It is all very ingenious, and small wonder that "How Molly Made Good" is playing "capacity business" wherever it is shown. It is booked for many weeks to come right here in New York City and at the same time has started on its round of all the towns and cities of the country. The City theater has it this week, where it bids fair to break all records as a box office winner.

REEVES COMEDIES POPULAR.

Last Saturday the first of the Metcalfe directed Reeves comedies was released, "His Three Brides," and since that date two more have gone forward to the exchanges, "His Wife's New Lid" and "Blaming the Duck or Ducking the Blame."

Since their release compliment upon compliment has been showered upon both Metcalfe and the Lubin company and the new style of handling Reeves, the idea of Metcalfe from its inception to completion, has met with an enthusiastic and instant approval from all over the country.

Metcalfe is at present at work upon the completion of the fourth of his new Billie Reeves series, "Bashful Billie," which is from the pen of Shannon Fife of the Lubin script staff, and which the Earl of Lubinville proclaims will stick his stock and Reeves up even a little bit higher.

FLOOD SCENE IN "THE IMMIGRANT."

The work of two hundred artisans who had spent weeks in constructing a model small town in a small valley on Lasky Ranch, near Los Angeles, was swept away within fifteen minutes last week all for the purpose of supplying one of the thrilling scenes in the production entitled "The Immigrant," in which Valeska Suratt appears as the star.

The stunning Miss Suratt, who has laid aside her gorgeous costumes to assume the mild attire of a Russian peasant girl in this new Paramount picture, makes her debut as a Lasky star in this original photoplay by Marion Fairfax.

The location for staging the "flood" was admirably suited to the purposes. Plans for the taking of this picture were made months ago when engineers first began the work of constructing a dam across the bed of a river which runs through the ranch. It was the scheme of action that by the time the late fall rains swelled the river, the dam would be blown up and the flood of water let loose over the valley. Meanwhile a score or more of frame houses were constructed in the path of the coming flood.

Scene from "The Immigrant" (Lasky).

With the permission of authorities, the dam was blown up last week and the scene of destruction witnessed by several hundred persons from Los Angeles who had made the trip to the ranch as guests of Jesse L. Lasky. Beyond the fact that all the carefully made plans and arrangements worked to a successful conclusion, there was no mishap to mar the day, no thrilling motion picture rescues. The breaking of the dam was the climax of the photoplay.

LOOK OUT FOR THIS SWINDLER.

Warning is hereby given that there is a swindler going about the country representing himself as a Pathe district manager or inspector. He has succeeded on several occasions in obtaining money from hotels and managers of theaters by means of worthless checks. He is described as follows: Age, 40 years; slender, fair complexion with sandy hair. He is a cripple (right leg cut off at knee), uses crutches, explaining that his artificial limb is being repaired. He is a fluent talker and thoroughly familiar with the film and theatrical business. He also represents himself as a former advance man for the Jess Willard Circus.

He has, during October, been operating at Hamilton and Newark, O.; also at Huntingburg, Indiana. He has used the following aliases: "H. E. Glenn, C. H. Sherman, H. C. Sherman and Mr. Shermheimer."

Kindly forward any information you may secure on the above matter to Ralph Navarro, Chief Inspector, Pathe Exchange, Inc., 25 West 45th St., New York City, or any local office of the Pinkerton National Detective Agency.

PIERCE ON EASTERN TRIP.

Carl H. Pierce, Special Representative of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, left last Monday for an extended trip throughout New England, visiting exhibitors and newspapers en route in the interest of his company. Mr. Pierce expects to be gone until the latter part of the month during which time he will probably visit practically every Paramount exhibitor in New England States.

"DIVORCONS" (Biograph).

When a man enters the sitting room of his home and finds his wife kissing another man, the usual course of procedure is a big stormy scene followed by a climax for which all three are sorry. That is drama. But Sardou was not looking for dramatic situations when he wrote this sparkling farce; he wanted comedy, and accordingly he had the husband encourage the attentions of his wife's new lover—even went so far as to turn his wife over to him—and then put her to the supreme test by bringing another woman in the case.

Scene from "Divorcons" (Biograph).

That is the simple story of Biograph's four-reel adaptation of Sardou's farce, "Divorcons," which promises to find its way to the top of the list of successful multiple-reel comedies.

It is a comedy as it should be; a good, clean, healthy farce, entirely void of forced situations. Rather the contrary, the genuine farcical situations, following as they do, smoothly, are sure to register one long continous laugh, at times boisterous and then again cause that inward laugh which is produced by dry humor; but all the while it may be depended on to keep the spectator in cheerful spirits.

"Divorcons" will be released on the regular service of the General Film program Wednesday, Dec. 15.

BIG BEAR FEATURES IN CHICAGO.

The reception of Bell's Big Bear Features by the Chicago exhibition field has proven far beyond the expectations of all. Mr. Bell, in commenting on the many words of praise and congratulatory messages received by him the past week, said that the entire credit was due the pictures and not he, as he was very certain that the Great Northern films, which he has contracted for, represented the acme of perfection in feature pictures and were bound to be appreciated by both the exhibitors and their patrons.

"TO THE VILE DUST" (Kalem).

Actual scenes in the Mojave Desert showing a flock of buzzards hovering over a half-crazed man wandering in the sands are shown in Kalem's new $10,000 series "Stingaree." The buzzards, liberated by James W. Horne, who is directing the series, were taken from the Glendale studio to the desert to add a touch of realism to the scenes in "To The Vile Dust," an episode of the photoplay adapted from E. W. Hornung's celebrated novel.

Stingaree and his partner rescue a man wandering in the desert, the whimsical outlaw befriending the man after he was half dead with thirst.

Scene from "To the Vile Dust" (Kalem).

In return for this kindness the man attempts to capture Stingaree and secure the reward offered for his arrest. Stingaree becomes incensed at the ingratitude of the man and takes him back to the desert leaving him there. It was then that the buzzards circling overhead wait for the man to drop.

Similiar touches of realism are given to all of the other episodes of this series, starting with "An Enemy of Mankind," the first of the two-act dramas which will be released during the present month.

Those who have read the stories of the adventures of Stingaree in Australia will welcome the announcement that they have been adapted to the screen by the Kalem Company and are being released weekly. That those who have not read the stories might follow with added interest each succeeding episode the Kalem Company has made arrangements with 1,200 newspapers throughout the United States to publish the tales simultaneously with the release of each production.

FRANCIS FORD DUPLICATES WAR ENGINE.

The accompanying illustration shows to what lengths Francis Ford goes in making his scenes in the "Broken Coin" serial realistic. In the battle scenes between the forces of Grettzhoffen and Grahaffen he has been to some pains to duplicate as nearly as possible the war machines of present-day military organizations.

Armored Car Used in "The Broken Coin."

The armored car shown in the illustration is a duplicate of many in use at present in the European conflict. That it figures prominently in the story may be guessed after one glance at the illustration, showing it plunging through the barred gates amid the rain of shot from the guns of the opposing army.

"STINGAREE" BUTTONS.

"Let your patrons do your advertising," is the idea back of the novel buttons which Kalem Company is issuing to aid exhibitors in boosting the $10,000 Hornung series, "Stingaree." The buttons are provided the exhibitor at so low a price that he can well afford to secure a large quantity for distribution to his patrons and the result is that each member of the audience who goes out wearing a "Stingaree" button becomes a walking advertisement for the series and the theater which is showing it in that particular locality.

Kalem originated the use of buttons as a pubilicity aid with "Midnight at Maxim's," the four-reel novelty hit. On that single picture close to two million of the buttons were issued, a figure that Kalem officials never dreamed of reaching when the idea was taken up. Since "Midnight at Maxim's" was but a single production and "Stingaree" is being released in twelve weekly two-act episodes, it is confidently expected that over ten million of the buttons will be scattered throughout the country.

The "Stingaree" button, like its predecessor, the dancing girl of Maxim's, is neat and effective. It shows E. W. Hornung's famous character with the snow white horse that figures so prominently in the stories. The buttons are being supplied to exhibitors at a price of $4.50 per thousand.

"FOR HER SON" (Great Northern).

Betty Nansen, the internationally popular royal actress, plays the leading role in the Great Northern Film Company's latest release entitled "For Her Son." She magnificently portrays the part of Mrs. Garvin, the doting mother, who has been shielding her son, Ralph, since his early childhood, and whose faults have become more grave as the years advance.

After a short vacation at the parental home Ralph returns to his studies; in order to liquidate his indebtedness his mother accompanies him to the city so as to raise the necessary amount, but Ralph lavishes both his time and the money in the company of Gladys, an actress. Ralph finally degrades to the extent that he obtains funds from a loan-shark to whom he issues a note, and forges the name of John Grant, his father's friend, as the endorser. At the expiration of the note same is presented to Grant, and he honors it, hoping by this means to get Mrs. Garvin, with whom he is enamoured, into his power. She spurns his advances and indignantly leaves him. Soon after her departure Mr. Garvin enters his friend's house, and having learned of his wife's secret visit, he accuses her of infidelity and forbids her his home.

Scene from "For Her Son" (Great Northern).

She then supports herself and son. Ralph still continues his relation with Gladys, heedless of his mother's pleading to leave her. She finally tells him not to see her until he has made up his mind to reform; that evening, when Ralph calls to ask her for more money, she admits him, believing he has reformed. In an opportune moment Ralph steals some money, but is discovered in the act by his horrified mother, who quickly makes him depart. A maid, thinking burglars have entered, summons the police, but Mrs. Garvin is not prosecuted. Shortly thereafter the dead body of Ralph is carried in, he having hurled himself in the path of a speeding motor car.

"THE EDGE OF THINGS" (Essanay).

This is a pleasing love story, its three reels filled with heart interest. It depicts the life of an orphan girl and her struggle to live in a great city. Inevitable temptations come because the girl is poor and beautiful. This phase of the present economical and social conditions of the large cities is brought out with force by Edna Mayo, who plays the part of the orphan. The picture of poverty, temptation and peril facing girls of this class is largely suggestive, however, it giving way early in the picture to the more pleasing events that take place after the girl is found exhausted in front of an apartment, where she finally falls in her unsuccessful struggle with the world. There she is found by a wealthy and happy-go-lucky young clubman, who takes pity on the girl and befriends her. But even he attempts to take advantage of the girl. She blazes into a fury to think that her only friend could stoop so low and strikes him with a poker, leaving him for dead. Detectives are called and the one that finds her is her own brother from whom she had been separated in childhood. The victim proves not to have been badly injured, however. He is sobered and realizes his insult to the girl whom he really loves. This he finally reveals to her. Bryant Washbnrn, as the clubman, gives an excellent portrayal of his part.

Scene from "The Edge of Things" (Essanay).

CENTAUR-STANLEY SERIES CONCLUDED.

The seventh and concluding episode of the Centaur Features, "Stanley in Africa" series, based on the thrilling adventures of the Henry M. Stanley expedition sent by the New York Herald some years ago into wildest Africa to recover Doctor Livingston, the lost missionary, will be released on the Mutual program December 9. It is in two reels, as are all of the former releases, and is entitled "Stanley in Darkest Africa."

From exhibitors running the series comes the word that the pictures have proved a big drawing card partly because of the familiarity of motion picture patrons with the stories. At the time of the expedition columns of news matter of the episodes of the trip were related, the effect of which has been reflected to the gain of exhibitors.

Of greatest advantage, however, and of paramount importance in attracting patrons, was the fact that the pictures served to introduce some of the famous Bostock animals in the roles of motion picture players. In this, as well as in all other respects, the series was a rare novelty.

Following this last episode will come Centaur Feature animal pictures of varying nature, each bringing in a full share of the Bostock animals.

CAST COMPLETED FOR "THE RUSE."

Director Eugene Mullin has completed his cast for "The Ruse," an original drama, which he will put into immediate production for the Vitagraph Company. Joseph Kilgour, Naomi Childers, Harry Morey, Charles Kent and Denton Vane are the players who will be seen in the principal parts.

Miss Marguerite Courtot, supported by a cast that includes Richard Purdon and Bradley Barker, has completed work on "A Society Schemer," an episode of Kalem's series, "The Ventures of Marguerite." This production will be released November 26th.

EXTRA PRINTS OF THE GRACE VALENTINE PHOTODRAMA.

Just on the strength of the advance notices and pictures, the Mutual Film Corporation has received enough orders for "The New Adam and Eve" to warrant the order of extra prints from the Gaumont Company. This multiple reel photodrama, which is released Nov. 21, is a Rialto Star Feature which presents Miss Grace Valentine in a stellar role.

Freeport's Nordica Theater

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE grand opening of The Nordica, the new moving picture house at Freeport, Me., was the big event of November in this part of the state. The theater is not yet entirely completed, but is enough along to have the performances, and that the people of Freeport appreciate what Manager Mortimer has done in putting up this fine amusement house in Freeport was shown by the way they packed the house, for every one of the 400 seats were taken and many had to stand through the performance.

Rev. Otto S. Raspe was present and gave a short address, congratulating the town and Manager Mortimer on the event, which he characterized as an important one for the town. The speaker took a stand for clean pictures and said if the people of the town wanted them, the management would have to furnish them, and he called for the people to demand clean pictures.

F. E. Mortimer.

The theater is well adapted for the purpose for which it was built, the arrangement being complete in every detail. The Freeport newspaper doubts if there is another town in Maine the size of Freeport that can boast such a fine theater.

Frederick E. Mortimer, who, incidentally is the inventor of the Mortimer film cleaner, and "the man who made South Freeport famous" is the manager, and the remainder of the staff is as follows: Jennie E. H. Mortimer, treasurer; A. A. Roberts, stage manager; C. H. Guppy, ticket taker; J. Howell, chief operator; Marion Chase, musical director; Carl Roberts, traps.

"The Diamond from the Sky" and "The Broken Coin" are now running at the new house.

HOW MAINE TEACHERS STAND.

At the recent convention of the Maine Teachers' Association, held in Bangor, with about 3,500 teachers present, the following was among the resolutions adopted:

"While realizing the great educational value of the motion picture film and while we look forward to a wider use of visual instruction in the public schools, we deplore its commercial features, its sensationalism, its presentation of lower standards of life, the low price of admission which makes frequent attendance possible, thus greatly interfering with school work. We urge the members of this association to use locally their influence to lift the standard of entertainment and to regulate the frequency of attendance of school children."

GEORGE APPLEBY GOES TO THE HAVERHILL STRAND.

Further details regarding the moving of George I. Appleby of the Empire theater in Portland to the Strand at Haverhill, Mass., are at hand. While Mr. Appleby has been manager of the Empire only one year, he was located in Portland previous to that time, having been the manager of the Mutual Film Corporation headquarters in Portland. As manager of the Empire, Mr. Appleby made hosts of friends who regret his departure, but extend the best wishes for success in the new position.

During the time he has been manager of the Empire, he has secured for Portland theatregoers some of the biggest photoplay masterpieces, including "Cabiria," "Neptune's Daughter," "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and the William Fox version of "Carmen." He made many changes in the Empire in the past year, improving the lighting service and securing the services of a splendid orchestra.

Before coming to Portland, Mr. Appleby managed the Star theater in Boston, and he is known throughout New England as one of the most efficient film men in New England.

Feeney, in Portland, Me., during the past week, wrote the scenario for a two-reel picture, "Chicken-Hearted Jim," and enlisted the services of friends, relatives and prominent Portland people for his troop. Pictures were taken at the Elks' home, the Ricker estate, and at the Feeney home. The chief of police, several officers and Jack Ford were in the cast. The company was "taken" in the harbor on board the schooner Lizzie J. Clark, which was chartered for the purpose.

New Inman Square House

Cambridge, Mass., Sees Opening of What Is Believed the Most Beautiful Playhouse in the State—Will Accommodate 1,000 Persons—Its Decorations and Furnishings.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Inman Square theater, the latest house in Cambridge, was opened during the past week. The new theater is believed to be one of the most beautiful picture playhouses in the state. It is a brick structure of the Roman classic Corinthian order. Two entrances have been provided.

Constant light during the projection of the pictures is provided in the main auditorium. There are accommodations for 1,000 persons on the main floor and the balcony. The ceiling contains ten panels enclosed with Corinthian entablature, finished in pearl and French gray, with gold trimmings. The lighting system is indirect, with clusters suspended in specially designed chandeliers from gold wreathed center pieces. The upper walls are finished with old rose panels and gold mountings. Pilasters are finished in pearly gay with gold base and capitals. The lower walls are finished in old rose silk damask effect with burlap wainscoting pannelled in golden oak.

There are boxes on either side finished in gold, old rose base, with silk portieres, which adjoin a proscenium arch. The heating will be a vapor system, indirect, with an intake fan supplying fresh heated air, while an exhaust fan expels the air from the front of the building.

On the mezzanine floor are the ladies' parlor, the store room and the manager's office. The gentlemen's retiring room is on the ground floor.

The main entrance, lobby and foyer are finished with Italian marble dado and marble mosaic floors.

Governor David I. Walsh and several state and city officials were the guests of the management at the opening of the house.

Some weeks ago the committee conferred with the mayor and he agreed to consider its report and talk with the managers.

Up to Cincinnati's Mayor

City Council Passes New Ordinance Ludicrously Unfair and Grossly Savoring of Class Legislation—Demands That Picture Houses Employ Extra Man to Do Nothing—Exhibitors Have Put It Up to the Mayor.

IN spite of protests of exhibitors of Cincinnati, one of the several ordinances advocated before the city council for the exclusive benefit of labor organizations was passed last week. This was the measure providing that the larger moving picture houses employ a "stage hand" to take charge of the stage, although there is no scenery used in any of the houses, no lighting effects to be taken care of, and automatic curtains are used exclusively. In other words, the employe thus required by the ordinance will have virtually nothing to do unless some special duties are sought out for him, and as the union requirements are very strict on the subject of doing things outside of the usual requirements of the position, it is hardly likely that this can be done.

The gross unfairness of the ordinance, which was backed by the stage hands' organization, resulted in an organized protest on the part of the exhibitors at the time of its introduction. The council put it through unexpectedly, and immediately thereafter a delegation from the exhibitors appeared before the mayor to urge that he veto the measure. It was pointed out that under the State and local provisions applicable to moving picture and other theaters a stage hand would have nothing whatever to do in a photoplay house but sit around and draw $21 a week. It is estimated that approximately 75 additional men will be employed if the ordinance becomes enforceable by the mayor's signature, which means an additional expense to local exhibitors of over $80,000 a year. The mayor promised that he would consult the building commissioner and the chief of the fire department before doing anything, and it is hoped by the exhibitors that he may decide to veto the measure. As the veto power is very seldom used by the mayor, however, it is the general feeling that the ordinance is as good as in force now, and the exhibitors are not by any means pleased with it.

Plans of Five-A Studios.

Director Rex Weber, of the Five-A Studios, has completed arrangements with the International Film Products Co., of Cincinnati, for the use of its studio, at Dixmyth and Clifton avenues, for his interior producing work, and will cooperate with that company in the production of a series of educational pictures, releasing one a week for the general market. Other work of interest is on the program, but cannot yet be announced. The course of instruction in acting for the camera, which is one of the interesting departments of the Five-A organization's work now, has about twenty-five students, and has gained considerable prestige by the arrangement made by the Schuster School, a well-known Cincinnati dramatic school, for its use by Schuster students desiring special instruction in moving picture work.

Two Big Features Coming to Pathe Exchange.

Manager C. E. Holah, the busy head of the Cincinnati Pathe office, is looking forward to a pair of the biggest features turned loose by the Pathe organization this year, according to reports he has received. One of these is "At Bay," which is credited with a run of 18 months on the stage in New York, while the other is a film version of Locke's "Beloved Vagabond," featuring Edwin Arden, who starred in another film dramatization of a Locke novel, "Simon the Jester." "Nedra," a dramatization of the well-known McCutcheon novel, was released last week, and is "going big," Manager Holah reports.

Mutual Loses Film.

The Mutual local office suffered the loss last week of three reels of pictures, valued at $1,000, which have not yet been recovered. Films are very seldom stolen, by reason of the ease with which they can be traced, but on this occasion they were taken by some person from the rear platform of a street car, while being returned to the company by an employe of the Valley theater, in Elmwood. When the case was looked for it was gone, and has not yet been recovered.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Highland Film Reorganization.

James T. Ford, who has been president of the Highland Film Corporation, of Cincinnati, ever since its organization, announced a few days ago that a reorganization of the company is in course of completion which will involve his resignation as president and his selection as second vice president, and the election of a prominent business man as president. A number of new directors, most of them local business men, will also be elected, it is understood.

Harry Glick, who has for some time owned and conducted the Wonderland theater, at Urbana, O., has disposed of the house, James Funderburg, formerly of Tippecanoe City, O., being the purchaser. Mr. Funderburg took charge immediately, although Mr. Glick remained with him a few days to show him the ropes. The Wonderland is the pioneer house in Urbana, and has always done a good business. Some improvements may be made by the new management.

The Jewel theater, of Hamilton, O., has joined the ranks of the feature houses, announcing recently a change of its policy to that of showing a big feature at every performance. World, Kleine-Edison, Equitable and Mutual features will be shown.

Boston Exhibitors Ball to Be a Great Event

Advance Sale of Tickets and Boxes Exceeds Committee's Hopes—Winner of the American Contest Will Lead in Grand March with Governor.

THE arrangements for the third annual ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts are rapidly progressing. The affair, as has been noted, will be held in the Boston Arena on the night of Dec. 1.

Last year this ball was universally acknowledged to be the greatest social success of New England. Twenty-two film favorites who attended the affair were greeted by almost ten thousand persons, while five thousand others failed to secure admission to the ballroom.

In order that there might not be any traffic congestion on the night of the ball Captain Thomas F. Goode, in whose precinct the ballroom is located, has issued orders that St. Botolph street shall be a one way street.

The advance sale of tckets and boxes has exceeded the fondest hopes of the executive committee. This success is entirely due to the work of Chairman Sam Grant and his unique publicity methods.

A large number of the manufacturers have promised that their stars will be in attendance at the affair and at the present time great interest is manifest in the popularity contest now running in the Boston American. The winner of the contest will lead the double sextet grand march with Governor David I. Walsh. The next ten actors and actresses will compose the sextet.

Curfew in Cleveland

Ohio League's Ideas About Unescorted Children in Shows at Night Being Followed by Cleveland Exhibitors—Patrolmen Now Order Kiddies from Theaters at Nine Every Night—Picture Men Like the Rule.

By J. D. Raridan, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CHILDREN are barred from Cleveland motion picture theaters after 9 o'clock at night unless accompanied by parents, under the new curfew plan just put in operation in Cleveland. The idea originated with Judge Addams of the Cuyahoga county juvenile court, but has the endorsement of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

At the recent convention here of the Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, practically every exhibitor in the state agreed to enforce a curfew rule to keep unescorted children from theaters at night, but the Cleveland exhibitors are the first to get the idea in actual operation.

At the request of Judge Addams, a police order was issued several days ago, instructing patrolmen to enforce the curfew plan by ordering children from the theaters after 9 o'clock. For a fortnight prior to the beginning of the operation of the plan, the announcement of its enforcement after November 15 was flashed on the screen of every theater nightly.

According to B. J. Sawyer, president of the Cleveland Exhibitors' League, the curfew idea is not only designed to eliminate the possibility of complaints from juvenile court authorities that picture theaters are keeping children from their homes at night, but to protect adult patrons from possible annoyance by unescorted children who remain in the theaters after witnessing one show.

"BELLA DONNA" FORBIDDEN.

The action of the state board of censors in refusing to pass "Bella Donna," starring Pauline Frederick, compelled the Knickerbocker theater to substitute "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," with Charles Cherry, Lillian Tucker and Arthur Hoope in the leading roles.

One of the objections of the censors to "Bella Donna" seemed to be the use of poison in eliminating an objectionable character. In the substituted film, a dagger accomplished the same purpose without protest from the censors and wtihout loss of patronage at the Knickerbocker. The play is replete with thrills and good action and is well filmed.

Cleveland Jottings.

The Central Y. M. C. A. here has just announced that it will try the experiment of furnishing members and their families weekly motion picture entertainments. Pathe weekly and Pathe animated cartoons, together with high class films of both an entertaining and educational nature, will be shown. Officials of the Y. M. C. A. will act as censors.

Cosmopolitan Cleveland, having a direct and personal interest in the European war, is much stirred up this week over the prospects of seeing the much discussed "Battle Cry of Peace" spectacle, which opens a four weeks' run at the Metropolitan theater next week. Critics declare that the great Vitagraph film will create a sensation here because thousands of families have near relatives in the European conflict.

H. P. Wayman, representing the Metro Pictures company and the National News Weekly, is in Cleveland managing the moving picture talent contest inaugurated by the Cleveland Leader. This week the first pictures are being made for the preliminary contest. The forty girls will be shown at local theaters, four a week, as a feature of the Leader's Animated Weekly. From among the number, the photoplay fans will choose six who will go to New York for their professional debut in big parts in a real Metro picture. The pictures this week are being taken to give the girls an opportunity to show what they can do and whether they have good film faces.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

Film Goes on Wrong Circuit.

THE Booster Club of Petersburg, Ind., is looking for a film that filtered away into thin air a few days ago. The film was shown in the opera house and the last night it appeared the operator remembers forgetting to detach it from another film that belonged to a circuit. New red plush opera chairs, the ceilings, walls and woodwork painted in agreeable colors, a new curtain installed and the curtain centered so that the picture will be the better seen, are some of the improvements. The greatest improvment of all, perhaps, is the installation of a rectifier, to do away with the flicker so oommon when the alternating current is used. The admission will 5 and 10 cents.

NEW YORK MIDSTATE LETTER.

E. O. Weinberg, Troy Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

New Credit Policy to Be Tried by Some Exchanges.

A NUMBER of independent exchanges doing business in this section of the state have sent out notices that after No. 22 all film must be paid for in advance or same will be shipped C. O. D. This will undoubtedly be a good thing for the exchanges, but the exhibitor who is more than two or three hours by train away from the exchange is bound to suffer by late shipments, and in cases where film has been paid for in advance there is sure to be friction.

The Way J. O. Kent Goes About It.

J. O. Kent, manager of the Detroit office of the World Film, is doing a big business with Detroit and state exhibitors, although he doesn't make much "noise" about it. Nevertheless he is constantly sawing wood. When the writer dropped in on him this week Mr. Kent remarked: "The success of this branch is due to the fact that we aim to give exhibitors real service—in the sense that we will go to any limit in making him satisfied. If he wants his paper folded a certain way we do it; in other words, we will stretch any point if it is going to be of help to the exhibitor. The greatest complaint we have to find is the carelessness of some exhibitors in the smaller cities in returning the film promptly. This is due to the fact that in these smaller cities there is no late train and the exhibitor does not like to get up early enough to catch the first train out in the morning.

"The only way to keep film in good condition is to inspect it regularly. For this reason, we have our clients return the film every day, so that we can inspect it before the next exhibitor gets it. A small nick will get bigger and bigger if neglected.

"All of our films are working steadily and we have a splendid list of patrons in every section of the state."

The Majestic, which is Detroit's most beautiful playhouse, has a Satin Goldfibre screen, as has the Broadway-Strand theater. He feels very much elated over the splendid progress thus far of his new enterprise.

What Is Censorship For?

Kansas Censorship Official Finds Prints That Have Been Cut as Censors Ordered, But Not by the Censors—Question Arises as to Whether State Board Alone Has Right to Make Eliminations.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

THE Rev. Festus Foster, traveling inspector of the board of censorship of Kansas, discovered a new species of crime against the censorship. At various places he found films that had not been censored, also films censored but not cut, and films censored but not sufficiently cut.

In Arkansas City, however, he discovered subjects that had been censored, from which the condemned parts had been eliminated, but not by the official board and which did not bear the censor's stamp. These were films that had been supplied from the Oklahoma City offices of producers and distributors. It is said that the inspector admitted that the required eliminations had apparently been made; but he said that in his opinion the film was contraband, because the particular print had not been seen in Topeka.

He pointed out that there were difficulties in the way of correcting a film by mail. The question is being put up to the state board, and meanwhile the exchanges are said to be taking the responsibility for the showing of the prints. It is possible that the prints in question were corrected simultaneously with those passed on by the censors. In any event, a nice problem confronts the board, as to whether eliminations complying with the findings of the inspectors can be made except at Topeka.

THE AMUSEMENT ASSOCIATION HOLDS MEETING IN TOPEKA.

The executive committee of the Amusement Association of Kansas had a very profitable meeting in Topeka recently. The most important result was perhaps the closer identification of the enterprise with the state, through the holding of the session in the capitol city; some of the newspapers had been complaining that the "Kansas" body had its headquarters in Missouri. The executive committe had two pleasant conferences, which produced quite satisfactory results. One was with Attorney General S. M. Brewster, the other with W. D. Ross, superintendent of instruction and head of the censorship board. Both of the state officers were found to be more friendly than had been feared, to the critics of the state censorship law. While the association still realizes that it has a hard fight on its hands against the present law, it is also realized that as to certain phases, there will not be the hostility that was apprehended.

The campaign for new members for the association progresses well. Every exchange manager in Kansas has on his desk a list of the present members; and whenever he writes a letter to a Kansas exhibitor, he adds as postscript, to every exhibitor not already a member, an injunction to become one. Every newspaper in Kansas is receiving literature on the censorship, and stories on its harmful effects.

OPENS EXCHANGE TO HANDLE GOOD, OLD FILMS.

O. D. Rose, who has been successful in many branches of the moving picture industry, and has made a striking success as an exhibitor, with the Warwick theater, Kansas City, Mo., has now become an "Exchange Man." He has organized the Central Motion Picture Company, with headquarters at 918 Oak street, and is there performing what is in many ways an important service to the moving picture patrons of the city, by exploiting some of the best of the older films. The Central Motion Picture Company is distributing "Famous Players," the older releases, in Missouri; releases which previously had been distributed from St. Louis. In the past two months scores of exhibitors have had fine business with these older releases in Kansas City—proving that a good picture has a life practically indefinite. Many of the pictures are playing again at houses where they were shown upon their first release. The company also handles the Alco program in Kansas and Missouri, and Charley Chaplin. Walter Davidge, formerly with the General, is the company's traveler, and Max Wood, two years with the General and recently with the Kansas City Feature Film Co., is booking agent. A. H. Grimes is shipping clerk.

UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE TO GIVE MANY PUBLICITY HELPS.

The Universal Exchange at Kansas City has established a bureau of publicity, to assist the exhibitors in the advertising of their attractions, and the building up of their business. H. G. Gill is in active charge of the bureau, and much effective work is being done. Besides the preparation of literature, and the suggestions made by correspondence, the traveling men are especially posted to assist the exhibitors in their advertising work, and are making efforts to secure the publication of moving picture pages by local newspapers.

TWELFTH STREET CHANGES TO PROGRAMS PROSPERS.

The Twelfth Street theater is taking on a new lease of life, with the visible aspects thereof apparent in the neater and more attractive appearance of the lobby. The former use of large posters has been discontinued, and neat frames and boards bear now artistic photographs of the characters and scenes of the films to be shown. This is one theater of Kansas City that seems to be prospering better with programs than it had with features. Formerly features were run exclusively, at ten cents. Now the admission is five cents, and the Universal program, first run, is the regular order. The Twelfth Street theater seems likely to profit by the refurnished New Empress, the two theaters being diagonally across the street.

SPECIALIZING IN EDUCATIONAL AND RELIGIOUS FILMS.

The Navajo Film Company is entering upon a new phase of its film supply business, specializing in industrial religious and similar appropriate pictures for churches, schools and Y. M. C. A.'s The company is developing a fair business in sales of outfits, and particularly in the rental of films for special entertainments, and for the series of entertainments that are held on stated occasions.

The development of this line of business seems likely to "open up" many districts and communities that heretofore have not had the advantage of moving picture shows. The churches or the women's organizations gets a picture outfit usually, with an operator for an occasion arranged for in advance. Usually, the community wants another one ot these in a month and in a very short time the community is so intent on the subject of pictures that the installation of a regular show becomes a certainty.

This local show enterprise may be developed by individuals, or by organizations; but it is the net results that count—the establishing there of a regular picture show, giving entertainments once or twice a week, and providing a regular outlet for film programs. The Navajo Film Company is handling such films as "Scrooge" for Dickens' "Christmas Carol," which is especially popular with the colleges and churches approaching Christmas season. This film is booked almost up to Christmas now.

New Empress Opens.

The new Empress at Kansas City, beautifully redecorated throughout, opened November 14 to a capacity house. In addition to the vaudeville section of the program, it is running three-reel features, and assorted program, General, including the weekly, comedies, etc. The general admission is ten cents, though a small section is held for reservation, chiefly by phone, at ten cents extra per seat. If necessary, other sections will later be set apart for reservations. Ben Blotcky, formerly with the Starland theater at St. Paul, owned by the new lessees of the New Empress, is local manager.

Roy Burford's Arkansas City Theater.

Roy Burford came "out of the west" to the "east" of Kansas a year ago, and is assisting in the reconstruction of the moving picture business in Arkansas City, Kan. Mr. Burford counts nine years in connection with the industry, and his present property, the Rex, is a fit monument to his accomplishments. This is a beautiful theater seating 650—and its seats are often fully occupied.

How a Wichita House Grew Up.

Frank Garrety, who started in the moving picture business in Wichita, Kan., ten years ago, and now has a profitable house, the Novelty, at Winfield, Kan., has put on many contests and premium stunts in his time, but says he is now through with them, at least for the Novelty. Mr. Garrety's biggest drawing card in a reward for attendance was his candy matinees, during which a box of candy was given to every child.

"The people all know my house and the kind of pictures they will see there, and the occasion for such premiums is at an end," he said. "I am afraid that now they would reflect on the dignity of the house, and my confidence in the merit of the program. People might think the program was not strong enough to carry itself." The Novelty seats 320. But Mr. Garrety is now figuring on a new house, to be built according to plans already prepared, that will seat 665.

Wilhoit Booking "Queen of the Ozarks."

S. E. Wilhoit, proprietor of the Jefferson at Springfield, Mo., was a recent visitor in Kansas City, and reported success in booking "The Queen of the Ozarks" in the towns of that district of the state. Mr. Wilhoit "pulled off" this film himself—but he says he will rest six months before he tries another. Primarily he arranged the film as an advertising exploit for the Jefferson; made money out of exhibiting it, and is getting more from bookings at $10 a day.

Kansas City can at last claim to be a real moving picture town—one page a week in a newspaper here is devoted to moving pictures. The Kansas City Post started this innovation November 13. The page was prepared by J. E. Foland, secretary of the Amusement Association of Kansas, with the hearty support of the publicity men of the exchanges. The Kansas City Star runs a page of theatrical notes; and on a page of local theatrical announcements includes notes of the moving picture attractions. It is said that the Star may start a moving picture page soon, on which feature stories of the actors and of the industry will be run. It was rumored that such a page would be started last week—but it failed to show up.

Kansas City Exchange Notes.

M. E. Williams has returned from the trip to New York, participated in by other Metro managers, for a confab at the home office. Mr. Williams is manager of the Metro exchange at Kansas City.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe exchange at Kansas City, has got the Gold Rooster program going strong, ten Kansas City theaters using it at this moment, and the territory finding it very attractive. The Pathe business from this office increased 25 per cent. in October over September, and the gain for November over October is already much larger.

F. L. Kiltz landed a good one when he added E. C. Mills to his force at the Mutual exchange at Kansas City. Mr. Mills is he who covered himself with distinction by conspicuous service at Pittsburg in developing the new Amusement Association.

The Mutual exhibitors of the Kansas City territory are expecting a profitable as well as a pleasant treat when Samuel L. Rothapfel reaches here soon. More than 400 exhibitors and others are prospective guests at the meeting and banquet.

C. A. Nichols, traveler for the George Kleine exchange at Kansas City, reports that the exhibitors of Missouri and Arkansas whom he met on his recent tour are feeling mighty good over increasing business, and that most of the houses are going into the feature game, and are after the big stuff.

Walter S. Merrell, formerly in the moving picture industry at Jacksonville, Fla., is now with the George Kleine exchange at Kansas City. He starts out this week on a trial trip, as a representative.

Seymour Rice Managing Grand Opera House.

Seymour Rice, son-in-law of the late A. Judah, owner of the Grand Opera House at Kansas City, is the new manager of that house. The Grand is one of the oldest drama houses in the city, but occasionally plays pictures when something especially important comes along. Mr. Rice was formerly in the "acting" end of the theatrical business, and was a corking good minstrel, but for many years has been in business in Kansas City.

Triangle Plays at Willis Wood.

The first Triangle releases in Kansas City territory are in one of the best theaters in the entire district—the Willis Wood at Kansas City. There are two changes a week, each program consisting of a drama and a two-reel Keystone comedy. The opening program was on November 7, with "The Iron Strain," and "My Valet." The large preliminary advertising campaign, carried on to announce the coming Triangle, had aroused a great deal of local interest, and when the Willis Wood announced the contract, and its appointment as the home of Triangle plays, the people were ready to come.

H. B. Allen Makes Good Showing.

H. B. Allen, owner of the building in which is the Maze theater, has found that he makes a capital manager of the picture show. He is doing the thing up right—with his prominent location, near the two highest class hotels, the Muehlebach and the Baltimore, he is provided with an exceptional opportunity. And he is making the Maze one of the very few first-run houses in Kansas City. In this project he is receiving the co-operation of the exchange managers, some of whom occasionally are arranging for the sharing plan of payment for films.

Pictures in Lodge Room.

A moving picture machine is being installed in the building owned by the Betton Odd Fellows' lodge at Eighteenth and Lawrence, Wichita, Kan. The object is to not only enliven the degree work by means of the use of slides, but also to furnish entertainment in the way of moving pictures at lodge sessions.

Dolton Bros., Moreland, Kan., have bought a Motiograph machine for their new show there.

Carter & Peters, Browning, Mo., have bought a new outfit including a 1002D motiograph.

Picketing Case in Omaha

Picketing and Sabotage Charged by Managers of Princess Theater Against Local No. 345 of I. A. T. S. E. Before Judge Redick of District Court—Damages of $100 a Week Claimed—Case Being Watched Closely by Exhibitors.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE right, by striking operators, to picket moving picture theaters is the issue in a case in the district court at Omaha. The Princess moving picture theater at 1317 Douglas street sought an injunction against Local No. 343, International Stage Employes, restraining them from "threatening or intimidating employes or patrons loitering or congregating about the theater or keep away patrons, or doing any act or thing to interfere with trade or free use and enjoyment of property." District Judge Redick has the case under advisement.

The theater alleged the union wanted two operators to join the union or be discharged. The managers refused. Picketting resulted, and, the managers allege, the following acts ensued:

Wallace Denny, president of the union, and twelve others assaulted Dennis Donaldson, an operator, inflicting severe injuries.

Vile smelling chemicals thrown in the theater.

Patrons abused and insulted.

Nails driven in the tires of an automobile belonging to patron.

Mrs. Samuel Harding, an employe, attacked by Emma Crumm, one of the defendants.

The theater proprietors also asked that damages be assessed. Damages during the time picketing took place is estimated at $100 a week.

Judge Ben S. Baker, attorney for the union, made no resistance to an order forbidding violence and intimidation, but argued for peaceful picketing.

The late Judge Munder of this court once stated, "Picketing in and of itself is not unlawful, but when accompanied by violence or coercion is unlawful." Both sides showed plenty of precedents.

RACE HATRED ORDINANCE FOR OMAHA.

"The Birth of a Nation" is to be shown in its entirety at the Brandeis theater at Omaha despite an ordinance introduced before the city council by Mayor Dahlman which would eliminate certain sections. The measure could not be passed in time. It was prepared at the request of colored citizens who called upon the mayor.

The ordinance would prohibit moving pictures, vaudeville, drama, songs, advertisements or bill displays which tend to incite race hatred or riot. One section reads: "Or which shall represent or purport to represent any hanging, lynching, burning or placing in a place of ignominy any human being, the same being incited by race hatred."

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Rothapfel Dines in Denver.

EXHIBITOR S. L. ROTHAPFEL was in Denver Friday and addressed a gathering of fifty moving picture men of Colorado and Wyoming on successful exhibiting. Many who knew of the visit of Mr. Rothapfel were conservative because the tour is being made under the direction of a picture concern. But no one who heard him could feel otherwise than that his talk was an invaluable help and an inspiration. The gathering was most enthusiastic.

"The charm of the motion picture is its subtlety, and to further his sublety, the exhibitor has two media-lights and music. The music must be interpretive, must have the same relation to the picture as the music in the opera has to the libretto. The lights, to produce the best psychological success, should be dimmed."

During the recital of his remarkable career, and of the forces which tended to make that success, he spoke of the relation of the spoken drama to the moving picture.

"Moving pictures are not in competition with the spoken drama," he declared. "Each has a field of its own. What the moving picture has done for the drama, is that it has purged the country of the third and fourth rate performances. That the picture hurts the drama cannot be, for you cannot keep a good thing down, whether it be picture or drama."

Mrs. Conroy, inspector of public amusements in Denver, spoke on the moving picture situation. She was firm in her belief that censorship is unnecessary and a menace to the picture business. "The moving picture industry is so young that it is really feeling its way, so that I feel that much charity should be shown it. It is like a great, overgrown child, clumsy and constantly knocking against things, and making mistakes. Allowances are made for such a child, so should they be made for the pictures," said Mrs. Conroy.

After the luncheon, which was held at the Savoy Hotel, the guests were assembled where a moving picture was taken of them by the local Paramount camera man. All voted a most enjoyable time with Mr. Rothapfel, and an appreciation of Mutual, which made this trip possible.

Denham Palmer Promoted.

The many friends of Denham Palmer, of the World Film, who knew him while he was in the film business in Denver, will be glad to hear that he has again been promoted and is to take charge of the Western Division of the World Film corporation. Mr. Palmer came to Denver for a few weeks' visit two years ago, and liked it so much that he went to Harry Drum, who was then manager of the General Film office in Denver, and told him he wanted to work for him. He worked up to become assistant manager of this office and stayed with the General in Denver for two years. Then he went with the World a year ago, Nov. 8. He was in the Denver office for only a few months when he was promoted to the position of East Central Division manager, with headquarters at Cleveland. Now he is in Denver for a few days renewing old friendships and getting a good breath of our fine mountain air before he goes on to San Francisco.

Mr. Palmer is most enthusiastic about the productions that the World is putting out now. Contracts have just been signed with several additional big stars and directors. Frank Powell, who made Theda Bara, and who directed the famous picture, "A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case" and many others, has just been secured for World, and his first picture will be with Wm. Faversham, who has just been signed to appear in World productions. Maxine Elliot, as well, will appear on the World program the first of the year.

Mr. Palmer says Denver surely looks good to him, and that he wishes that it was here he was going to live instead of San Francisco.

Kiowa to Make Woodman Picture.

The Kiowa Film Company, which is under the management of Archibald Allison, the well known playwright, has signed a contract to produce for the Woodmen of the World a feature picture, "Are You a Chopper?" The contract reads that this picture is to be shown in every camp in the Pacific jurisdiction, and will probably be enlarged to reach all through the east and north.

Bungling Building Permits

Detroit Authorities Claim That Several Theaters Have Been Licensed According to Wrong Paragraph of the Code and Are Illegal—Are Small Houses Assembly Halls?—Look for Definite Understanding.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT'S assistant corporation counsel, James Lee, has recommended before the building commission that William Burnstein and Jacob Cohn, owners of a moving picture theater being constructed at 1499 Michigan avenue, Detroit, be handed a peremptory stop-work order and that the mayor be requested to revoke the licenses of a number of other theaters on the grounds that they have been constructed illegally. Owing, it is said, to an erroneous interpretation of the building code, the building department has issued permits illegally for such buildings during the past two years, permitting them to be built under "assembly hall" regulations instead of those for "minor" theaters. The latter must comply with the stringent rules for fire protection, in type of building and in numerous devices. It is estimated that the value of the buildings illegally built in Detroit and in danger of being closed pending alterations aggregates nearly $75,000. The following theaters, according to Chief Building Inspector Dupont, are affected: Fine Arts, 524 Woodward avenue; Plaza, 2607 Jefferson East; William Penn, 1830 Woodward avenue; Jewel, 448 Gratiot avenue; an unoccupied building at 955 Michigan avenue, and several others now being erected.

The trouble all started when the building commission issued a permit to Jacob S. Wentzel to build a small picture theater at Michigan avenue and 31st street. Burnstein & Cohn, who are building on the opposite corner, attempted to have the Wentzel permit denied on the ground that it was in direct violation of the building code. Assistant Corporation Counsel James H. Lee investigated the matter and informed Mr. Wentzel and his architect that the new theater was being erected in violation of the code, the permit having been issued by the building department contrary to the advice of the corporation counsel's office. The architect refused to stop work on the theater, insisting that the owners' rights were established by the permit. Mr. Lee advised the commission to issue a stop-work notice and notify the architect and Mr. Wentzel to appear before them and show cause why the illegal permit should not be revoked, insisting that the mistake of a public official does not waive an ordinance. It is within the province of the mayor to revoke the license of every motion picture house in the city that is now operating in violation of the building code. The building code defines a minor theater as a building in which motion pictures are shown and having a drop, but no movable scenery, the seating capacity being limited to 400. Minor picture theaters must conform to stringent fire regulations. They must employ a house fireman, and in addition must have certain fire appliances. Also, they must be erected of fireproof material. In order to increase the seating capacity of the newer theaters and to save the extra cost of the fire appliances, the applicants, it is alleged, have sought to have a minor theater interpreted as an assembly hall, the seating capacity of which is limited to 600. The assembly hall is defined as a place having no movable scenery and only occasionally used for assembly purposes. The code does not include the motion picture theater in the provision regulating assembly halls. Building Inspector Dupont insists that he obtained a verbal opinion from the former corporation counsel to the effect that a small motion picture theater is an assembly hall under the construction placed on the provision in the code.

Out of the chaos it is very probable that there will be some definite understanding put on the building code in so far as it applies to the regulations of "minor" theaters and "assembly" halls.

A. A. CAILLE BUYS UNFINISHED WYANDOTTE THEATER.

A. Arthur Caille, president of the Majestic theater, Detroit, the Maxine, Fine Arts and Ferry Field theaters, announces that he has purchased the Majestic theater, nearing completion in Wyandotte, a suburb of Detroit. This theater was bought from the Harris & Warren Amusement company. It will cost about $50,000 and will accommodate about 1,000 people. Architecturally it is very beautiful. Mr. Caille and his associates have also purchased the Marx theate, in Wyandotte, giving him control of both the best houses. The same high-class policy now in vogue at the other Caille theaters will be adopted at the new Majestic and Marx houses. The Majestic, at Wyandotte, will open some time before the 1st of January.

DETROIT CENSORSHIP SIGNALS.

Unless the motion picture exhibitors of Detroit and Michigan get busy there is going to be a movement started for censorship. Of late several of the Detroit newspapers have called attention to certain lurid pictures and posters at the outskirt houses and the club women of Detroit have been holding frequent meetings discussing the question of some kind of censorship. If the Michigan exhibitors do not take this seriously and if they are content to sit still and take the attitude of "let the other fellow do something" they will find themselves confronting real censorship before long. At the next session of the state legislature it is going to be proposed and the time of fight censorship is NOW.

"BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" BOOKED FOR BROADWAY STRAND.

Harry I. Garson, general manager of the Broadway-Strand, wired the World office Nov. 17 that he had closed a contract for the Detroit appearance of "The Battle Cry of Peace." While no figures were given it is understood that the Detroit rights will cost $25,000. It will likely start at the Broadway-Strand some time in December with prices under the New York scale. It will remain indefinitely at the Broadway, according to Mr. Garson.

Wants National Anthem Sung in All Picture Houses.

The Detroit Political and Civic League, working in the interests of better citizenship, has voted to urge the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" in all motion picture houses. The league wants all photoplay houses equipped with one colored slide of the national flag and one slide of the first verse of the song. The idea is to have the opening of each performance marked by a picture of the flag thrown on the screen, followed by the audience singing one verse of the national anthem. One Detroit theater has agreed to try the thing out. Members of the league have consented to be the claquers for the occasion and will lead in the singing. The place of the trial is secret as yet.

Detroit Suburb Wants Sunday Opening Referendum

Highland Park Inhabitants Do Not Agree with Aldermen on Sabbath Question—Law Is Against Opening—Clergymen Divided on Subject.

AGAIN Highland Park—which is practically in Detroit, although operating separately from a municipal standpoint—wants the motion picture houses to keep open on Sundays, while the aldermen are unanimous in opposing the movement. Officials of theaters in the village are circulating a petition for a referendum vote to decide the question and the petition will be presented to the hostile council within a brief time. The motion picture problem has been troubling the village for some years, but despite much opposition, the law making theaters close their doors on Sundays has remained on the ordinance books. The motion picture men argue that there is an exodus of about half of Highland Park population to motion picture houses just across the line in Detroit every Sunday night, and that the village theaters might just as well have the patronage of those persons who insist upon going to shows on Sundays. Clergymen in the village are about equally divided on the question. The theater officials say they are finding no difficulty in obtaining signatures.

KUNSKY'S NEW SERIES TICKET.

From the publicity department of John H. Kunsky, who operates eight theaters in Detroit, comes the following item: "A new idea has been introduced by Mr. Kunsky in the way of an admission ticket to the respective theaters controlled and operated by him—eight in all. It is a cardboard ticket of convenient size so that it may be easily carried either in the pocket, card case or pocketbook, and which has stamped upon its face spaces numbered in rotation from 1 to 25. The idea being that this card or special admission ticket may be purchased, which will entitle the holder to twenty-five admissions to the particular theater for which it was bought, irrespective of the day or date. In this manner the patron is relieved of the necessity of standing in waiting line before the box office window in order to purchase a ticket, or waiting for change during crowded hours. The cards are gotten up in three forms, calling for 10, 15 and 25-cent admissions.

"I Wish I Was a Janitor's Child," Irene Franklin used to lament songfully. It's much nicer to be a moving picture man's child and when you have a birthday do like Miss Constance Moloney of Cheboygan and give your party to two whole grades of pupils at the Liberty theater at the expense of Father-Manager Joseph Moloney.

The Orpheum theater, of Kalamazoo, has been sold to P. C. Schram and P. F. Marquette, newcomers in the moving picture industry. L. C. Barnes has full charge of the Kalamazoo houses. Under the ownership of Messrs. Schram and Marquette the name of the Orpheum will remain the same. Extensive alterations will be made and the theater will be entirely redecorated and renovated.

Getting out house-organs seems to be very popular among motion picture exhibitors, particularly those operating chain theaters. The Weekly Film News, from the offices of John H. Kunsky, Inc., goess to over 50,000 people weekly and is anxiously looked forward to by the patrons of Kunsky theaters. "The Photo-Play Review" is a weekly house organ devoted to the interests of A. Censoring by Telephone

Quincy, Illinois, Local Board of Censorship Adopts Strange Rule—Telephones and Quincy Censorship Strange Anachronism—Board Has Also Decided to Ask City Council for More Powers—Managers May Organize.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

YOU don't have to see a film to censor it, is the startling position taken by the local board of censorship at Quincy. It has decided to allow censoring by telephone. A by-law has been adopted "providing that whenever a picture is to be censored any member who cannot be present may vote by telephone for or against its suppression. Such member will be told what the picture is and asked if, without seeing it, he is willing to vote on the question of its presentation. It will then be up to him to answer that he is against suppression or for it, or to decline to vote until better informed."

The Quincy board voted against allowing two members to suppress a picture. Three members constitute a quorum and all three must agree the film is bad. The board has also formally decided to ask the city council for power to censor all amusements. Mrs. John Ingraham objects because she thinks the moving picture problem alone is big enough. Fire and health officers called before the board gave Quincy theaters clean bills.

In order to protect themselves against what they fear may resolve itself into the whims and fancies of several members of the local board of censorship, moving picture managers in Quincy have made tentative plans for an organization.

BURGLARS IN QUINCY.

The Lyric theater at Bulpitt was entered by a burglar and a new Powers 6A machine was stolen. Manager Domanac Friana offered a reward of $25 for the arrest of the thief. The Bijou theater at Quincy started the Selig series "Chronicles of Bloom Center" November 26. This series will attract a great deal of business there as Maybelle Heikes Justice, the author, is a Quincy woman.

CENSOR SALARIES IN EVANSTON.

SEGREGATION SUIT IN ILLINOIS.

Two negro women in Jacksonville will make a Supreme Court test of a case involving the right of moving picture managers to segregate whites and blacks.

These women refused to occupy the seats designated in G. M. Luttrell's Majestic at Jacksonville. Their money was refunded. They had Luttrell arrested. A justice court upheld him. The negro women appealed and the circuit court also upheld the manager. A state organization of negroes is said to be back of the suit.

Manager Guiteau Gives a Treat.

Some time ago school officials in Freeport made a survey and announced that one child in twelve had never seen a moving picture show. Presuming that it was because the parents could not spare the money, Manager L. W. Guiteau of the Majestic theater had a free show of "Shanghaied" on Saturday morning at which only poor children and their mothers were admitted.

Illinois charters have been issued to the Exchange Amusement company of Chicago, capital stock $1,000. George A. Trude, Jr., Benjamin B. Kahane and Orville W. Lee, incorporators; and to the New Strand of Chicago, $2,500 capital, incorporated by Salo Auerbach, Joseph Boosel and Robert L. Huttner.

To Guard Against Crowds

Louisville Exhibitors Sign Agreement with Board of Public Safety to Keep Aisles of Theaters Free from Crowds—As a Result, the Board Drops Proceedings Against Management of the Walnut.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGERS of seventeen of the largest picture theaters in the city have signed an agreement with the Board of Public Safety, whereby the aisles of the theaters will not be jammed with patrons hereafter, and the exhibitors will in no way intentionally violate the laws governing moving picture theaters. As a result of the managers entering this agreement, the Board of Public Safety has dismissed the case against Joseph L. Steuerle, manager of the Walnut Street theater. A warrant was issued for Mr. Steuerle's appearance in Ordinance Court a short time ago on a charge of overcrowding the theater during the run of the sensational film, "Damaged Goods."

According to the law governing moving picture houses, the building department should send inspectors to the shows regularly to be sure that the law is not being violated. The reason for the withdrawal of the warrant against Mr. Steuerle and forming of the agreement lay in a general misconception of the requirements of the law that existed previous to the conference between the exhibitors and the Board of Public Safety.

Will Film "The Pirates of the Sky."

Louisville moving picture fans are considerably interested in the recent announcement to the effect that "The Pirates of the Sky," a story of adventure by Stephen Gaillard, which was published recently in the Louisville Evening Post, is to be made into a film drama. B. G. Boyle, who for twenty years was managing editor of the Louisville Evening Post, and who is now publicity manager of Rand, McNally & Company, map and book publishers of Chicago, has completed the scenario for a six-reel motion picture drama of the book, which was published by Rand, McNally & Co. The Eagle Film Corporation, of Chicago, has accepted the photoplay and will produce it at once, releasing it early next year.

WEDNESDAY IS REPEAT DAY AT THE MAJESTIC.

The Majestic of Louisville will hereafter devote Wednesdays as repeat days on which big Paramount productions which have previously been shown at the theater will be rerun for just one day. At every performance at the theater a folder is given out which lists a number of the Paramount releases that have been recently shown at the theater. Pictures of the stars are used as a border around the folder, each one of the favorites being placed in a star. At the bottom of the folder is a coupon on which the patrons are asked to write the name of a play which they would like to see repeated. The tickets are turned in at the box office, and sorted up, and the films for which there is the largest return demand are brought back and shown again. Under the new arrangement the theater shows two big productions for three days each week, and the re-run picture on the seventh day.

INTERESTING QUESTIONS PUT IN THEDA BARA CONTEST.

Shortly before the showing of a recent production at the Mary Anderson theater in which Theda Bara, of the Fox Film Corporation, took the leading role, interest in the picture was strengthened by a contest run in one of the local papers. In this contest prizes of two tickets to see the show were offered for the best answers to questions relating to the personal and professional attributes of the actress. The paper printed a short sketch of Miss Bara's stage appearances, and cited the fact that she became famous through her rendition of the vampire in "A Fool There Was." It was stated that Miss Bara played villainous parts only, but in her life off the stage was a sweet and wholesome woman and a worker for the French Red Cross Society. The questions were as follows:

"Question No. 2.—Can a woman, gentle of disposition and mild of temperament, portray the villainous parts pictured by Miss Bara?"

"Question No. 3.—Can a woman play a part without feeling it?"

"Question No. 4.—And feeling it, can she be aught but part of the woman?"

"Question No. 5.—Would men willingly become victims of the charms she portrays, if given an opportunity?"

"Question No. 6.—Would the possessor of the eyes and lips be a helpmate or a hindrance?"

Advertising "The Eternal City."

Charles W. Koch, manager of the New Novelty theater, Louisville, recently exhibited the Famous Players production, "The Eternal City," to well filled houses. An automobile, equipped with a high-class electric calliope, traversed the downtown section of the city for several days, playing "The Rosary" and other appropriate music. A large sign was displayed on both sides of the machine, and a good deal of publicity was obtained. The calliope was operated by storage batteries placed in the rear seat of the machine and was fastened over the hood of the motor. Additional publicity was derived by distributing folders through the office buildings a few days previous to the showing. The folders were accompanied by one complimentary ticket to the theater, which was dated, "good until November 11," the first day of the Eternal City showing. Several other pictures to be shown at the theater were described in the folder.

Reed & Miller, of Columbia, Ky., are contemplating the erection of a first-class motion picture building on Water street, on a lot owned by Mr. Miller. High grade films combined with good weather have brought out capacity attendances at both afternoon and night performances. "Carmen," which made such a hit at the theater, was closely followed by Miss Marguerite Clark in the Paramount production of "Still Waters." Miss Clark has become very popular with moving picture patrons of the city who thronged the house while the picture was shown. This picture is so clean and sweet in every way that numerous favorable comments were heard concerning it.

Asked as to his opinion of the future of the photoplay, Mr. Baggot is quoted as saying: "The pictures will undergo a change—they are bound to, but it is going to be a change for the better. But I don't believe photoplays will ever reach the prophesied $1 and $2 price of admission. As a rule they aren't worth it. Twenty-five cents will be all they can charge." Mr. Baggot left St. Louis on the 15th.

Francis Wilson Says Moving Pictures Will Endure.

Apropos of moving pictures, Mr. Wilson said: "I look forward to the time when theaters will be municipally owned and operated and when the legitimate drama at its best will be presented and encouraged. In this way the public taste might be educated up to the better things in dramatic art by the presentation of plays of Moliere, Pinero, Shaw and others."

Censorship Bill at Alton Delayed.

The Leader theater, at 6201 Bartmer avenue, opened last week as a moving picture house, under the management of H. L. and W. H. Billings, who are both former moving picture operators. Must Fight Reformers

Washington, D. C., Picture Men Are Facing a Reform Spasm in Their City—Not Only Censcrship, But Sunday Closing Laws Are Being Advocated—Manager Spurrier Calls Meeting of Exchange Men.

EXHIBITORS and exchange men of the National Capital are considerably wrought up over the activities of a number of reformers who threaten to thrust censorship upon them as well as upon the people of Washington. The call has been sent out for a mass (indignation) meeting of the exchange managers by Frank Spurrier, local manager for the V-L-S-E following the announcement in the last issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that a bill providing for the censoring of moving picture films in the District of Columbia was in the process of preparation.

Not Censorship Only, But Sunday Closing.

Not only are they facing censorship, but these same agitators are to seek the enactment of a law by Congress which will close all of the moving picture theaters on Sunday. It is planned to get lined up thousands of church people as represented in the young people's religious organizations, and a temporary oganization of a co-operative central body of such organizations was recently formed at a meeting in the club rooms of the Y. M. C. A. building. At this meeting Robert D. Burbank, president of the Epworth League, was elected temporary chairman, while Earl Taggart, president of the Christian Endeavor Union, was selected to act as the temporary secretary. A committee was also named to draft a constitution and by-laws. This committee will make a report at a meeting to be held in the Y. M. C. A. building on Nov. 27.

The Purpose of the Federation.

In outlining the purposes for which the proposed federation is to be formed, Mr. Burbank stated that it should look after civic questions as presented to the various church bodies for action. This would include the prohibition movement, an adequate Sunday rest law, and a Federal board of censorship for motion pictures.

The Rev. E. A. Saxsmith declared that moving picture shows were one of the most potent factors working against the church in this city, and he said he would welcome any movement against the present practices of moving picture shows.

William Knowles Cooper, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A., warned those directing the formation of the federation against building up a great piece of machinery which would require too many people to run. He suggested that the federation should take the form of a federated council, and said the proposed body should not attempt to force the constituent bodies into any movement, but should create sentiment for particular movements. He asserted that each of the religious bodies represented had a particular field and that the federation would find great opposition if it attempted to break down the denominational work. He also warned the representatives against having too many meetings.

A Glance at Recent Activities.

This latter is sound advice—the fewer meetings they hold the better it will be for other law-abiding citizens. The work of reformers is making Washington anything but a healthy place in which to do business. A glance at Congressional legislation enacted within the past few years will easily bear this out. They were not satisfied until they drove all of the pawnbrokers out of the District of Columbia with the result that the city fathers have had thrust upon them the need for providing releif for the poor but worthy people who find the accommodation offered by such establishments of much the same value as their more prosperous neighbors find the banks to which they are enabled to offer slightly different collateral.

They broke up certain segregated districts, leaving open the whole city to possibilities of disorderly places, forming a menace to the homes of themselves and others. Their activities have been most wonderful, but, strange, to the more broadminded, it would seem as though much of their zeal was misplaced.

A Case of Minority Rule.

It is decidedly a case of minority rule. They have constituted themselves the keepers of their brothers, whether it be desired or not. As pointed out by several of the motion picture exhibitors, there is no need for their patronizing the motion picture theaters, nor need they allow their children to do so. It is a proven fact that a large majority of these same reformers have no conception of what motion pictures represent; they are not of the theater-going type, many of them having yet to see their first motion picture exhibition. It would do them a vast amount of good if they could rub elbows with people other than their ilk and put the entire question to a popular vote without the use of influence on either side.

There are two things which are required in Washington if the city is to take its proper place among the other cities of the country—a complete divorce from the activities of all sorts of so-called federations, and a voice in the local government.

Exhibitors Will Also Get Busy.

Following the proposed meeting of the exchange managers it is expected that the exhibitors will also get busy to gather facts and figures so as to be able, if necessary, to appear before the committees of Congress to present their side of the issue. The moving picture interests will find the burden of proof has been placed on them for a majority if not all, of the members of the House of Representatives Committee on Education favor Federal control of motion picture films. It would seem as though censorship is inevitable if the exhibitors all over the country do not get busy at once. It is suggested that wherever possible they personally call upon their Congressional representatives and place the matter before them in a way which will make them more favorably inclined to the moving picture interests. Where it is impossible to make personal visits, a letter containing suitable information will go a long way toward bringing about the same result. Election time is rapidly approaching and the exhibitors should take advantage of the present time to secure co-operation of the members in Congress.

SLIDES IN THEATERS OF MUCH PRACTICAL USE.

A new use for motion picture theaters was discovered last week when the police found a small boy in a state of unconsciousness on the street and were unable to locate his parents. A description of the boy was given to Joseph P. Morgan, who operates the Princess theater, at 12th and H streets, Northeast, and a slide was quickly made for showing between the various photoplays making up his program. Almost immediately after the first showing of this slide it was found that it had accomplished its purpose and the boy was restored to a worried mother.

Slides are being used in the houses for all sorts of purposes of this kind, but jumping from a sad to a comedy occurrence, reference might be made to one of these which contains the slogan "Mother, Baby's Crying." It is the practice in favorable weather for parents to take their young hopefuls to the theaters, leaving them quietly ensconced in their carriages and go-carts in the lobby of the theaters. One house has a "Baby Carriage Garage" which is generally full to overflowing. The fun begins when the slide is shown for in many instances a score of mothers will make a rush for the door—the poor man manager is unable to guess whose kid it is that requires first aid, so he must make the call a general one.

New Projects in Virginia.

The Village Amusement Company, of Hopewell, Va., has been granted a charter to engage in the motion picture business. The maximum amount of capital involved is $5,000, while the minimum is $1,000. The par value of the stock is $10 per share. J. M. Luke, of City Point, is president, and Paul F. Barringer, of Pittsburgh, is the secretary of the new company.

Tom Moore Books Triangle Film for Garden Theater

Exclusive Washington Rights—Pictures Will Be Shown at the Popular Price—15 Cents at Night and a Dime for Matinees.

Tom Moore, who operates the Garden, Strand and Plaza theaters, on Ninth street, Northwest, has announced the closing of a contract with the Triangle Film company for the exclusive presentation of their picture at the Garden. In this announcement Mr. Moore is quoted as saying "The Triangle Company was anxious to book its production with me, as I have the theaters best adapted for their showing, but I am a great advocate of popular prices, and I was afraid the company would insist upon a decided raise in our scale of prices. The cost of the service is exceedingly high, and the pictures are worth every cent asked for them. I am going to show these pictures at the Garden theater for the same price as we charge now at the matinee (10 cents), and at night we will only increase the price 5 cents.

"At the Garden the program will consist of a strong five or six-reel dramatic subject and a two or three-reel Keystone comedy, each production featuring a well-known star. The pictures will be changed twice a week, opening on Sunday and Thursday."

Slight though it is, this advance in the price of admission is conceded to be a step in the right direction. It has long been said that as soon as the more important downtown theaters demand 15 cents or more, all of the houses, perhaps with some very few exceptions, will go to 10 cents. It has been predicted that Washington would before another year be getting the same scale of prices which prevail in the smaller towns of Virginia and North Carolina, where up to 50 cents is asked for the same type of photoplays as are shown here is secured. It is hoped that "popular prices" will be taken to mean a standard of 15, 25 and 50 cents in the very near future, instead of 5 and 10 cents, as now prevails.

PICTURES IN VIRGINIA MOUNTAIN TOWNS.

"THE large industrial plants and the coal mines in this section are more and more coming to the use of motion pictures as a means of keeping their employees in a contented frame of mind," says Alan J. Bachrach, traveling representative of the World Film Corporation. "While in Big Stone Gap I had a pleasant visit with J. R. Taylor and his brother, I. C. Taylor, pioneer exhibitors of this part of the state, who are operating a number of special shows for the operators of the mines. This is done in addition to their own motion picture shows in Big Stone Gap.

"They are very enterprising men and are well liked by all of the exhibitors in the vicinity and come in close contact with them by reason of the fact that they carry a stock of theater supplies. Mr. J. B. Taylor states that he is at present making arrangements to have theaters in two other nearby towns so that they will soon have quite a string.

"It is seldom," continued Mr. Bachrach, "that one hears of the motion picture exhibitions in the smaller towns, yet there are places of less than one thousand inhabitants, many of these otherwise shut off from public amusements, that have their regular shows. In Gate City, although a county seat, there are but six hundred inhabitants. The town is situated in a beautiful cup-shaped valley surrounded on all sides by the tall peaks of the mountains. It is one of the most beautifully located places I have ever seen.

"C. W. Hoge, who operates the town's electric light plant, is quite a motion picture fan, and this led him to establish himself as an exhibitor. The authorities gladly gave him permission to use the court house when that building is not required for civic affairs and he is gradually bringing his exhibitions to a fine point of perfection. This is very much appreciated by his fellow citizens, who are giving him every possible support. Mr. Hoge is now using quite a number of the well known features."

PRICES AT RICHMOND BIJOU SHOWING TRIANGLE.

THE progressiveness of Virginian exhibitors is evidenced by the increasing prices of admission, or rather the fact that the prices asked are more nearly commensurate with the class of entertainment offered to the public. It remained, however, for Jake Wells to place in operation the highest regular scale that has ever been asked here for both at the Bijou theater, in Richmond, and the Wells, theater, in Norfolk. Ten, 15 and 25 cents is asked for afternoon exhibitions, while in the evenings some few choice seats are held out at 50 cents. The Bijou has been running stock, but at the conclusion of the company's season Triangle films were placed in operation. The general public seems very much pleased at the ability to see high class productions, and Mr. Wells was the subject of many nice press notices in the newspapers of both cities. Symphony concerts are to be a feature at the Bijou and Wells. At the former a fifteen-piece orchestra will be under the direction of Prof. Moses Stein. Harry McNiven is the manager of that house. Both he and Mr. Wells, who came on from New York for the purpose, attended the opening exhibition of the Triangle films at the Wells theater.

Kentucky Business Notes.

The moving picture theater of William G. Bryant, at Pleasureville, Ky., was damaged by fire, which broke out on the evening of November 9 in an adjoining building. The theater was badly damaged a few months ago by a fire which swept the business district of the Bluegrass city. Mr. Bryant was in Louisville buying supplies the day before the fire.

Gets Big Job With Fox

Harvey Day, Widely Known Pittsburgh Film Man, Appointed Manager of New Feature de Luxe Department with Headquarters in New York City—Remembered by His Friends as He Quits Smoky City.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

ALTHOUGH the entire Pittsburgh trade hates to see him leave, they join in one big round of congratulations which they extend to Harvey B. Day upon his good fortune of being appointed as manager of the new features de luxe department, which is to become an important branch of the great Fox Film corporation.

Mr. Day was apprised of his selection as manager of this department seven weeks ago, but was called to New York week before last and was apprised of the fact that the new department would be started at once, and that he should make arrangements to assume his new duties the latter part of last week. As a result the Day family immediately packed up and left for the metropolis.

Mr. Day's successor as manager of the Pittsburgh office is Clyde W. Eckhardt, who has been acting as assistant manager for the past few months.

The members of the Pittsburgh City Council, representatives of the Board of Education and many prominent exhibitors, including James B. Clark, recently enjoyed a showing of the film made during the summer for the Bureau of Recreation in the council chambers. These pictures depict the activities of children in the public parks, in which 1,600,000 little children participated. It is already in evidence that there will be a wide call for these pictures. The Regent theater, East Liberty, will show them Nov. 24 and 25, and following that at the other Rowland & Clark theaters. These pictures were made by the Industrial & Domestic Film company, of Pittsburgh.

G. Becker, of New Kensington, Pa., has recently purchased the Family theater in that city from August Kuehnlein.

SCREEN CLUB GETS CHARTER.

The Allegheny County courts have finally granted a charter for the Pittsburgh Screen Club and the certificate is now in the hands of A. J. Hanna, treasurer of the club.

A meeting will be held in the Olympic theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, on Sunday, Nov. 28, at 3 p. m., for the purpose of discussing plans for the future of the Screen Club and for the election of officers. Members of the Screen Club are urged to keep Sunday afternoon, Nov. 28, in mind, and attend the meeting, as well as all others who are interested in the moving picture business in and about the Pittsburgh district.

MANAGER H. B. MILLER TO OPEN A NEW EXCHANGE.

H. B. Miller, formerly manager of the Pittsburgh Photoplay Company, recently announced that he will open a new feature film exchange in Pittsburgh within the next week or so. Negotiations have been completed for the purchase of many high-grade features, although the location and name of the new concern have not been determined as yet.

Mr. Miller is one of the best known film men in Pittsburgh, but has been out of the business, as far as managerial activities are concerned, since the Pittsburgh Photoplay Company was absorbed by the Mutual Film Corporation last April. The new exchange will handle features on a large scale and single reels will also be provided.

GREENSBURG TO HAVE BIG NEW MOVING PICTURE HOUSE.

M. Manos, of Greensburg, Pa., has had the work started on his new moving picture theater in that city on Adams street and the work is reported as now progressing rapidly.

The building will have a stage 33x56 feet in case the house should be used for other than picture purposes in the future. It will cost between $40,000 and $50,000 and will seat 1,325 persons, 875 on the first floor. A ground lease has been secured for a period of 21 years.

Report No More Bio-Carbons.

A large number of the Pittsburgh supply men inform us that Bio carbons have taken another jump in price and that there are positively no more to be had.

Butler Exhibitor Runs Contest.

Carle E. Carleton, owner of the Lyric, in Butler, near Pittsburgh, Pa., recently ran a moving picture contest similar to that conducted by the Rowland & Clark theaters in Pittsburgh. The winners of the contest appeared in a one-reel comedy written and directed by C. B. Nelson, of the United Film Company, of Pittsburgh, the title being "The Husbands of Pauline." The picture was shown last week at a tremendous business.

Silverman House at Altoona May Open New Year's.

The new theater being built by the Silverman Brothers in Altoona, Pa., is now under roof and all that remains to be done is the interior furnishings and equipment. The name has not been decided upon as yet, but will likely be called the Strand or the Silver. This house will seat 1,600 persons and the building, with the equipment, will represent an investment of $100,000. The ground on which the theater stands is owned by Silverman Brothers and is worth $60,000. This house is up-to-date in every respect and is expected to be one of the finest in the city when completed. It is expected to have the house open Jan. 1.

Pittsburgh Business Notes—Personals.

David Chaitkin, Aaron Chaitkin and George Logue have applied for a Pennsylvania charter for an intended corporation to be called The Jarvella Theater Company of Pittsburgh. The object is establishing, maintaining and operating a theater or theaters, moving picture house or houses and like places of amusement.

The Wright Amusement company, which operates the Bison, in Brownsville, Pa., recently placed an order with Klein Brothers, of Pittsburgh, for an extra large Smith orchestral organ and work has already been started on the instrument in the factory at North Tonawanda, N. Y. This organ will be larger than the average moving picture instrument.

Manager McAleer, of the Picture Playhouse, Pittsburgh, recently made a visit to New York on business. A number of the exhibitors are expecting some surprises from McAleer.

Censors Awake

Censor Board's Secretary Spreads Censorship Gospel—Women's Clubs Invite Censors to Speak—Film Men Disgruntled at Delay of Portland Chamber of Commerce in Giving Them a Hearing.

AFTER several months of inactivity on the censorship issue, the women's clubs of Portland indicate that they have taken renewed interest in this civic question and Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the local censor board, has been invited to speak before several of the women's organizations. On November 14 Mrs. Colwell will address the man's current events class of one of Portland's churches on the subject, "Some Inside Facts Regarding Motion Picture Censorship in Portland."

Mrs. Colwell did not reply to the criticism of the board published in the daily papers about two months ago but now, she says, "It is time for us to get out and defend ourselves," and her addresses before the women's clubs will, of course, be of a defensive nature.

The Portland Chamber of Commerce, before which the issue was to have been debated, has postponed the date of the hearing from time to time and the Portland film men and the censor board have been resting on their arms awaiting the decision of the Chamber of Commerce. The continued delay has disgruntled the film men somewhat and there is talk of resignations from the commercial body unless it gives the film men at least a hearing.

There is an unconfirmed rumor that censorship in Portland has become important enough to be used as a political issue. Until the municipal office of censor board secretary was created, Portland's censorship was practically in the hands of her civic organizations but now that a city salary has become attached to the office of secretary, it can become a small factor, at least, in Portland's politics.

CENTRAL EXCHANGE BUILDING.

Following attempts of the Municipal Fire Protection Bureau to have the City Council pass a stringent ordinance regulating the handling and storage of films, exchange men have been approached by owners of property in the vicinity of the present building housing a number of the exchanges with offers to erect a building for them conforming with all the requirements of the new ordinance.

Three different propositions have been put to the exchange men, one by Jennings & Co., who own the Sunset theater, to build within a stone's throw of the present building, another by Fred Langerman, owner of the New Grand theater, to build on a 100 by 100 near Park and Davis streets, and Root & Kerr, architects, for an undisclosed principal, are showing plans for a building near Fifth and Davis. The propositions call for a central viewing place.

At present Pathe, General, Mutual, Northwest and Apex are all housed in the same building erected for them by A. King Wilson. The Film Supply Company of Oregon requires larger quarters to take care of its increasing business as do several of the exchanges. Mutual's lease expires January 31, necessitating new arrangements and a majority of the city's exchanges favor a central building erected to comply with the terms of the proposed ordinance.

BERGNER GOES TO ASHLAND.

O. F. Bergner, manager of the Columbia theater, Portland, from the time of its opening until it was leased to Jensen and Von Herberg in July, and the man who successfully combined music and pictures in Portland and made his theater the home of the city's music lovers, has left the Rose City to conduct the Vining theater, Ashland, Ore., which he has leased. This house was built by I. E. Vining, an eastern capitalist and mining man, who, during the past few months, has conducted the house himself. The Vining is considered one of the most up-to-date houses in southern Oregon. Mr. Bergner will use Pathe for his opening program.

Films in Rural Schools.

The school districts in the vicinity of Keasey, Ore., have joined together in the purchase of an Edison projecting machine from the Service Film Company of Portland, which they will use to exhibit motion pictures in the schools in those districts. A Ford auto is used to convey the apparatus from one school to the other and to generate electricity for the projection machine.

From Pathe's Portland Office.

The Portland Pathe exchange has completed an up-to-date list of motion picture theaters in active operation in Oregon and the number is 200. Of these 45 are located in Portland.

J. D. Sperry, road man for Pathe is absent from the city having gone to North Dakota to attend the funeral of his father.

Pathe has leased the most prominent sign board in Portland on which to advertise their films. It is an illuminated board located at Sixth and Washington streets and Foster & Kleiser, the owners, estimate that from 5 to 7 million people pass there per week.

Vancouver, Wash., Theater Opens.

Kiggins & McGill, who operate the U. S. A. theater at Vancouver, Wash., have opened the Rex theater, which has been idle for several months. The auditorium has been renovated, a new screen and projecting machine installed and an orchestra engaged for the house. Vancouver now has three moving picture theaters. The U. S. A. theater recently installed a $5,000 Fotoplayer.

Fire in Seattle.

On November 9 a fire of unknown origin broke out in the Melbourne theater, on Second avenue and Seneca street, resulting in heavy damage to the house. A mirror screen valued at $1,500 was a total loss and the $5,000 organ was ruined. The damage to the walls and stage fixtures will necessitate extensive repairs requiring the house to be closed for some time.

Portland Briefs.

The Evening Telegram, a Portland paper, arranged with the Pickford theater to show a program of educational films to the pupils of the grammar grades in Portland's public schools Saturday, November 13 and the house was crowded to the doors with children. The subjects shown were "Spirit of Audubon," "Human Movements Analyzed," "Children of the Netherlands," "A Boy Scouts' Farm" and "Picturesque San Diego."

The Columbia, heretofore running one change a week, has arranged to run two changes a week on the Triangle program. Frank Monroe, organist in Jensen & Von Herberg's Seattle houses, has taken the position at the Columbia theater made vacant by the resignation of Fred School.

Seattle Proposes Tax on Exchanges by $1,000 Fees

Big Licensing Fee May Be Asked for Exchange Privileges—To Offset Losses Due to Prohibition and Ending of Saloon Fees.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TO offset the loss to the city's treasury which will result when Seattle goes dry the first of the year and the usual saloon license money fails to come in, one of the councilmen of the Sound City has proposed a license fee on film exchanges of $1,000 a year. Just why exchanges should pay the license fee now collected from saloons is not clear. The film men are up in arms over the proposed measure and a meeting of them was scheduled for Nov. 11.

Recently when the Seattle city fathers threatened the exchanges with a fire ordinance which would in effect put them out of business, the film men threatened to move to Tacoma and a like threat has been made this time which will be carried out if the Seattle administration is in earnest.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Triangle Program Delayed.

THE opening of the Triangle pictures at the Liberty theater was postponed one week, and the first Griffith-Ince-Sennett production was shown Sunday, November 21. According to Manager Ralph Ruffner, the initial program was to be the Sennett comedy, "A Game Old Knight," featuring Charles Murray of the old vaudeville team of Murray and Mack, and the Ince feature, "The Iron Strain," featuring Dustin Farnum.

The program for the second half of the first week includes the Griffith film, "The Lamb," featuring Douglas Fairbanks and Seena Owen, and the Sennett comedy, "My Valet," featuring Raymond Hitchcock, Sennett himself and the Keystone comedians. By the new arrangement each program will have eight reels instead of one seven and one nine as first announced.

The 1915 Round-Up Pictures.

Round-ups, formerly the pastimes of the plains, which are now seldom heard of in the West, except at fall fairs of the annual Pendleton, Ore., Round-up, were shown in moving pictures at the Rex theater, Spokane, Wash., November 7 and 8. They depicted the activties of the 1915 Round-Up held this fall. The pictures were excellent and the theater was largely patronized.

Previous to this, round-up pictures have been disappointing affairs, because of the clouds of dust that fogged the action. This has been practically overcome in the 1915 pictures through the use of oil on the track and in the field.

What is heralded as the biggest assemblage of cowboys, cowgirls and full-blooded Indians ever gathered together before the camera is shown in the scenes of the opening day parade. Then there is the Indian village and the celebration dance of the redskins and the grandstand and bleachers packed with spectators.

Comedy numbers are introduced frequently. "Sharkey," the bucking Belgrade bull, throws every rider, and not one was able to collect the bonus for staying ten seconds on his broad back. The bucking mule not only hurtled the riders over his head, but showed fondness for pounding on their prostrate forms. Relay races, stage coach races, pony express races and the entire program of the big round-up are shown in completeness.

On motion of Trustee Davidson, the Calgary School Board last week appropriated $75 for the educational moving pictures which are to be shown in this city in connection with the public school work. It is announced that forty-five reels are now available for this purpose.

Alderman Mahon gave notice at the last meeting of the Vancouver City Council that he would introduce a motion to amend the license by-law to enable the city to license the moving picture school now being conducted here. If the city had not the power to license the place, said Mr. Mahon, he proposed to seek power from the provincial government to place the school under the control of the license inspector.

J. Thibault of Ottawa, representing the I. A. T. S. E., addressed the Winnipeg Trades and Labor Council at a meeting held last week. He announced that he was in Winnipeg in connection with some trouble which had developed in one of the local theaters, but was hopeful of a settlement. The I. A. T. S. E. were said to have offered to compromise, but the theater management has refused to deal with them, and Mr. Thibault stated that unless there was a change of attitude it would probably be necessary to call a strike in all Winnipeg houses. The Council went on record in favor of giving full moral support in case of a strike.

The Kleine-Edison features, which were being imported from Seattle by a local exchange for showing at the Orpheum in Vancouver and the Royal Victoria theater in Victoria, have been discontinued. The V-L-S-E pictures, which are being brought in from Seattle by W. P. Dewees of the Rex theater, Vancouver, have been contracted for by several more houses in western Canada.

After all, there is only one moving picture paper that you really need, and this is IT, conducted by the largest and most experienced staff of editors and correspondents.

Saner Censorship

British Columbia Hopes for More Broad-Minded Censoring—Attorney General Intimates That It Will Come—Appeal Board Needed—"Spoilers," Banned by Censors, Takes Vancouver by Storm—Columbia Does Good Business.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DURING a talk this week with Sam W. Whitehead, who with George L. Broy controls the Canadian rights for "The Spoilers," it developed that from present indications, British Columbia is at last to have definite relief from the brand of censorship which has heretofore been in force in this province. Mr. Whitehead had an extended interview with Attorney General Bowser in Vancouver a few days ago, and was asked by Mr. Bowser for his opinion as to the advisability of establishing an appeal board, to review productions rejected by the censor. The case of "The Spoilers," passed by the attorney general after its rejection by the local censor, served to demonstrate to Mr. Bowser that all those pictures which have been condemned have not necessarily been pictures which should not be shown, and he had already intimated that present standards would be broadened.

Mr. Whitehead expressed himself as strongly in favor of an appeal board, and was invited by the attorney general to call upon him next week in Victoria, and discuss the matter. The result of this conference will be awaited with intense interest by the few who are aware of this latest development, but it is confidently expected that some plan will be formulated which will furnish direct and immediate relief to those in the industry.

To Messrs. Broy and Whitehead and to Hector Quagliotti, manager of the Colonial theater in Vancouver, must be given credit for accomplishing what has long been considered an impossibility. These gentlemen stated to the writer that they had found Mr. Bowser very fair in his dealings with them regarding "The Spoilers," and quick to acknowledge that an injustice had been done through its rejection.

Business at the Colonial this week has broken all Canadian records. On Friday evening the World man was informed by the management that with the biggest day (Saturday) to come, the business for the week at the present rate would amount to a sum considerably in excess of $6,000, with a total attendance of something like 23,000. The picture took the city by storm, and profited greatly through the publicity received in connection with its rejection and the subsequent campaign taken up by the local newspapers. The drawing power of the production itself, however, was shown in the continued capacity attendance throughout the week.

The picture will be shown next week at the Variety theater in Victoria, and will then return to Vancouver to be shown at the Rex theater, at the same advanced scale of prices. W. P. Dewees of the Rex is using the feature on a straight rental basis, at the highest rental ever paid for a feature in Canada.

WHAT CENSORS REJECT.

The Vancouver representative of the Moving Picture World received a letter last week from Attorney General W. J. Bowser, enclosing extracts from the provincial censor's report for 1914, which will furnish an index of the standards in vogue up to the present time. The 1915 report will be available at the end of the year.

"The number of reels of film which passed through the office and secured inspection was approximately 7,500, each reel averaging about 1,000 feet in length. The total number of reels rejected in their entirety as being unsuitable for public exhibition was 631½. The percentage of rejections to the total number of reels of film inspected was 8.42 per cent. Total rejections of film and reasons therefor as follows: Infidelity, 173 reels; seduction, 65; unnecessary display of U. S. flags, 50.5; depiction of harlots, 42; generally immoral, 27; unwholesome and evil suggestions, 26; offensive to religious orders, 21.5; white slavery, 21; excessive crime and gun play, 19.5; gruesome and nauseous, 19.5; anti-British, 18; illegitimacy, 14.5; excessive drunkenness, 12; indecent vulgarity, 12.5; excessive gambling, 11; cohabitation and concubinage, 11; burlesqueing of clergy, 9.5; depicting insanity for comedy purposes, 7.5; glorifying criminals, 7; against public policy, 7; featuring adultery, 7; disgusting portrayals of insanity in dramatic productions, 6; bestiality, 5; lewdness of characters, 5; comedies insulting to British race, 5; films slandering Allies in war, 5.5; nauseous snake films, 5; bad example to children, 4; gruesome suicide work, 4; ridicule of temperance movement, 4; dive scenes, 4; general depravity and viciousness, 2.

"In addition to rejecting 631.5 reels of film for the foregoing reasons, the censoring staff of the office made several thousands of excisions of objectionable matter from reels which were approved for use following the removal of the offensive material." The attorney general informs the writer that his office has no record of the number of reels in which cuts were made, or the number of pieces cut out.

Propose Taxing Theaters by Seating Capacity

Vancouver Civic Finance Committee Considers More Equitable Plan for Taxing Theaters—Take Seating into Account—Present Tax Not High by Comparison.

THE question of taxing moving picture theaters according to their seating capacity, rather than continuing under a flat rate for all houses, was brought up before the Vancouver civic finance committee one day last week. W. W. Armstrong of the Fairview theater had addressed the committee the week before on behalf of himself and Managers G. Corriveau, Jr., of the Grandview, and H. A. Keswick of the Fairmont, respectively, and pointed out that with each theater paying the present tax of $150 per year, the cost to some of the large downtown houses is only 16 or 18 cents per seat, while the suburban houses, such as those conducted by the petitioners, pay at the rate of 40 to 60 cents per seat. It was suggested that the present tax be reduced to $100 per year for all houses wih less than 375 seating capacity, with an additional 20 censt per seat for all seats over that number.

Alderman Gale, who brought the matter up, was in favor of a graded scale, and was supported by Alderman Enright. "Some licenses have been made so large as to be prohibitive," said the latter. Trades License Inspector Jones demonstrated, however, that the Vancouver license is lower than in any other Canadian city except Toronto, and advised the retention of the present system. He called attention to the fact that downtown theaters pay more for their film service, more taxes, and more for help. It was finally voted to refer the entire question to Mr. Jones, and have him report further to the finance committee this week.

RAISE OF PRICE IN WINNIPEG.

Through the efforts of W. F. Barrett, manager of the Winnipeg Universal office, all downtown theaters in this city will in the very near future raise their admission price to 15 cents. Winnipeg is the only city in western Canada which has adhered to the old 10-cent price, and Mr. Barrett is confident that the coming raise will be a complete success. He is now carrying his campaign into the suburbs, and hopes that before long the entire city will be getting 15 cents. Mr. Barrett is also forming a social organization among the exhibitors and exchangemen of Winnipeg, with the object of creating a better feeling and a closer relationship between the exchange and the exhibitor. Mr. Barret plans to have each member contribute 50 cents per week, and from time to time to use this money for a lunch or dinner together at a good hotel, where ideas can be exchanged, and questions pertaining to the business discussed.

Alhambra Theater and Hotel Building Splendid Theater.

The Alhambra Theater and Hotel company has been incorporated with a capital of $300,000. Plans are being prepared for a magnificent brick and terra cotta building, to be erected at a cost of approximately $150,000.

The building is to contain a first class hotel, ballroom, picture play house designed on the most up-to-date plans, and conveniences, seating 1,000, five stores and seven suites of offices.

New Company at Norfolk, Va.

The Granby Pictures company has been granted a charter to engage in the motion picture business in Norfolk, Va. The amount of its capital is to range from $5,000 to $15,000. The president of the concern is C. C. Jones, while L. I. Priest is the secretary and treasurer. Both of these officials are located in Norfolk.

Between Ourselves

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD embodies an abiding faith in the future of this great industry, but realizes that the permanent welfare of the art must ever be maintained on clean pictures and honest and upright business methods.

It has seen those in the industry gradually disappear who have tried to secure a few paltry dollars with debasing and questionable film productions.

Likewise those who have attempted to secure these same few dollars by juggling with the usual business standards of honesty and fair dealing and who have far too long made the whole industry and those connected with it shining marks for ridicule in most business circles.

Surely but steadily, however, the industry is coming into its rightful place among the great and stable businesses of the country.

Our advertising columns represent, as they always have, the best, the most reliable and dependable firms in the trade. These firms are placing higher standards of excellence behind their product and are giving greater value for value received than was considered possible a few years ago.

Ever since its beginning this paper has carried more advertising than any other publication in this field.

It is now carrying considerably more advertising each week than any other trade paper devoted to the amusement field.

Even then it could carry several more pages every week if it were willing to extend unlimited credit or take down its "NO TRUST" sign.

It also could carry more advertising most every week if it were willing to sacrifice its ideals in regard to clean pictures. It has refused hundreds of dollars worth of such copy within the past two years alone.

It expects to maintain its standard at a still higher level BECAUSE the standard of the whole industry is being raised to higher levels.

Triangle Film Corporation,

New York City, New York.

Gentlemen:

We wonder how the other fellow found time to telegraph on the opening night assuring you of their success. This is our first breathing spell.

"The Strand" opened to the public Friday evening at 6:30, the performance beginning promptly at 7:00 P. M. opening overture by the Strand Symphony Orchestra--11 pieces, leader, Prof. Franz Koehler who, incidentally, has a Symphony Orchestra in the city, of 57 pieces.

We opened with "The Lamb" and "My Valet." The house was crowded both performances and it is estimated that we turned away over 2,000 people (seating capacity of the house 1500). The Triangle Photoplays, the Orchestra, and the Theatre itself was a revelation to the people of Erie.

We are proud of the Triangle service we are giving which is so far ahead of anything here-to-fore shown that it is a revelation to the people, and we believe if we are given an opportunity to entertain any of the representatives of the Triangle people, even of the good city of New York, they will be equally proud of the Theatre in which their Photoplays are being presented.

Yours very truly,

JUST AS I AM (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 29).—The cast: Wheeler Oakman, Harry Lonsdale, Will Machin, Eugenie Besserer, Edith Johnson and Frank Clark.

"Just as I am without one plea—"

A child is seated on his mother's knee while she sings the old hymn, "Just As I Am." From the boy there develops a man, who has forgotten his childhood days, and becomes a desperate criminal. Known as Wilson, he affiliates with two other crooks, Hungerford and Randall. In the holdup, Hungerford shoots his victim, and makes it appear that Wilson had performed the crime, and sends Wilson to prison for the rest of his life.

As the mill of the law keeps on grinding, Randall, another of the gang, becomes a convict. He meets Wilson in prison and tells him that Hungerford has reformed, and has settled down on a small farm in Wilson's home town. Wilson escaping from prison, comes to his mother's home, but is ashamed to enter. He goes down the main street. It is a Sabbath morning, and all the people are going to church. Wilson follows them and through the church windows hears them singing the hymn, "Just As I Am."

It recalls the days of his childhood, and takes the vengeance out of his heart. But thinking of the injustice done him by Hungerford, Wilson again resolves to kill the man. As he goes to Hungerford's home, and as he is about to kill him from a hiding place, Hungerford's little girl runs directly in front of a runaway team. Wilson snatches the child from beneath the horses' feet, and in doing so he is fatally injured. Broken and bleeding, he is rescued by his own mother and again by her knee he breathes his last. Hungerford recognizes the man he had wronged, and is left with a guilty conscience as punishment.

Henrietta receives a telegram stating that her uncle in the west, had bequeathed her his ranch, and she sets forth to take possession. When she arrives at the ranch, she puts the cowboys to work, and they appeal to Bobbs, now known as a "bad man, who tells the boys that he can lick any woman. At the ranch Bobbs is confronted by no less a person than his Henrietta, who, after taking his artillery from him, makes him foreman of the ranch.

THE LOVE OF LOTI SAN (Special—Three Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: Bessie Eyton, Edward J. Piel, Al. W. Filson, Virginia Kirtley, Richard Morris and Cecil Holland.

Harry Graham, a civil engineer, and Walter Arnold, a wealthy idler, are rivals for the love of Norine Marsden. Graham receives an offer from John Smedley, a business man, to represent the Smedley interests in Japan, but refuses the offer. Arnold proposes to Graham that they both learn their fate at a forthcoming social function to be given by Norine Marsden. Graham agrees. On the day of the party Graham and Arnold send flowers to Norine, each enclosing a note, asking the girl to carry the floral tributes to signify that she loves him. The notes become mixed by Norine's maid. Norine loves Harry Graham, and she selects what she believes to be Graham's flowers, but instead they belong to Arnold. When Graham sees the girl he loves wearing the flowers sent by another, he is downcast and when Arnold, later rejected by the girl, craftily informs Graham that he has been accepted, Graham resolves to go to Japan.

As the years pass, Arnold continues to be refused by Norine, while Harry Graham abjures all social pleasures in the Flowery Kingdom, thinking constantly of the girl he believes he has lost. One day a jinrikisha carrying Loti San, a young Japanese girl, collides with the jinrikisha occupied by Graham. Loti San is injured, and Graham carries her into the home of her father Okito. The little Japanese maiden falls in love with the American. One day when Graham calls at the home of Okito to see Loti San, he discovers the Japanese girl kissing a glove he has left there previously, and he comes to a realization of her love. He believes it is his duty to marry her, and he does so.

James Marsden, Norine's father, breathes his last, and Norine is advised by her physician to take a tour of the world. Eventually she arrives in Japan. Even the advent of a baby at the home of Harry Graham and Loti San fails to dispel thoughts of Norine from the mind of Graham. One day Graham and Norine meet. The flame of love brightens again. But Norine repulses the advances of Graham when he tells her that he is married. Graham continues to make desperate love to Norine, who again repulses him. But Graham's love for the American girl is discovered by little Loti San, who, with her baby, goes to the home of her father.

Norine urges Graham to return to his wife and baby, and tells him that she shall immediately leave the country. Graham, in desperation, wanders into a hut occupied by a victim of the Oriental plague. He gives the sufferer aid and contracts the disease from which there is no recovery. Word is brought to both Norine Marsden and Loti San that Graham is desperately ill at his home. Norine and Loti San and her baby reach Graham's home together. Despite the fact that Graham is calling her name in his delirium, Norine falters in the doorway and turns away. Loti San gives her baby to Norine to take away with her, and enters the sick room, there to sacrifice her own life in caring for her husband.

COUNT TWENTY (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 30).—The cast: Mary Malatesta, Jack Drumeir, Joseph McDermott, Ivan Christy, Gus Pixley, W. C. Robinson and Sidney D'Albrook.

The daughter of the old laborer has an ungovernable temper. When he dies suddenly, she is adopted by the contractor for whom her father has worked, and is given a place in the office. In her new home she is not permitted to indulge in tantrums. "Whenever you feel angry, county twenty before speaking," is the good advice of her foster mother, and by constant application of it she begins to get the better of her temper. The contractor's foreman tries to make love to her and is rebuffed. He becomes angry, and she gives him a slip of paper on which she has swiftly typed a message. It is: "When angry, county twenty before you speak." The contractor's son interferes as the foreman again approaches the girl, and bad blood is engendered.

The bank messenger brings the payroll, and the young man places the money in the safe, to which only he and his father hold the combination. His love for the girl leads him to tell her the combination, and the foreman, listening behind a door, copies the figures on the first piece of paper he can fish out of his pocket. It is the girl's typewritten message. To cast suspicion on his rival, the foreman engages two rockmen to burglarize the safe. They leave the paper on the floor, where it is found by the girl after the contractor has suspected his son of theft. She goes to the foreman and recovers the money, which she places where it will seem to have been overlooked. The foreman sends his hirelings to kidnap his rival, and the rockmen place their prisoner in an empty house. The girl, heartbroken by her lover's accusation that she took the money, leaves her foster parents and returns to her father's home—the empty house. She discovers her lover bound, and sets him free. Together they go for the sheriff, and the conspirators are rounded up.

THE HUNGARIAN NABOB (Special—Four Parts—Dec. 1).—The cast: Charles H. Mailes, Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale, Madge Kirby, Irma Dawkins, Hector V. Sarno, Laura LaVarnie, Herbert Barrington and Gus Pixley.

Count John Karpathy, of Hungary, known as the Nabob by reason of his lavish entertainments, is stricken while entertaining the peasantry on his estate. Word is sent to his nephew and sole heir, Count Bela Karpathy, who is living riotously in Paris. As Bela is at the end of his resources, the news of his uncle's expected demise is more than welcome He starts for home. In a few days the Nabob recovers his health, to the great joy of all, and gives another feast in celebration. When the evening is on the wane, the whim seizes him to complete the feast at the inn. The innkeeper has long since retired, but is routed out, and the festivities begin. Bela's carriage breaks down near at hand, and he enters the inn. Meeting with the Nabob, whom he does not know, Bela explains his presence by showing the letter he received in Paris, and adds: "Thank Heaven the old fool is dead—I'll show them how to spend money." Thus insulted, the Nabob reveals his identity, and declares: "While the law won't let me disinherit you, you shall not get a penny while I live!"

Characteristically the Nabob commands that the inn, which is his property, be burned down, as it is contaminated by Bela's presence. In a neighboring town Bela is rejoined by his boon companions, who have struck up a flirtation with the notorious Meyer girls. The girls take him home and introduce him to their virtuous sister, Fanny. He seizes Fanny and kisses her against her will. The girls' father and their aunt Teresa intervene, and the old man asks Teresa to take his innocent child away from her sisters' influence. Then, in an apoplectic fit induced by excitement, he dies.

The Nabob's birthday approaches, and, in his loneliness, he extends to Bela forgiveness and an invitation. Bela replies that he cannot come, but adds: "May you soon find use for the gift I send you." In the presence of the guests the box is opened, and found to contain a coffin. Bela persecutes Fanny with his attentions, sending her a pearl necklace which she throws through the window. He follows her to church and hears her sing in the choir. Approaching Dame Kramm, the housekeeper, Bela remarks that Fanny's beautiful voice must be cultivated, and insists on paying for the lessons. When he refuses to take the money back, Aunt Teresa sends it to a newspaper, with the request that it be given to charity. The newspaper publishes the facts. The Nabob reads the story and, visiting Fanny, requests her to marry him, so that Bela's persecution may end. With her sisters' aid Bela entices Fanny to rooms where Matilda has pretended that she and Magda are living in poverty. As Bela is about to take her in his arms, Fanny calls, and the Nabob enters. "Let me introduce my husband," she says. For nonpayment of debts Bela is ostracized by his fellows. And he loses all hope of becoming the Nabob's heir, for Fanny presents her husband with a son, to the joy of Bela's enemies.

Uncle John arrives, accompanied by a ward, who becomes very intimate with "Mrs." George and thereby occasions much anxiety.

The climax is reached when George sees the girl, in deshabille, coming out of his disguised friend's room. The owners of the house return unexpectedly and discover "Mrs." George smoking a cigar while the others are out. In the midst of the excitement George confesses and tries to square things with Uncle John by offering to wed the girl, but she says she prefers "friend wife."

The attack is witnessed by the boy and his little sweetheart, whom he has persuaded to run away with him. They are captured by the Indians and about to be killed when Indian Charlie recognizes his benefactor. THE LEGEND OF THE POISONED POOL (Nov. 29).—The cast: William J. Spencer, Adelaide Bronti, Jay Morley, George Routh, Vivian Caples.

To a pool on an Indian reservation come a number of travelers. As one of the girls is about to take a drink Lo, an Indian, stops her, declaring that the water is poisoned. Plied with questions, Lo relates the legend of the pool.

In the early days, there lived in the tribe Tiwaka, a Christian convert, and her paleface son, Paul. Paul wins the favor of the girl, Winitan, to the great displeasure of Undi, the Chief's son. Soon Winitan is converted, and the little trio of Christians often meet in prayer before the clay cross Winitan has modeled for Paul. Then comes the famine, and the people pray at the Kiva to the Great Spirit. Undi, nursing his vengeance against Paul, sees the latter praying to his Christian God, and reports the proceeding to the Medicine Man. After a struggle, during which the cross is broken, Paul is made prisoner for having incited the anger of the Great Spirit, and is condemned to death. Tiwaka, who has witnessed his capture, plans to save him.

Accordingly she has Winitan pour water on the sacred fire that constantly burns beneath the Kiva, and while the attention of the Indians is diverted to the dread sight, quickly releases Paul, who escapes with Winitan. Seeing how disconsolate Paul is at the loss of his cross, Winitan promises to have another for him in the ovens that night. Undi overhears and places a huge rattlesnake over the cross. When Paul reaches for the precious gift, he receives the fatal venom and staggers home to Tiwaka. In a frenzy, Tiwaka bathes his wound at the pool, but to no avail, for Paul dies in her arms.

The next morning, ridiculed by the Indians, among them Undi, Tiwaka tragically prays for a miracle to convince the unbelievers. Undi, laughing, drinks from the pool, and the next minute clutches his throat and dies in agony. Tiwaka, triumphant, causes the Indians to fall back in awe.

"And the pool has remained poisoned ever since," concludes Lo. The visitors, glad to have escaped an untimely end, liberally tip him. After they have gone, he laughs heartily, and pocketing the money, quaffs liberally of the water. The legend is his own invention!

and fairs. Mr. Schmaltz is a wealthy business man, the czar of the delicatessen business. Schmaltz and Klotz look alike. A big picnic is given in honor of Schmaltz, and Klotz sets up his tent for business right at the edge of festivities. Schmaltz imbibes a bit too freely and strolls away from his hosts long enough to get mixed up in Klotz's picture place.

He butts into a picture while Klotz is getting a focus, and with its development Klotz deceived by the likeness to himself is driven nearly frantic trying to explain to himself how he got in a picture taken by himself. Missing the wayward beer drinker, Schmaltz, Lady Schmaltz sets out in search of him, and even she, in error, has her butler "capture" Klotz by mistake. Klotz receives all the upbraiding and incidentally a rattling good time at Schmaltz's expense. Even the wives of both men lead off the wrong husbands into many laughable situations before the error is discovered.

THE TAINT (Special—Three parts—Dec. 1). —The cast: James Vincent, Roy Sheldon, Valentine Grant, P. H. O'Malley.

Frank Boward, a profligate, forces his attentions on Mabel Stuart, who detests him. Bert, Mabel's brother, returns home after a visit to his college chums and brings with him Arthur Easton. Mabel and Arthur are attracted to each other. Mystery envelopes Mabel's mother and the daughter pleads with her father to tell her who her mother was but he refuses. Frank becomes jealous of Arthur. The Stuarts give a house party, at which Frank and Arthur are guests. Frank, having knowledge of Mr. Stuart's secret, plots to secure Mabel for his wife. When every one has retired, Frank tells her to step to his room and he will tell her who her mother was. She does and Frank discloses the fact that her mother was a negress.

Arthur, passing Frank's door, hears him moving about and stops. When the occupants of the room hear the knock Mabel rushes into the next room, but her shawl is caught in the door. Arthur enters, and is just about to go when he recognizes Mabel's shawl. She is brought out but refuses to explain. In the morning Arthur leaves the house heartbroken. Frank again forces his attentions on Mabel and tells her if she doesn't marry him he will tell the whole world her secret. Mabel is overcome, but agrees to marry Frank. Bert tries to persuade Mabel to give Frank up, but she refuses, so Bert refuses to attend the wedding.

On the night of the wedding the Stuart mill catches fire. Bert telephones to his father. The marriage is interrupted. The father tells Bert to secure the package with the photo in his desk at all costs. Bert risks his life and secures the package. The package contains Mabel's birth certificate and she learns that her mother was a white woman. They learn of Frank's perudy and he is driven out of the house. Frank tries to drown his troubles in drink and is shanghaied on board an ocean steamer. Out at sea they run short of water, Frank is sent ashore in a boat to get the fresh water and is attacked and killed by cannibals.

A mysterious lady calls at the Stuart home and Mabel recognizes her as her mother. The family are reunited and Arthur comes back to claim Mabel.

THE SILENT MAN (Special—Two parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: L. C. Shumway, George Routh, George Berrell, Melvin Mayo, Velma Whitman, Eleanor Blevins, Louis Fitz Roy.

Olga Kosloff, celebrated Russian actress playing in England, visits an insane asylum on the coast to study types. The warden suggests that perhaps Olga would be interested in "The Silent Man," a Russian who was picked up in a small boat on the open sea five years ago. When the warden takes her to see the man, Olga utters a cry of horror. She was leading woman in a Russian play. One night she received a note from her sister, Anna, who had become mixed up with Nihilists, and was under arrest. Anna in her note begged Olga to save her, and Olga visited the office of Volinine, Minister of Police. Volinine had just received a visit from Prince Sergius of the Russian court, who bribed him to discredit his brother, Prince Mikail, in the eyes of the Grand Duke Alexis, their uncle. The Grand Duke appointed Mikail to a position in the Czar's service and Sergius was jealous. So Volinine saw a chance to use Olga in his scheme to discredit Mikail. He told her if she would follow his instructions, he would allow her sister to go free, and Olga became his tool.

At a reception given by the Grand Duke, Olga was hired to entertain the guests. Mikail falls in love with her and, much to her surprise, Olga found that she returned his affection. One night Prince Sergius stole some government plans from the Grand Duke's desk. Then he and Volinine summoned Olga and told her to secret the papers on Mikail when he visited her that night, and when they left the theater to drop her cloak as a signal to several secret service men. Olga was forced to consent to save her sister. She induced Mikail to take the plans by telling him they were the manuscript of her new play which she wanted him to read. The Grand Duke discovered his loss, and when the plans were found on Mikail the Duke was wrought up at the knowledge that there was a traitor in his family. The Grand Duke ordered Mikail led to the torture cell to be branded before he was cast adrift.

The next day Olga visited Volinine and begged for the release of her sister. For answer he told her to look out of the window. She did so and saw Anna in chains on the way to Siberia. In a rage, Olga turned to kill Volinine, but his guards led her away. And now she has again met Mikail, a pitiful wreck of a man. That night she secures the warden's keys and goes to Mikail. In the moonlight from the barred window, the crazed man recognizes her. Olga tells him she has come to save him and he goes off with her. On a desolate stretch of beach, Mikail turns to Olga furiously and she knows that he is going to kill her. But she does not try to escape. They get into a small boat, and after they are well out Mikail casts away the oars. The last scene shows the two wrecked souls drifting onward with hundreds of sea gulls hovering over them.

AND THE PARROT SAID——? (Dec. 4).—The cast: Billie Reeves, Arthur Matthews, Richard Wangemann, Patsy De Forest, Clara Lambert, Charles Griffiths.

Lawyer Thompkins requests Wilkens to come to his office. Wilkens does so and learns that his wealthy uncle is dead. Thompkins tells him the will will be read the next day, but that in the meantime Wilkens must take care of Polly. Wilkens asks how old Polly is and is told eighteen. He is disappointed, however, when he finds Polly is not a girl but a parrot. The parrot is brought in and when it nips Wilkens' finger Wilkens conceives a strong dislike for it.

Wilkens takes the parrot home and then learns that parrots live a hundred years. His sweetheart and her Puritan mother call and are so horrified by the conversation of the parrot which they think it has learned from Wilkens that the engagement is broken. Wilkens can't find it in his heart to kill the parrot, so he gives it to the janitor. The janitor sells it to the owner of a bird store, who later sells it to Angelian Mortimer, a lady upstairs over Wilkens.

Wilkens goes to Thompkins, who informs him that by the terms of the will he gets $5,000 a year as long as he keeps the parrot, and he remembers he has lost the parrot. He learns that the owner of the bird store who bought it from the janitor has sold it to an unknown man, and he gives up his $5,000 a year for lost. He presently receives a note from the lawyer, who is going to call to give a check and see the parrot. He decides to get a substitute—another parrot, and rushes out to get one. Unknown to him, the same idea occurs to his valet and the janitor. When the lawyer arrives he finds Wilkens with a parrot. Immediately the janitor brings another and the valet a third. Thompkins realizes he is being tricked and refuses to give up the check.

Meanwhile Angelian, above, has been horrified by the conversation of the parrot and has put it on the fire escape, where all the neighbors throw things at it. The parrot yells police. Wilkens hears this, looks up, recognizes his bird and steals it. Thompkins is satisfied and gives Wilkens his check, and eventually he gets his girl back.

THE OTHER SISTER (Dec. 6).—The cast: Joseph W. Smiley, Lilie Leslie, Sybil Forrest, Donald Paulding, Flora Lea, Wm. Cohill.

Jane Forrest is the assistant editor of "The Evening Blade," owned and managed by Henry Arnold, who has come to depend upon Jane as his "right-hand man." Though Arnold likes Jane well enough, and finds her companionable as well as efficient, he never guesses that she is hiding a love for him. Jane's sister, Sybil, has caused her many hours of worry through thoughtless affairs with men, and though Sybil has done nothing wrong, Jane would welcome her marriage to some man who would protect her from danger. Jane especially fears Donald Paulding. Sybil breaks her promise not to see Paulding, and goes with him to a cafe.

The same evening Arnold invites Jane to go to supper with him. Jane pleads that she is not dressed for supper, but Arnold tells her that she does not have to "doll up" for him. They are just pals. Jane then knows that her love for Arnold is hopeless. They go to the same cafe, and meet Sybil and Paulding. Arnold becomes interested in the younger girl and Sybil at length marries Arnold.

But the younger girl has long been used to pleasure and finds life with Arnold more than dull. To her the climax is reached when Arnold finds it necessary to break a theater engagement and return to the office. Arnold thinks of Sybil's loneliness and 'phones Jane to go and spend the evening with her. When Jane reaches the house she finds that Sybil has gone out with Paulding. She remains, however, and when Sybil and Paulding return, she surprises them in embrace in the hallway. At this point, Arnold reaches the house, and finds the three in a tense situation.

Jane saves Sybil by declaring that Paulding had come with her. While Arnold is away on business Sybil plans with Paulding to elope. Jane learns of their plan and determines to thwart it. At a dance given by Sybil, Jane appears stylishly gowned and carries all the men before her. She ensnares Paulding, in accordance with her plan, and Sybil discovers her admirer proposing to her sister, under the influence of Jane's intimation that she has saved a great deal of money. Sybil bursts into a rage, but is met with a cool rejoinder from Jane. Sybil sees her mistake and rushes to her room. Jane's purpose accomplished, she immediately 'phones Sybil, but is met with a sniff of disdain, and Sybil turns from the 'phone to rush into the arms of her returning husband. Arnold tells her that he is going to retire from the paper and turn it over Jane, as that is all she thinks about.

PLAYING THE SAME GAME (Dec. 7).—The cast: D. L. Don, Florence Williams, Carrie Reynolds, Bartley McCullun, Mary Rowland.

A misleading note which Mrs. Recentwed received and which Mr. Recentwed unfortunately found one morning aroused the poor husband's jealousy. Mr. Recentwed's business partner ridiculed him for his primitive methods and advised that the sure way to punish an erring wife was to play her same game. Mr. Recentwed was at last persuaded to try the plan. Her actions had made it obvious that Mrs. Recentwed intended to entertain a certain "Harry Leiber" at her home at four o'clock on the afternoon of the day that the note was found, so Mr. Recentwed was obliged to hurry some to find "the other woman."

He tried his maid at first but with dire results. Then his stenographer, but vowing vengeance, she left his employ. Next he went to an employment agency. But when he tried to explain his mission to two fair maids direct from Erin's Isle, he met with sad disaster. Quite desperate he wound his way to the Marriage Bureau and told the broker that he, a widower, wanted a prospective bridge quickly.

Becky, long on the waiting list, quickly responded. Mr. Recentwed winced when the lady, an Amazon, greatly lacking in beauty, appeared, but as there was not time to be discriminating, he closed his eyes, braced himself and led the lady forth. A few moments before four o'clock, the time set for the arrival of the wife and her "lover," Mr. Recentwed led Becky to a settee within sight of the front door, and gingerly began making love. A most loving attitude was discovered by wifey as she appeared in the doorway, followed by the lover, her college chum, "Harry" Leiber, otherwise known as Miss Harriet Leiber. Weeping, shrieking and demanding explanations began and when Becky realized that she had been fooled, her Amazonian strength became evident. A bruised, tattered Mr. Recentwed and a wrecked house was the consequence. Not until complete demolishment did Becky depart. With difficulty then did the innocent mischief maker bring order out of chaos. But it was a tattered chastened spouse that was at last forgiven by a justly indignant Mrs. Recentwed.

His son, Antonio, is in college and is ignorant of his father's connections. Pordoni breaks with the Council and they try to get him back. He refuses and the death penalty is imposed upon him. Louisa pleads with Bonfilo to intervene, but Bonfilo is helpless, as the word of the council is law. Louisa finds her father dead. Feeling that Bonfilo is responsible, she goes to his home to avenge her father. She is cheated in this by the natural death of Bonfilo and she turns her hate upon Antonio. Antonio is recalled from college by the death of his father and takes up his life at home.

Louisa, thrown upon her own resources, takes an engagement in a cafe as entertainer. Antonio visits the cafe one night and is recognized by Louisa. Under the guise of being friendly, she secretes in Antonio's pocket a bracelet belonging to her. Then she sets up a cry of thief. The bracelet is found in Antonio's pocket and he tries to fight his way out. The gangsters in the cafe are rough fellows and when the police come there is a free-for-all fight. A policeman is killed and a rush follows that clears the place, leaving Antonio, a senseless, beaten pulp.

Louisa's hate, satisfied, turns to pity for the wreck she has caused, and to make amends in a way she hides him in her home and begins to nurse him back to health. His appearance is marred forever, however, by a broken nose and many scars. The blows on his head have induced brain fever and it is many weeks before he regains consciousness. During this time Louisa has been nursing him and has grown to love him. The police search for him as the murderer of the policeman and she knows he will be convicted if he is taken. At last he is able to get out. When he sees the havoc Louisa's hatred has wrought in his appearance, his hate for her becomes intensified and it is with difficulty that he restrains himself from killing her. Hounded by the police, Antonio is hidden by members of the Council. The police learn of his hiding place. Antonio is caught in a trap and is in a fair way of being killed when Louisa imposes her body between and takes the ball that was meant for him. Antonio makes his escape, but remembering that Louisa cared for him when he was unable to care for himself, returns to take her to a place of safety. He finds her and his anxiety awakens the spark of love that has been smouldering and they travel through life together.

THE OGRE AND THE GIRL (Special—Three parts—Dec. 9).—The cast: Bernard Siegel, Kempton Greene, James J. Daly, Marie Sterling, Geraldine O'Brien, Clarence J. Elmer, James Cassady.

This Ogre was not he of the fairy tales, but a kindly wealthy man of forbidding face to whom those who did not know him gave the name. Tiring of loneliness he decided to marry, and wooed the Girl who lived at the foot of the hill. On account of his great wealth the Girl's parents encouraged his suit, but she shrank from him and sought the solitude of her beloved glens and brooksides.

Here she encountered her ideal lover in the person of a young surveyor and to these two came love at first sight. Their wooing, however, was soon interrupted by one long discarded, who had come back from afar again to press his suit. A fight ensued between the two young men, in which the surveyor was seriously injured and the Girl had him taken to her home. A forest fire is started by the carelessly thrown matches of the Discarded One and the flames soon spread to the Girl's home. The Girl attempts to carry her lover to safety but fails. The Discarded One saves the Girl, but leaves his helpless rival to die, apparently.

The lover is saved, but the Ogre discovers that it is his rival. He decides to destroy that life, and mixes in a glass all of the powders of a dangerous sleeping draught instead of one. The Girl, entering the room to resume her vigil at the bedside, the Ogre instructs her how to administer the draught. Just as she lifted the glass the Ogre repented and brushed the glass aside. When the lover recovered, he learned that the Girl was already preparing to fulfill her promise to wed the Ogre. The wedding day came and the guests were assembled in the great drawing room to witness the ceremony, when from the garden outside there came the discordant pandemonium of a mob, led by the Discarded One, who had organized a "shivaree."

Stung to the soul by this untimely insult, the Ogre delayed the ceremony, rushed out into the garden, fired into the crowd and wounded the Discarded One. Then, when he submitted to arrest, returning to the drawing room, he placed the hand of the Girl in that of her lover and passed out into the night a prisoner. There was no ceremony that night, but two days later the Lover and the Girl were man and wife and the Ogre deeded to them his beautiful Castle as a wedding gift.

THE STOOL PIGEON (Dec. 10).—The cast: L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Velma Whitman, Robert Gray.

Hickey, a contemptible character, acts as a spy for the police, keeping them posted concerning the doings of the crooks with whom he consorts. In return, the police, although they despise him, pay him small sums of money for expenses. Threatened with the loss of this source of income because he is growing less useful to the police. Hickey is at his wit's end. He discovers an apartment house where a burglary might easily be committed and decides to frame up a robbery to make himself solid with the police.

Joe King, a laborer out of employment, is the unfortunate whom he picks for the scapegoat. King is persuaded to join Hickey in the robbery, but Hickey first notifies the police. When the two attempt to rob the house, a police trap is sprung and both are arrested.

Subsequently at the police station King is locked up and Hickey is released. Benny, the pickpocket, has seen King with Hickey. He knows that Hickey is a police spy. The day following King's arrest, Benny is caught in the act of robbing a woman's purse and thrown in jail. Both Benny and King are convicted on the same day, and a detective starts to the penitentiary with them handcuffed together.

Meanwhile, Hickey has learned that King has a pretty wife who cannot understand what has become of her husband. On the way to the penitentiary the detective is obliged to wait with his prisoners at a railroad junction. He handcuffs them to a baggage truck while he stretches his legs on the platform. Meanwhile King has learned from Benny how he was tricked by Hickey. Seizing a moment when the detective is at the far end of the platform Benny slips his small hand out of the cuff, releasing both him and his companion. The prisoners flee in opposite directions. The detective pursues Benny and ultimately captures him, but King makes good his escape. He returns on foot to the city and visits his home, arriving just a few moments after Hickey. Hickey is forcing his obnoxious attentions on Mrs. King when King enters the room. A fight between the two men takes place in the room, during which Hickey receives a smashing blow in the face which staggers him backward through the window. He falls three stories to the sidewalk. He is taken to the police hospital and King is rearrested, but in the hospital Hickey, being told that he is dying, makes a full confession.

Billie transforms his home into a gym. and sends his butler for Dr. Walton. When the doctor arrives Billie discovers in the physical culture instructor Frances Walton of the reception. Cornered, he accepts and begins the vigorous exercise prescribed. The hardening of muscles brings softening of the heart, and Billie gradually realizes that the love bug has bitten him.

With a tremendous effort he hikes himself to the marriage license bureau and returns determined to win her on the next visit. He rehearses the proposal with a mirror and keen for the effort comes down to meet the doctor. Bing! goes the courage and he makes another flight in embarrassment. Frances, however, finds the license dropped in his excitement and, herself in love with Billie, she summons a long bearded dominee, who arrives, and together they corner Billie in his gym. With the butler as a witness they recite "Love, Honor and Obey."

Like a flash out of his old life in England, Stingaree, riding close to the settlement, hears the voice of Ethel, his former sweetheart. The two meet face to face, and the bushranger learns that Ethel, forced by family misfortune to earn her own livelihood, has come to Australia to become a companion to Mrs. Clarkson. Stingaree is informed that there is to be a concert at which Mrs. Clarkson will sing.

That night, Stingaree and his partner, Howie, burst in upon the audience while Mrs. Clarkson is singing. Holding the people at pistol's point, Stingaree compels Ethel, seated next to Mrs. Clarkson, to mount the platform and sing. Sir Julian Crum, a famous musician touring Australia, accompanies the girl on the piano.

The song ended, Stingaree and Howie flee. Clarkson follows Stingaree and attempts to shoot the bushranger, only to find his weapon unloaded. Later, Ethel, whose voice has made a tremendous impression, confesses to having extracted the cartridge from the weapon. The ovation which followed Ethel's singing, together with the fact that Stingaree had eluded her husband, arouses Mrs. Clarkson's ire and she discharges Ethel. Sir Julian promptly engages the girl to accompany him on his tour. Back in his hidden retreat, Stingaree's thoughts go back to England, Ethel and to the happiness he had once known.

Covering the young man with a revolver which he carries in his coat pocket, the chauffeur compels Bob to get into an auto outside. The machine is then headed towards the shack. In the meantime, Marguerite has taken the old hag by surprise. Barely has the heiress locked Martha in the adjoining room that she hears Rudolph and Bob approaching. Snatching the lamp from the table, Marguerite hides behind the door. The moment the chauffeur enters, his victim crashes the lamp down upon his head and knocks him unconscious. After overpowering Helen, they bind and gag the girl. This done, the crooks rifle the safe.

The struggle awakens Trent and after a considerable effort he succeeds in breaking out of the baggage room. The yeggmen have by this time made a dash toward a train which is about to pull out. Helen is released by Trent and together the two hasten after the desperadoes.

Helen and Trent see the yeggmen boarding the Pullman. A minute later the train pulls out. The pursuers barely manage to land on the rods of the last car. Determined to catch Dun and Corson before they can make their getaway at the next station, Trent braces his legs against the rods so that his body projects at right angle to the side of the car. When the clerk regains consciousness, he finds himself bound to a post and confronting death at Stingaree's hand. The young man's nerve subsequently arouses the outlaw's admiration and he spares his life. Writing a brief account of Fergus's daring, Stingaree pins it to the post with his knife and speeds away. THE HEART OF A TIGRESS (Three parts—Nov. 20).—The cast: Mlle. Paul Bourgeois, Paul Bourgeois, Betty Schade, Fred L. Wilson.

Mrs. Grace Haverty, a wealthy widow, tired of the social life, goes to South Africa to trap animals for her private menagerie. During her expeditionary trip she uses the bungalow upon the ranch of James Lestrange as her headquarters. Having obtained all the animals and snakes she desires, except a very big lion, Mrs. Haverty determines to capture it before starting home. James Lestrange has conceived for the widow a violent passion and makes an unavailable appeal to her to marry him and stay in South Africa. Mrs. Haverty receives a letter from Jack Williams, who is hunting animals in India. He has captured two tigers, which he has consented to deliver to Mrs. Haverty upon her private yacht in the port of Singapore. Mrs. Haverty captures the lion and makes all preparations to leave for Singapore.

Lestrange is so determined in his love-making that at last Mrs. Haverty agrees to allow him to accompany her. The man interests Mrs. Haverty, and yet she cannot quite persuade herself to give him her hand. At Singapore they pick up Jack Williams and his two tigers. Lestrange is soon forgotten and Mrs. Haverty turns her attention to Williams, who, although admiring the woman's beauty and charm, is rather indifferent to her. Lestrange becomes jealous, and one night after tying Williams to the deck releases the lions. While the beasts are roaming the ship Williams is trying to escape. Mrs. Haverty, missing a magazine she wishes to read, and, supposing it is in her deck chair, sends Helen Moore, her secretary, to find it. Jack succeeds in forcing the gag from his mouth just as Helen comes along the deck, and a moment or two later she frees him. Barely are his hands loose when one of the lions bounds into the scene. Picking up a deck chair, the man protects Helen from the onslaught of the savage beast. Grace hears the noise and with the aid of Williams she succeeds in driving the animals back into their cages. The rest of the trip to California is made without event and Mrs. Haverty takes up her quarters in her Pasadena home.

A few weeks later she decides to give a most novel reception. When the guests arrive at her home they are shown into a huge hallway in which tigers roam about at will. Later in the evening, seeing Jack and Helen together in a boat on the lake, Mrs. Haverty, madly jealous, forces her tiger to smell of Helen's scarf and then drives the beast after her. A moment later the animal has scented Helen and is swimming toward the boat. Expecting her rival will soon be in the clutches of the tiger, Mrs. Haverty watches from the balcony, but later she sees Helen swimming toward land and Jack fighting off the infuriated beast. Jack succeeds in driving off the tiger, and a few minutes later the parties are safely back on land.

That night Lestrange lays a trail of meat from the cages to Mrs. Haverty's room. Grace does not see him as he opens the doors of the cages, nor does she realize there is any danger to her until she is suddenly awakened by the sound of Mrs. Haverty's voice. In the doorway stands Mrs. Haverty and one of the tigers, whom she is commanding to spring upon the girl. Suddenly, from Mrs. Haverty's room, is heard a terrible crash and she sees two lions crashing through the panels of her doorway. With a cry of fear she drags the tiger at her side back into her bedroom. Helen then hurries to the telephone and tells Jack what terrible things are happening in Mrs. Haverty's house. Lestrange, thinking that the lions are by this time engaging the attention of Mrs. Haverty's tigers, steps into the upper hallway and goes into her room. Mrs. Haverty is startled and loses control over the beasts, and in a moment the two lions and two tigers are fighting for their lives. Lestrange attempts to seize Mrs. Haverty, but she shoots him dead.

Shocked at what she has done Mrs. Haverty rushes into the hall. The animals are still fighting, but Mrs. Haverty, recovering her poise, soon brings them under her control once more. She calls in the servants and they start to rope the two lions and two tigers. Mrs. Haverty walks out on the balcony and sees Helen and Jack in the latter's automobile. In Mrs. Haverty's room the servants have roped all the animals except one tiger. Determined to escape, it runs through the window on to the balcony. A second later a shriek is heard and Mrs. Haverty and her tiger go hurtling over the balcony down into the depths of the lake below. And out on the road Helen and Jack roll on to begin life anew.

As the freight train on which are riding Mike and Leary, two knights of the road, passes the station at Hynes, the tramps steal the mail bag which had been placed on the crane by the postmaster of that place. They jump from the train in a secluded spot and start to rifle the bag. The tramps find a torn twenty-dollar bill which had been pieced together by the postmaster, and Mike goes to the railroad station at Hynes to purchase two tickets for the city. There is not enough money in the drawer to make the proper change, and Tom Walker, the agent, takes twenty dollars in small money from his own pocket to make the proper change, and takes the torn twenty to make up the deficit. At the hiding place, Mike learns that Leary has discovered a letter in which it is stated that on the following day the local jeweler will send by registered mail to a city diamond merchant $300 to pay for the shipment ordered from their traveling salesman. The tramps decide to remain and steal the letter.

Meanwhile Tom has gone to the local jeweler to purchase an engagement ring for Helen Holmes, the operator at Hynes, with whom he is betrothed. The torn twenty is among the bills he gives to the merchant. The postmaster receives notice that no bag was picked up and he starts his investigation at the depot. Being unsuccessful, he returns to the post office in time to see the jeweler counting out enough money to pay for the goods ordered. He spies the torn twenty, recognizes it, and after being informed that Tom handed it to him in payment of a ring, the postmaster has Tom arrested, despite his explanation.

The following day Mike and his pal overhear the postmaster tell Helen to see that the local picks up the mail bag, and decide to kidnap her. Alone, Helen is attacked by the men, who bind her securely and start for the mail bag, which they obtain. Helen works herself free of the bonds and jumps from the attic window to the top of the passing freight in which the tramps have taken refuge, and informs the crew, who, after a series of incidents, capture the bandits. The missing letters are found on the crooks and Tom is exculpated.

THINK ABOUT IT.

also expresses a wish that she and Markham marry. Ruth dislikes Markham and she and Earl Hampton, the honest and conscientious foreman of Redmond's mine, become close friends. This is a great blow to Markham, bue he keeps in the background, knowing how much the girl will respect her father's wishes. Earl and Ruth fall very much in love with each other, and she finally tells him of her father's will.

Markham, believing that his scheme to win Ruth will fail, determines to destroy her. Ruth notices a metal ring which Earl wears on his wrist and in reply to her inquiry as to where he got it, tells her that he found it in a cave. An old Indian told him that it will protect the original finder, but that harm would befall the one who steals it from him. Earl is also informed that it is a cure for rheumatism. Morton, Markham's accomplice, overhears the latter part of the story and determines to steal the ring for his rheumatism. Earl absently lays the ring aside one day and Morton steals it. Earl and Ruth become more affectionate, and she tells all to Markham, who promises not to interfere. After leaving her he begins to lay a trap which will put her out of the way. He lays a line of wires to the powder house and attaches a cap to it near the dynamite. One of the miners has stumbled across the wires and broken one of them. He fastens the ends of the wires together but the strain on the wire gradually worked the ends loose so that there is about an inch difference between the contacts.

Markham takes the girl out for a walk, intending to take her to the powder house. He loses control of himself and tells the girl how he has planned to destroy her. Markham carries the girl to the powder house, locks her up and gives the signal to his accomplice to close the circuit. But there is no explosion. He hurries to his accomplice to find out why he has not carried out his orders but Morton shows him the closed switch. They begin to investigate, unconsciously leaving the switch closed. Ruth, upon recovering consciousness, succeeds in breaking out of the powder house and hastens home. Earl meets her and learns what has happened.

Markham hastens to the powder house to see if Ruth is still there, while his accomplice begins to investigate. Earl comes upon him just as he has found the break in the wire and they have a fight. Earl strikes him a terrific blow and Morton falls with sprawling arms outstretched. The arm with the wrist ring settles directly over the broken ends of the connection, making a complete circuit. There is an explosion; the powder house is blown to pieces.

Earl has no sooner left Ruth when she hastens after him. She sees a man running in the distance whom she thinks is Earl, but she soon discovers that she is mistaken and that it is Markham. She sees him go into the powder house. She then comes upon Earl and Morton in the fight and sees Morton fall. Earl discovers her and tells her that he will now go after Markham, but she silently points to where the powder house once stood and tells him that Markham will never bother him again.

HE WAS ONLY A BATHING SUIT SALESMAN (Three Parts, Dec. 1).—The cast: Rosemary Theby, Jennie Nelsen, Harry C. Myers.

A young bathing suit salesman meets in Washington a girl whom he flirts with in front of the Capitol. He finally persuades her to let him call. They become engaged. The next day he phones her that he will have to go to Baltimore for several days, after which he would like to meet her in Philadelphia where they will be married. She consents. But, while in Baltimore, like all salesmen, he spies a lady on the street and follows her. Later he takes her out to dine. Several days later, he meets his fiancee in Philadelphia. They are married and leave for New York where they take up housekeeping.

His wife's mother, who, by the way, is the pretty lady with whom her husband flirted and had out to dine, drops her daughter a note telling her that she is coming to visit her, also that in order to play a joke on her son-in-law, she had a caricature portrait made of herself, in order to disgust her husband. The daughter receives the portrait and tells her husband who it is. Hubby dashes out of the house at sight of the portrait. During the day her mother again notices the ad in the paper, visits the store to find the salesman who invited her out in Baltimore. Hubby again insists that she go out, which she does, and while they dine at a fine cafe, the poor wife waits at home while the dinner grows cold.

Finally she falls asleep. Hubby returns and wakens his wife, who is very angry. But when he tells her he has been working very hard, she relents and carries him off to bed. Next day the portrait is hung in a position opposite her husband's place at the table. Hubby is furious, and when his wife leaves the room, hurls plates and numerous other articles at the portrait, dashing out of the dining room to the kitchen, where he secures a plentiful supply of eggs. Finally he bell rings and wife goes to the door to find her mother there. Mother enters and confronts her son-in-law who is much perturbed and wonders how the woman whom he has been flirting with and whom he had been out with both in Baltimore and New York should know his wife. Finally his wife invites them to eat and says: "Mother dear, do have something." Hubby is aghast and corrects his wife, who, after a hearty laugh, says, "Why, this is the only mother I ever knew." Realizing what he has done, Hubby finds it too much and dives through the window, leaving the two women in hysterics.

POWERS.

HOME LIFE OF THE SPIDER (Nov. 18).—This picture shows the water spider first carrying her eggs in the cocoon, which, broken open, reveals an almost unbelievable number, something over 200. Two weeks later another cocoon is open, naturally, and reveals the babies hatched and crawling out upon their mother's back, clustering about her and riding about wherever she goes. Until they reach a certain age they are very dependent upon her, and she is extremely motherly and solicitous about them.

One scene shows her giving the infants a sun bath, but as soon as they are able to shift for themselves the ungrateful youngsters desert her, never to return. The spider is an extremely industrious insect. All varieties seem imbued with an intense desire to work. Several kinds are shown in this film. One of them, the leopard spider, works so hard at spinning her cocoon that she falls exhausted and dying as the task is completed.

The wolf spider also is very industrious though imbued with a murderous antagonism to all other forms of life. The film shows a wolf spider in combat with several others of its variety. When it once obtains a strong hold on an opponent it is all over but the shouting.

MUSCLES AND MERRIMENT (On same reel as Foregoing).—This is a vaudeville act picture featuring five members of a Hungarian family, who have appeared and made successes in all of the capitals of Europe and America in an act requiring extreme strength and dexterity. Four of the family are men of different sizes, some depending on strength whereby they can uphold the other members of the troupe, and some upon their ability to balance, tumble, dance, jump and do all of the other tricks which a gymnast and equilibrist is noted for.

The other member of the troupe is a woman. When she permits the other four to balance themselves gracefully upon her head and shoulders one obtains the impression that she would be the last person in the world to disagree with. Good nature, however, shines from the faces of all of the troupe while they are going through their stunts, and particularly from the bright eyes of the strong little Hungarian "understander."

"HIS GOOD NAME" (Two Parts, Dec. 3).—The cast: Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn, Val Paul, Olive Adair, Mrs. Brunton.

Blair, a recent law graduate, hangs out his shingle in a Western town. He makes the acquaintance of Audrey Williams, who has aspirations to be a great artist. Blair observes that the girl has talent in that direction and advises the old grandmother with whom Audrey lives, to send her to New York to study. Monk Patterson, a tough character, is known and feared by all the townspeople. Mary, his wife, determines that she has had enough of him, and, while he is drunkenly sleeping, she goes to see a lawyer in the town in regard to securing a divorce. The lawyer knows and fears Monk, and refuses to help her. She is about to return in disgust when she sees a sign the new lawyer has hung out. She enters the office and tells him her throubles. He agrees to help her.

Monk finds his wife gone, and searching for her sees her leaving Blair's office. He gives her a beating and tells her he is going to kill Blair. Monk grabs a gun and hastens to Blair's office where he begins to threaten the lawyer. A struggle takes place for the possession of the weapon, which is discharged. Some of the townspeople rush in and find Monk dead and Blair standing over him, gun in hand. Blair is arrested for the murder, tried and convicted. Knowing he is innocent he succeeds in making his escape. Audrey has managed to get together enough funds and is making good in New York as an artist. She makes the acquaintance of Larkin and becomes engaged to him.

Malone, who shares apartments with Larkin, loves the girl, too, but keeps the matter a secret. Audrey and Larkin are married. Later, Audrey learns that her husband is a brute. One day as he is beating her, Malone interferes and Larkin is killed. Malone is arrested for the murder. Blair has changed his name and is a prominent lawyer in New York. Audrey appeals to him to save Malone, not through love but with the idea that she owes him a debt for protecting her. Recognition between Blair and Audrey is mutual and she tells him the whole story. He agrees to help her out and returns with her to her apartments and again meets the grandmother.

On the day of the trial Blair makes a powerful speech. As a precedent he quotes an incident in the West, leaving the names blank, and tells of his own charge and conviction. The jury are very much stirred by the appeal and render a verdict of "Not guilty." The old case has weighed heavily on his mind and Blair dejectedly returns to his office. He decides the only way left for him is to return and clear his name. While he is in the deepest depth of despair Audrey and her grandmother come in. She bashfully tells him that she couldn't thank him properly before the people in the court room and he realizes that she loves him. He starts to take her in his arms and remembers how his crime still hangs over him. He tells her of his determination to return and clear his name and she promises to await his return before they are married.

Mrs. Violet Logan, a wealthy widow, is interested in improving the conditions of the poor. Madge, the sister of James Semple, a woman hater, is the only one among her society friends who evidences sympathy for her work. Though Semple dislikes all women Madge compels him to join her and Mrs. Logan in a visit to the slums. It is while on this visit that Violet meets Molly Phelan and her sweetheart, Maurice. Molly has been attacked by roughs. Violet succeeds in rescuing her. This is the beginning of an attachment between Molly and Violet. Shortly after Violet gives a reception at which she invites among others Bridget and her children and Molly and Maurice. Society is shocked at the innovation. Molly, full of mischief, succeeds during the evening in locking Violet and Semple together in the guest room. This incident gives Semple an opportunity for observing Violet as she really is, and there develops within him a faint attraction for her. Madge tells Violet the story how her brother came to dislike women. He was married once and had a baby girl. Then his wife eloped with the child, only to be killed a short time later in a railroad accident. They never knew what became of the child.

Violet has been so busy in her efforts with the poor that she has failed to keep tab on the handling of her money by her lawyer, Holmes, who is incidentally her trustee. Holmes, in carrying on his wildcat speculations, has misappropriated Violet's money only to commit suicide when he faces the inevitable. Violet suddenly finds herself penniless. Violet goes to live with Molly. Semple makes the discovery that he has come into the money which the widow lost and is an innocent party to her misfortune. He turns the securities into cash and arranges to put them in trust for Violet. Violet learns that Molly is not Bridget Phelan's child and inquires the names of the people of the

The light from an alternating current arc comes alternately from both carbons while from a direct-current arc it always comes from the same carbon. The direct-current arc can therefore be arranged so that the maximum amount of its light always passes through the lens, while it is impossible to do this with an alternating-current arc. railroad who were wrecked. By this means she discovers that the child whom the old man found was the daughter of Semple's wife who eloped.

Madge then makes the discovery that her brother is the one who brought ruin upon her friend, Violet. She visits Violet and tells her that Semple was the one who ruined her. This is overheard by Molly and Maurice and the latter decides to go to his house and threaten him. On the night that Maurice visits Semple, the victim is alone in the house and is reading the trust papers made out in Violet's name, when he hears someone breaking into the house. Maurice appears and threatens Semple, who gets excited and, overpowering him, telephones for the police. Molly informs Violet of Maurice's plan to make Semple confess his guilt. Fearing trouble, the two start for Semple's house, and arrive there just as Semple has phoned for the police. Failing to dissuade him from his purpose, Violet upbraids him, and finally tells him that Molly is his daughter. Maurice has discovered the papers beneath the book. He shows them to Violet, who is astounded to learn that Semple has been thinking of her to the extent of putting her money in trust for her. Madge arrives simultaneously with the police, who, after an observing glance around the room, declare that a minister rather than an officer is needed. Violet is about to leave, taking Molly with her, when Semple, summoning up all his nerve, proposes to the widow and is accepted.

THE FRAME UP (Five Parts—Nov. 8).—The cast: Geo. Fawcett, Maude George, Harry Carter, Albert MacQuarrie, Olive Golden, Lule Warrenton.

Luke Simms is an honest politician. He is as charitable as he is honest and his greatest pleasure is found in giving excursions to the poor little ones of the slums. The nomination for mayor is refused by Franz Hargraves, on the score that he believes he would be expected to sign away the people's rights in favor of the Electric Company. Simms is nominated and finally elected, after declaring himself in favor of the people. Richard Sears, the leader of the corruptionists, presents a fraudulent bill to the mayor, who refuses to sign it. Sears then decides to get the ordinance passed by working on Simms' weak spot. Calling upon the mayor, Sears learns how the former's sweetheart was killed in trying to avoid running down a child while she was riding in an auto with him. Believing that he has found the mayor's weakness—that of his love of children—Sears returns home and tells his mistress, Florida Everett, that she must get acquainted with Simms and eventually marry him. Florida, a good woman at heart, longs for a decent, wholesome existence, and Sears tells her this is her chance to get it. Plans are laid to entrap Simms. The scheme works and Florida and Simms are married, and are living happily.

Meanwhile Sears' stenographer, Nell, whom he has betrayed, gives birth to a child which dies a few days later. Under the assumption that he has now got the honest mayor in his power, Sears again presents the crooked ordinance, but again Simms refuses to sign it. The corruptionist then commands Florida to induce her husband to honor the measure, but she begs to be left alone. Sears threatens to expose her and she tries to get her husband to sign the bill, but he refuses. Learning of her failure, Sears sends her a telegram to meet him that night at Ardsleigh Towers, and signs it Ned Harter, who is secretary to the mayor and brother of Nell, the betrayed girl. Florida finds herself trapped, and she is kept there all night. When the mayor again refuses to sign the bill, Sears threatens to expose his wife. The corruptionist tells the mayor to find out where his wife spent the preceding night. Angered, Simms questions Florida closely, and in her anguish and fear, she begs him not to go to Sears. This decides him and he departs with vengeance in his heart.

In the meantime Nell has returned to her brother. Ned drags the truth from her. He steals into Sears' home and, finding a revolver in a table drawer, extracts the cartridges and replaces the weapon, determined that his victim shall not have even a dog's chance. He secretes himself behind a curtain and hears Sears entering, and is about to shoot when the maid comes in. Simms calls and informs Sears to keep his wife's name out of their affairs. A fight starts, and just as Sears is about to stab Simms, who has the empty revolver pointed at the crook and who pulls the trigger, Ned fires unseen by the others and Sears is killed. Simms thinks he has killed him and, giving away to his grief, tries to revive Sears, and does not see the youth steal from the curtain, grab up the empty revolver and leave. Simms is arrested and indicted for murder in the first degree. Against his command, Florida takes the stand and bares her life. She relates how Sears deceived her when she was young and innocent, and of her continued bad life until she met her husband. The jury releases Simms, who, horrified at the thought of being a murderer, resolves to part from his wife, whom he reverences more than before. He does not consider himself worthy of her.

MAN OR MONEY (Three Parts—Nov. 26).—The cast: King Baggot, Robert Fisher, Harry Spingler, Edna Hunter and Ned Reardon.

A lawn fete is held on the college campus, and here for the first time Donald Britt meets Aime, the sister of Paul Ferris, his chum and classmate. They fall in love, and Donald tells her that he must enter into some profitable business before he can think of marriage. Aime's father is opposed to the marriage because Donald has no money, so the young man leaves for the West, where he secures a position as civil engineer. Russell Hopkins, a rich man, but a schemer, is favored by the father. Hopkins takes Paul into business and completely ingratiates himself into the good graces of the Ferris family. Donald rises rapidly until he is advanced to the post of superintendent of the company by which he is employed.

Hopkins, fearing that Donald may return unexpectedly, proposes to Aime and asks her to marry him at once. Aime is loath to break her pledge to Donald, but finally yields to the persistent urging of her father. But hardly has the ceremony been celebrated when Hopkins is compelled to leave the country to escape the victims of his last nefarious scheme. Next we find Hopkins and his bride living in the Northwest. Here the schemer tries to put over a questionable deal and when he is exposed, flees at night with Aime. Aime begins to realize what a mistake she has made in marriage, but she is a good woman at heart and pleads with Hopkins to give up his schemes and settle down to business of a legitimate sort. Hopkins assures her that he will and they set out for a new country, coming to the location where Donald is prospecting for virgin pine.

One of Donald's men takes offense at the intrusion of Hopkins, knocks him down and breaks his jaw. Donald comes on the scene, recognizes Hopkins, but doesn't know that he is the man who stole his sweetheart from him. He takes him to the doctor, and helps him in every way possible. With Hopkins convalescent, Donald and he become sociable, and Donald forgives him for winning the girl he loved. Donald needs $20,000 to put over a deal that will make him a competitor of the firm he is employed by, and Hopkins goes into partnership with him. Aime learns of this partnership and accuses her husband of his intention to defraud Donald. Hopkins, however, points to the fact that it is his own money that he is putting into this deal. Nevertheless, he is not on the level, and when Donald ascertains that Hopkins has tried to sell him out to his competitor, he is tempted to kill him for his treachery. Then, realizing that Hopkins is a crook by nature, he tells him that he is going to make a man of him.

Aime now sees what a remarkable char Donald is, and as they are thrown so together, Donald now begins to love Aime and more. Hopkins notices their growing love and begins to believe that it is retribution for all the misdeeds of his past. Donald calls Hopkins aside and tells him that the only honorable thing for him to do is to get out and do so at once before it is too late. Hopkins tries to dissuade him, but Donald turns over their entire business to Hopkins and leaves. Aime is overcome with disappointment, and Hopkins now resolves to sacrifice himself as he is more convinced than ever that his wife loves Donald. Acting upon his decision, he leaves to bring Donald back. He finally comes upon Donald, who refuses to return. Hopkins resorts to force, but Donald holds him at bay with his revolver and orders him to return to his wife. Hopkins declines to go and, seeing that Donald won't yield, plunges off a cliff into the river to end his life. Donald immediately plunges after him. Donald eventually gets Hopkins back to shore, but the effort has been so great that both men become unconscious. They are in this condition when Aime, who has set out to find her husband, comes upon them. Donald is the first to recover his senses. He sees Aime bending over her husband and assists her to bring him back to life. Hopkins and his wife are sitting on the sands watching the disappearing figure of Donald who has reunited the couple by his self-effacement.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURES.

THE BROKEN COIN (No. 22—Last Episode—"An American Queen"—Nov. 15).—Sachio and Frederick are fighting in the dungeon of the castle. Sachio is severely wounded. Kitty and Frederick then start out to search for the treasure. They locate a loose stone in the dungeon floor and discover the treasures and scripts placed there many years before. Kitty and Frederick are joined by an old sailor, formerly a servant in the palace, who tells them of events that happened when Count Frederick was a baby.

"About thirty years ago I was a youth and the favorite servant of the old King Michael II," explains the old sailor. The scenes described by the old sailor are then depicted. A terrific night battle is in progress. King Philip of Grahaffen is driving his soldiers forward against the army of King Michael of Gretzhoffen which is finally wiped out. The loss of his army temporarily deranges King Michael and he wanders from the battlefield to the palace determined, even in his semi-demented condition, to hide the treasures of Gretzhoffen so that his son and heir will have something even if the Grahoffen forces capture the palace and capital.

King Michael takes the jewels accumulated by his ancestors and himself from their hiding place, wraps them up in a tapestry and removes a tile from the dungeon floor, revealing a zinc-lined box, into which he pours the precious jewels. Hearing the shouts of the victors near the palace King Michael realizes that if he does not work quickly his secret will be lost to posterity. Taking a gold coin from his purse, he files off the crown and inscription on its back, places it in a vise and inscribes the key to the hiding place of the treasure with the point of a file on the back of the coin. To his foster-brother he gives one-half of the coin and to the servant the other.

King Philip's soldiers burst into the palace a moment later and when King Michael runs outside to give them a last fight a volley lays him low in death. The treacherous foster-brother smiles to himself, and then, not content with his brother's death, he changes the heir to the throne, placing in his stead his own son, who is in reality the puppet, Michael.

The foster-brother, Count Frederick, did not live long thereafter, however, for King Philip and his men, seeing him fleeing, orders his soldiers to kill him. "Count Frederick, who was shot by King Philip's men, was the father of the present King of Gretzhoffen, King Michael," the old sailor explains, "and you, Count Frederick, are the real King of Gretzhoffen."

Kitty, Frederick and the old sailor are joined by the Prime Minister. The party then goes upstairs to where King Michael and his courtesans are fast asleep after their drunken orgy. Enraged that the palace should be made a brothel, Frederick seizes Michael and throws him out of the throne chair. Frederick takes Kitty in his arms and leads her, his future queen, to the throne. Kitty telegraphs back to the managing editor in the newspaper office at Los Angeles:

"Lost my bet, but won a husband.
"KITTY, Queen of Gretzhoffen."

UNDER A SHADOW (Two Parts—Dec. 5).—The cast: Gretchen Lederer, Arthur Shirley, Lon Chaney, M. K. Wilson.

Thera Dufre, a former member of a foreign secret service bureau and now in hiding from the government agents, receives a mysterious letter ordering her to take a certain sealed packet, which she has in her possession, to an appointed meeting place and deliver it to DeSerris, a member of the service, whom she has never seen. In the same city is living a Mrs. Irving, who bears a likeness to the secret service woman. DeSerris, who is to identify Thera by a photograph, waits at the appointed place and, by accident, Mrs. Irving passes.

DeSerris accosts her and demands the packet, but, of course, being ignorant of the entire affair, she tells him that he has mistaken her for some one else. DeSerris believes that she has determined not to give up the packet and forces his way into her auto.

Thera, who arrives just in time to see DeSerris' mistake, decides to escape from the city. Fortunately for Mrs. Irving, the auto arrives home and she escapes from the car before DeSerris can harm her. Irving, a very jealous man, sees DeSerris follow her from the car and refuses to accept his wife's explanations that the man mistook her for some one else. That evening as Mrs. Irving is putting their little daughter to bed, the child pleads for her doll which she had left in the summer house. Mrs. Irving goes to get it and is accosted by DeSerris, who is on the premises and who again demands the packet. They are seen by Irving who goes after them with a gun. DeSerris conceals himself and Mrs. Irving tries to wrest the gun from her husband. In doing so, the gun is discharged, and their child, who had decided to get the doll herself, is hit

Thera, on the way to the depot to catch her train, is struck by the Irving's auto carrying the child to the hospital, and, although not seriously hurt, Irving sends her back to his house in care of the butler, who is in the auto. Irving notices the resemblance of the woman to his wife. Arriving at the hospital the child is rushed to the operating table. Thera is taken to the Irving home, but feling that she is able to proceed to the depot, is on the point of leaving when she sees Mrs. Irving and recognizes her. The servants leave the room and Thera is on the point of fleeing when through a window. DeSerris enters the library. Mrs. Irving confronts him when he again demands the packet. Thera watches from her place of concealment. Mrs. Irving struggles with him when he threatens to shoot her and Thera kills him with a shot from her revolver.

Mrs. Irving collapses in a dead faint. Locking the doors to bar out the servants, Thera sees a chance to escape the consequences of the crime, and places the gun beside the unconscious form of Mrs. Irving and is on the point of leaving through the window when the phone rings. To allay suspicion Thera answers the phone and over the wire comes Irving's voice saying that the child will recover and begging forgiveness for his jealousy. Realizing that Mrs. Irving would be torn away from her family and found guilty of the crime, Thera decides to remain and accept the penalty. Unlocking the door she admits the frightened servants and tells of the killing. Then she waits calmly for the arrival of the officers.

LAEMMLE.

GILDED YOUTH (Three Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: Rupert Julian, Bertram Grossby, O. E. Wilson, Carmen Phillips, Hal Cooley, Rene Rogers and Elsie Jane Wilson.

In the Latin quarter of Paris live "Pinkie" Cochrane and his two pals, Sam Wellbridge and Mac MacTavish. The three are struggling artists and take turns using Marie as their model. Suddenly Marie disappeared and nothing is heard from her until a year later, when a baby is delivered to their studio with a note from their model asking them to care for the child, as by the time the note reaches them she declares she will be dead. She also begs them to call the child Victor.

Twenty years pass. The three pals are now well-to-do artists. Victor, the baby, has grown to be a young man and bears the name of Cochrane-MacTavish. Victor is on the eve of leaving for a vacation and the three pals, in order to start him out right in life, write him that on his twenty-first birthday they will open an account of $5,000 for him. He hastens into the room to thank them for their kindness and meet Olive, who is Cochrane's niece, and her mother. They are childhood friends and it is hoped by all they will some time marry.

Victor arrives at the mountain resort and becomes very popular, especially when it is learned that he is the adopted son of Cochrane and MacTavish. At the same hotel Angelina and her companion, Peckoff, are stopping. They are social pirates and determine to enslave Victor. It is easy for Angelina, with her knowledge of the world, to win the boy's admiration. She returns to the city and he follows her, and in his new-found infatuation forgets all about Olive. Back at the old home the three pals are planning a big blow-out for Victor's twenty-first birthday anniversary. The guardians are forced to go on with the dinner without him, as Angelina has prevailed upon the boy to have dinner with her that night. Victor returns home in the early morning hours very much the worse for drink, and tells Cochrane of his infatuation for Angelina.

Cochrane determines to break up the boy's infatuation and begins taking Angelina about. One day when Victor makes a call at her house, he is refused admittance, and, forcing his way in, finds his guardian, Cochrane, with his arms about Angelina. He strikes the old man and leaves in a fury. A good size check disposes of Angelina and her companion for good and when Victor returns to the house, MacTavish and Wellbridge both begin to malign Cochrane. This is too much for Victor and he hastens out to find Cochrane and apologize. On the way he sees Olive and his old love for her returns. He then invites her to a dinner that night, which

Mr. Saunders gives to his son, Jack Saunders, an envelope containing $10,000, which he is sending to Thomas Wright of San Francisco as a final payment on a ranch. On the way to San Francisco Jack becomes lonesome and when he notices Kitty Monroe board the train he longs for her companionship. She leaves her ticket on the window sill and leaves her seat. Jack slips the ticket in his pocket and saunters to the observation platform. The taking of the ticket has been seen by Kitty and George Lathrop, another passenger, and when the conductor asks for the ticket she says she must have lost it. Jack, listens, comes forward and pretends to help Kitty find it. Unable to locate it, he says that he has an extra ticket, but cannot find it; consequently he has to pay her fare, which costs him $10.95, and leaves him $1.50. This incident serves as an introduction and the two become friendly. Jack is compelled to ask Kitty to have dinner with him in the dining car, but when he goes to pay the bill he finds himself short of cash and takes out the envelope given him for Mr. Wright. The smallest bill is for $1,000, and Jack finds it impossible to get it changed. George Lathrop, upon seeing the large amount of money, is intensely interested and offers a loan, which Jack accepts.

That night, in San Francisco, George gets Jack into a poker game, wins the $10,000, and then leaves. Jack finds that George has marked the cards and starts out to get the money back. He sees George enter a house, and follows. George levels a revolver at Jack, and tells him he will have him arrested for breaking into his house.

Just then the room is flooded with light and an elderly man (Mr. Wright) enters and asks them who they are and what they want. George, pointing to Jack, tells Wright he "saw that thief enter the house and followed him in." As Wright is about to phone for the police, Kitty Monroe enters and greets Jack, whom she introduces to her uncle, Mr. Wright. When Jack learns it ts the Thomas Wright he was to deliver the $10,000 to he proves his identity and tells of being cheated out of the money by Lathrop. Both start for Lathrop, a fight ensues, in which Lathrop gets away. His overcoat is torn off, however, and Jack finds the money he has lost in one of the pockets. Jack gives the money to Mr. Wright, and then Kitty says: "I saw you take that ticket; now what became of it?" Jack confesses he took it, also that he must have dropped it on the back platform, Kitty, in forgiving him, says: "The devil finds work for idle hands to do."

DOES IT END RIGHT? (Dec. 4).—The cast: Myrtle Gonzales, Jack Nelson and Hayward Mack.

Mart Kenyon, upon his release from prison, where he has been incarcerated for blackmail, decides to go it straight. While leaving the Bowery, where he has gone to get his belongings, he encounters Jefferson Langton, a philanthropist. Langton suffers a heart stroke and Mart accompanies him to his home. The old man wrings from Mart his story, and, upon learning of his determination, pledges his help. Mart then goes to Vilma Vaudri, a woman of rather loose morals, and his sweetheart, and tells her that he is going to live a good life; but she laughs at him when he asks her to do likewise. She asks Mart how he intends to provide her with the luxury she has been accustomed to by means of honest labor. Mart tells her of the good samaritan who has offered to help him.

As Vilma hears Langton's name she tells Mart that she will gratify his wish under one condition—that he introduce her as his sister. Her scheme is to get some easy money, and Mart, unsuspecting, consents. Mart introduces Vilma to Langton as his sister, and the old man is impressed with her. Just before their arrival Langton had received a letter informing him of a mismanagement in his mines, and now to make good his promise to Mart to help him and partially to win Vilma, Langton takes Mart into his employ and sends him as his representative to the mines to look after his interests.

After Mart's departure, Vilma skillfully plays her game, and ere a week has elapsed she is the recipient of a proposal from Langton, and several days later they are married. In the days that follow Vilma gets Langton to transfer securities in her name which she secretly converts into cash. Through the newspapers Mart learns of Vilma's marriage to Langton. He at once suspects her game, and determines to thwart it. He takes the first train back to the city.

On the evening of his arrival in the city, Vilma, with her plans completed, is preparing for flight. As she is preparing to leave the house Langton suffers another heart stroke and despatches a servant to her room to get her. The love Langton displays for her suddenly arouses Vilma's better self. A transformation takes place in her as she realizes that she really loves Langton. Mart arrives at the house to find Vilma at his bedside tenderly ministering to him.

Conflicting thoughts take possession of him, and something in Vilma's face stays his denunciation before Langton. While Mart is offering a satisfactory explanation regarding his sudden return Vilma manages to steal from the room. In her own room Vilma finds herself between two fires. Should she, now while she has a chance, flee or shall she stay and stand the consequences? Her newly-found love for Langton wins, and she decides to face Mart, tell of her determination to do right by Langton and trust to his mercy. While a servant is attending Langton Mart slips from the room. He confronts Vilma in her room Vilma, by her pleading, finally convinces Mart that she is sincere. Mart, however, warns Vilma that he will be ever watching to see that she does not falter in her decision to go straight.

MUSTANG.

BROADCLOTH AND BUCKSKIN (Two Parts—Dec. 3).—The cast: E. Forrest Taylor, Jack Richardson, Anna Little and Louise Lester.

Ruth Cameron, a western girl who has lost her family, owns the Lazy E ranch. Walt Baird is foreman of the ranch. He takes a faithful and protecting interest in Ruth's affairs and gradually a direct personal interest in the girl herself. The story opens at the point where Walt's love is first being expressed. Ruth admires him for his manhood and through long close association has come to feel for him a comradely affection, but her actual love for him is in doubt.

James Gordon is typical of the cultured professional business men of the East. Gordon's company is advised that the Lazy E Ranch is a good oil proposition. Gordon is sent to investigate. He is instructed to acquire an option by the usual ruthless corporate methods. He arrives in the West, finds the oil, but also finds the girl—Ruth. She is a type utterly unknown to him, and his interest is aroused. When the time comes for putting through his deal, he finds he cannot take advantage of her. Anonymously he cautions Ruth against himself and thus defeats the purpose for which he came.

The two men, Walt and Gordon, are quite opposite in type. They have no common basis of understanding. Gordon strives to meet Walt half way, but Walt feels only contempt for Gordon until the contempt is superseded by jealousy. With much bitterness he notes the advance of Ruth's fascination for Gordon, but when the time comes to lose, he loses stoically. Both Walt and Gordon have aroused the enmity of a Mexican ranch hand, Miguel, who plans a revenge by the abduction of Ruth.

Both men fight shoulder to shoulder in the rescue, but Gordon falls an easy captive and as far as the actual work of the rescue goes, Gordon is quite useless. Walt carries the brunt of it all and Ruth is saved, but with the irony of woman's insight she takes Walt's action quite for granted and sees her hero in the less capable man who tried and failed.

FILM TEMPO (Three Parts—Dec. 4).—The cast: George Webb, Nell Franzen, Lawrence Peyton, Art Acord, Ashton Dearholt, Dixie Stratton, Hardy Gibson, Joe Massey and Chas. James.

Norman Dean, an impersonator in a cheap show, is told by a moving picture "extra" that "movie" companies are paying $100 a week for "types." Dean's act is a "flivver" and the manager so informs him. Dean quits, with the idea of becoming a picture actor at a hundred per. He applies to the Titan Moving Picture Company for a job and is put on as extra at $5 a day. Dean goes with the company to Leadville, where he makes an impression on Charlotte Biggs, a susceptible small-town girl. He borrows Buck's best cowpuncher regalia and sundry other adornments from different actors and succeeds in making the infatuated little country girl believe that he is playing leads in big productions only and is the real thing in the actor line.

Charlotte admires Buck Parvin, but Dean fixes Buck's case bv telling Charlotte that he is only a cowboy and not the sort of a man she ought to know; that he has no "film tempo." Charlotte doesn't understand the last allegation, but it conveys the absence of a mysterious something in Buck which puts him out of Dean's class and awakens a feeling of compassion for him in her sentimental nature. Dean has a regular system of borrowing anything which he hasn't the ability or inclination to acquire for himself—money, smokes, clothes—and is cussed for his "crust." The day the picture is finished, he borrows ten from everyone who will lend to him and the men discover over a farewell crap game that they have all been worked. Charlie Dupree says he saw Dean buying two tickets for Los Angeles and Buck remembers a meeting between Dean and Charlotte in the park, so he leaves the crowd to go out and confirm his suspicions.

Buck discovers the elopers at the depot, waiting for the limited and with a few well chosen and apparently innocent remarks concerning Dean's wife, induces the girl to repent before it is too late. Then he forcibly persuades Dean to "vamoose" and sees the misled Charlotte home. She confides her appreciation of Buck, "even if Dean said he didn't have any 'film tempo.'" This puzzles Buck and he doesn't see the joke until Monty tells him that "film tempo" means "timing your action." Then he concludes that Dean was mistaken and that there was nothing the matter with the way he timed his action at the depot.

THE WIDOW WINS (Nov. 28).—The cast: Cissy Fitzgerald, "Budd" Jones, Phin Nares and Helen King.

When Cissy Fitzgerald, star actress, came to town, she found herself in sad need of publicity. "Stuffy" Hicks, the press agent, was put on the job. When Cissy was discovered in her room at the hotel, she was given all sorts of drugs to restore her mind. Finally overwrought nature rebelled, and Cissy's refusal to take any more medicine gave the whole scheme away.

Meanwhile Shephard, the banker, was much distressed at his name being involved and called on Cissy. The tables were turned on "Stuffy" Hicks since the hotel employes forced him to take the noxious mixtures intended for Cissy. Just as the manager was about to discharge the luckless "Stuffy" the would-be publicist got his nerve up and quit. But the real winner was Cissy. She accepted the banker's proposal and thereby won a husband.

LESSONS IN LOVE (Three Parts—Dec. 1).—The cast: Hal Forde, Helen Marten, James Levering, Lucille Taft, John Reinhard, Mathilde Baring, Alan Robinson, Leonard Craske.

At her uncle's ranch May Hale, daughter of an eastern professor, meets a unique person in Bash Huggins. Bash is some bear with the men, but a fear stricken coyote in the presence of the fair sex. He flees the ranch because of May, meets with an accident, and in the hospital learns that the older women are at least human, though he remains girl-shy. In another experience a young woman sells Bash a worthless mine.

Frank Morgan and his sister, Grace, eastern tourists, stop overnight at Bash's cabin, Grace, a born flirt, dazzles Bash, and asks him to visit her in the East. A lucky strike enables Bash to go East, but he is slighted by Grace, who does not know of his wealth. In ill-fitting clothes, awkward Bash is not a social success. He blunders in a dance, is terrified by a girl in decollette, and flees from a simpering old maid. He is an endless source of wonder to Lord Ashley, an Englishman. But Bash has the never-give-up spirit. Determined to win Grace, he studies books on social customs, though with slight success.

When May returns home her father loses his place because of his absent mindedness. May studies typewriting, and prepares for her father a sign, "Languages Taught." No pupils apply and they are in destitute circumstances. May changes the sign to "Anything Taught." Bash sees the sign, tells the professor of his desire to win Grace, and offers him money for social instruction. The old professor misunderstands and says, "Young man, I don't give lessons in love making!" May overhears from the empty pantry, and, made desperate by poverty, takes the money and tells Bash, "I'll teach you how to make love!" Then she and Bash recognize each other. Bash tries again to flee, but May convinces him she is not dangerous.

Under May's tuition Bash makes rapid progress and in the realism of the last lesson they forget their love making is only practice. Bash goes away half dazed and thus falls an easy victim to Grace, who has accidentally learned of his wealth. Grace gives Bash her finger measurement, and sends him for a ring. Still dazed, he takes the ring to May and says, "Thanks for your lessons, I am engaged. Now, what shall I do?" Then May and Bash realize that they love each other, but May sends him back to Grace. Bash overhears Grace tell her brother that money only would cause her to marry a boob with a name like Bash Huggins. He crushes the ring under foot and hurries back to May—no longer needing lessons in love making.

Without hesitating Billy plunges into the water bringing her safely to shore. They are met by the rescued girl's husband. After rescuing the second girl he receives a dollar for his trouble. He becomes enraged. Billy is later invited to call upon the Auntie and the girl he rescued. Billy gets desperate and proposes to Marie. Her husband, who has been away on a trip comes home just at the critical moment. He grabs Billy and rushes him from the garden, where Marie and he had been sitting. Marie's husband pushes Billy into the latter's car and at the point of his gun orders Billy to "beat it." THE CREST OF VON ENDHEIM (Two Parts—Nov. 14).—The cast: Harry Moody, Mr. Salisbury, Alberta Lee, May Glarce, Adoni Fovieri, Mr. Lowery, Mr. Mack, Miss Arnold.

Count Von Endheim, a general under the defeated Mexican emperor, Maximilian, escapes from his hacienda, taking with him his only child, Carlos, a boy of five. He leaves Blowitz, an old servitor, in charge of the estate. Pursued by Captain Morales, Von Endheim contrives to reach an adobe hut, the home of an Indian woman, Concha Jaurez, to whom he entrusts little Carlos. He gives the woman money and takes from his breast a metal crest on a ribbon as a means of identification for his son, in case he does not return. Von Endheim is killed by Morales' men. The captain searches his body, discovers important documents, and takes possession of the dead man's estate. Blowitz escapes.

The imposter adops the general's title and uniform. Carlos grows up an ignorant peon. He becomes a sheep herder. The supposed son of the Indian woman has the effrontery to fall in love with Glorianna, daughter of the Gonzales, who romantically returns his affection. Meanwhile, the noble family of Glorianna, furiously opposed to the girl's attachment, has arranged a marriage between their daughter and the imposter, General Von Endheim. The general arrives, Glorianna finds him both ridiculous and loathsome. Carlos, the herder, runs away and joins the army. He returns in uniform, with many medals of honor. He and Glorianna, by a comparison of the imposter's family crest with the metal coat of arms which Carlos has always worn, discover an odd duplication. Next day, Carlos and his men capture Morales, and the son of Von Endheim puts on the uniform of his father. The identification of Carlos is finally established by Blowitz, the old servitor, who exposes the imposter and proves that the right man wears the right clothes. Glorianna's family is reconciled to her lover, and she and Carlos are married.

CENTAUR.

STANLEY AMONG THE VOO DOO WORSHIPPERS (Sixth Episode of the "Stanley in Africa" Series—Two Parts—Dec. 2).—The cast: Roy Watson, Herr Batty, Edward Roberts, Court Tietze, Charles Gay, Mona Darkfeather, Marie Manley and Anna DeLyle.

Jack, Ada, Tietze, Nina, the old Hag, and Andrea, estranged from the Stanley party, and, having escaped the Slave Traders, into whose hands they were thrown by the treachery of Andrea, proceed through the jungles. Ada forgives the White King, but Jack shows his contempt for him by making him burden bearer. Andrea sulks and indicates that he will await his chance to get even by stealing the party's supplies and carrying away Ada. They pass on while Stanley prepares to take up the march in search of them. As they wander through the jungle a great leopard, hanging from the limb of a tree, drops down upon Ada. Her screams attract Jack and Tietze, and after a fight they spear it.

Further ahead in the jungle is the village of the Bungangetas, who are called Voo Doo worshippers. They set up for their king a horrible idol and offer it young native girls as sacrifices. The party is ambushed by scouts of the Voo Doo worshippers and taken before the shrine. Andrea alone escapes by hiding in the bushes. The Witch Doctor, of the Voo Doos, decrees that Ada shall be the sacrifice to their god. She is placed upon the sacrificial stone and preparations for the rites begun.

In the meantime Stanley, Batty and their party hurry through the jungles. They meet the Voo Doo Worshippers, but, being outnumbered, they lose the fight which follows, and retreat to await more favorable time for action. In the skirmish Batty, who has been riding his elephant, falls into a pit set by the Voo Doos to trap animals. Discovering his predicament, the witch doctor, in high glee at the sport of the venture, drops a lion into the pit. Being unarmed, Batty is compelled to meet the lion with his bare hands. After a furious battle Batty conquers the lion, to the astonishment of the natives, who carry Batty back to camp as an extra fine sacrifice to their idol.

While the witch doctor has been gone Andrea, seeing his opportunity to avenge the fancied wrongs of Jack, blackens his body with berry juice and, posing as one of the natives, slips into the hollow idol, usurping the place of the witch doctor, who, upon his return, is deposed. Andrea, as the witch doctor, orders the death of Jack and Batty. The preliminary ceremony lasts long into the night, and at last natives and captives fall asleep. Andrea then silently releases Ada and takes her with him into the jungles.

At dawn Nina, who has been taken to a hut, slips, unobserved, to the stakes where Jack and Batty are chained and cuts their bonds. They immediately start a search for Ada and Andrea but discover they have gone. Enraged at Andrea's perfidy, Jack and Batty prepare to go into the jungles after the White King, but before they have advanced any material distance the deposed Witch Doctor discovers their departure and, rousing the natives, sets out and recaptures them. Jack and Batty are again chained to stakes and the sacrificial fires lighted when Stanley and his followers, mounted on Elephants, and leading Ada's pony, attack the camp. The horse dashes into the camp, kicks the embers away from about Jack's and Batty's feet, grabs a native by the breechclout, shakes him, while an elephant twists his trunk about the Witch Doctor, dashes his head against a tree and tosses the body over his back. The natives are scattered, Stanley, Jack, Nina and the hag are restored to the party, while Andrea drags Ada through the jungle and gloats over her misery.

STANLEY AND THE SLAVE TRADERS (The Fifth Episode of the "Stanley Series"—Two Parts—Nov. 25).—The cast: Roy Watson, Herr Batty, Edward Roberts, Court Tietze, Charles Gay, Mona Darkfeather, Marie Manley, Anna De Lisle.

Ada has been taken captive by the White King. His village is attacked by slave traders, the huts are destroyed, and Ada and the king are seized. Meanwhile, Jack Wilson, Ada's sweetheart, has set forth single-handed to rescue the girl he loves. He is joined, en route, by Nina and the old Hag. Captain Batty rouses Stanley to a realization of the seriousness of the situation, and folding their tent, the explorer and his party start after the slave traders. Ada defends herself from the chief of the slave traders with her gun. The White King, however, under false overtures of friendship, contrives to disarm the girl and lead her before the chief. She and the king both are tied to trees. Jack Wilson knocks senseless a sentinel and succeeds in freeing Ada.

After a brief battle he escapes from the village, taking Nina, the Old Hag, Ada and the White King with him. Stanley, meanwhile arrives, surrounds the settlement, and takes the slave trader captive. Wilson and his friends push on into the jungle. A halt is called while Jack and the White King go in earch of food. During their absence Ada is attacked by a lion. She fights desperately. Wilson, hearing her cries, rushes back just in time to save her life by shooting the beast. Stanley's party continue their quest of Wilson and Ada.

A DEAL IN INDIANS (Nov. 26).—The cast: George Ovey, Jefferson Osborne, George George, Belle Bennett, Rena Carroll, Gordon MacGregor, Arthur Munns, Janet Sully, Mrs. Spencer, Arthur Jackson, Wm. Jefferson.

Tired of his irksome jail sentence Jerry contrives a clever scheme by which he eludes two guards and escapes after an interesting chase. At last in safety he sits down for a rest. Two Indians approach and make him captive. He is brought before Chief Pain-in-the-Face who decrees that he shall die. The Chief's daughter, Moonlight Princess, falls in love with Jerry at first sight and successfully pleads with her father for his life. She is told to have him painted and dressed like an Indian and she may marry him.

Thus arrayed and bound Jerry is about to give up all hope when a professor of natural history, enedavoring to buy an Indian to accompany him on a lecture tour, arrives and negotiates the purchase of Jerry. The prisoner is overjoyed at the prospect of release, but not so with the Princess, who is taken struggling and protesting to her tent. Jerry is taken to the professor's home that night and left alone in the library while the professor goes on an errand. The other occupants of the house—the professor's son, his daughters and his housekeeper—are asleep. Jerry makes himself thoroughly at home and is enjoying himself immensely when the Princess, who has followed, bursts in upon him.

A racket follows, the household is awakened, and there is an exodus from the rooms of the members of the family. The Princess chases Jerry from room to room, startling the professor's bewildered daughters and housekeeper into hysterics. The son, however, more collected, calls for the police, who arrive at the same time as the professor. Jerry is immediately recognized by the officers, exposed as an imposter, and again taken into custody, much to his delight after his experience with the Princess.

FALSTAFF.

CLARISSA'S CHARMING CALF (Nov. 4).—The cast: Arthur Cunningham, Claude Cooper and Joe Burke.

Clarissa was one of the belles of Cherry Pit Siding. She could cook and plough, and all the young farmers admired her. She ignored them, however, and finally accepted the attentions of Josh Jigger, a politician, who was made firechief, a position which pays $20 per month. At the annual firemen's ball there was an exciting contest for "the most popular young lady," and Josh, because of his political ability and authority, so fixed things that Clarissa won the first and only prize, a beautiful calf, donated by a farmer. Josh Jiggers thought he was a Twentieth Century Rembrandt. Clarissa agreed with him, and with her pet posed for a painting to be known as "Clarissa's Charming Calf."

Unfortunately for the lovers they were seen by Omar Commerstein, the New York variety manager, and he yearned for Clarissa's presence as a roof-garden attraction. He offered her a fabulous salary, but she spurned it. Omar remonstrated, then tried to drag her off, but Josh Jiggers sprang to her aid and the villain departed. Omar was a persistent man. He "lured" the fire chief away by turning in a false alarm of fire, and then when the girl was alone with her calf, he seized her and carried her off to a handcar he had waiting on the railroad tracks nearby. But the wicked manager reckoned without the calf. It was an intelligent animal, and he hastened off to find Josh Jiggers, meeting him on the way to the fire. The chief later declared that the calf's frightened bleats told him what had happened. Anyway, they did not go to the fire, but followed the calf which led them to the railroad tracks. There they were just in time to see the unfortunate Clarissa being borne away on the hand-car.

The firemen were too far away to extend aid. Clarissa had with her a bottle of liquid soap with which she had intended to give the calf a bath. Clarissa knew that if railroad tracks are soaped, engines cannot go ahead. Unnoticed by her enemies she soaped the tracks ahead of the handcar. The vehicle stopped, then as the grade was steep it began to slip back, going faster and faster. Josh Jigger saw that the car was returning and rejoiced. The Cherry Pit Siding firemen hooked up to a convenient hydrant, and as the handcar came back to them, the villainous manager and his confederates were hurled from the handcar by well-directed streams of water. Clarissa was restored to her lover, and they were married. This was many years ago. Now Clarissa often tells the story to her children.

The VILLAINOUS VEGETABLE VENDER (Nov. 25).—The cast: Claude Cooper, Arhur Cunningham, Barbara Gilroy, Lowell Stewart.

The vender did a good business, but he had no steady customers. Strangers were lured into dealing with him because of the low prices he asked, but they never returned. For a long time the vender loved nothing in the world except his money, but finally he became infatuated with a girl. She was honest, but so poor that her only gown was made of newspapers. One day misfortune came to the girl. A goat, attracted by her daily costumes, tried to devour it. She struggled in vain, but help arrived in the shape of a raggedly garbed man with a bright red nose. He drove the goat away, and most naturally the girl agreed to marry her preserver. The villainous vegetable vender was indignant when he heard they were wedded. Then the husband revealed the fact that he was a millionaire, interested in work among the poor, and had disguised himself to make his investigations easier.

Several years passed, and the villainous vegetable vender grew more and more villainous. One day he read in the newspapers that the son of the millionaire's wife had disappeared and the police were looking for him, while his mother was heartbroken. It was explained that he could be identified by a strawberry mark on his right arm and a locket with his mother's picture. The villain found the boy, imprisoned him in a vegetable bin; and told him he would remain in that unpleasant prison for many years. Fortunately for the child, he was quick witted. On the back of the locket he scratched the letters "C. Q. D." and hid it in a tomato, He hoped that some kind hearted person would buy the tomato, and notify his parents.

By good luck his own father's cook bought the tomato, and father tried to eat it. He injured his teeth on the locket, but forgot his pain when he read the pitiful call for help. It was easy to trace the villain down, and father consigned the criminal to prison.

FOILING FATHER'S FOES (Nov. 29).—The cast: Colin Campbell, Louise Emerald Bates, Marshall Welch, Robert Whittier.

Lucinda's father was a country editor, and by dint of the utmost economy he was enabled to send his daughter to a university, where she took a course in architecture, graduating with high honors. The girl returned home, filled with political ambition, and anxious to run for office, believing that the publicity would help her in business later on. She found her father in far from a blithesome mood. Father was a reformer, and felt impelled to write cutting things about a couple of grafters, one the nominee for sheriff, the other a candidate for city treasurer.

"They both called to horsewhip me just before you arrived," the editor sadly explained to his daughter. "The whipping was bad enough, but the way they acted was worse. Each insisted that the other glut his vengeance first, and finally they matched for it. The preliminaries were nearly as bad as the regular performance."

Lucinda's eyes filled with tears.

"I am only a poor weak girl, father," she said, "but I will avenge you. Cheer up. Take a week off, and leave me in charge. After you return these vulgar men will never annoy you again, and to punish them further, I, myself, will run for both sheriff and city treasurer, and defeat them."

The editor could hardly believe that Lucinda could "make good," but he finally decided to take a chance, and went for a rest. While he was gone, Lucinda was most industrious, for she was an energetic architect, and the place was on a war footing when father returned.

His enemies learned that the editor was back, and promptly called to remonstrate with him. This time Fate was against them. There were pitfalls on the stairs, boards flew out and hit them, and finally the pair were precipitated through a trap door, and sent whizzing down an incline to land at last in the water. There they were picked up by Lucinda, but to their surprise she immediately demanded that they retire from the political race in her favor, and ducked them until they agreed and signed the declarations she had already prepared.

So the "gangsters" were defeated, and Lucinda was elected to two offices at once, and drew both salaries. And the editor wrote nice things about her in the paper, and got more advertising than he had ever had before.

THAN-O-PLAY.

MR. MEESON'S WILL (Three Parts—Nov. 6).—The cast: Florence La Badie, Justus D. Barnes, Bert Delaney, Ethyle Cooke, Dorothy Benham, Lawrence Swinburne.

Mr. Meeson, a publisher, was interested only in financial return. One day a girl called at the publisher's office. She had written a story called "Jemina's Vow," which had been one of the best sellers of the year. For it she had received a beggarly sum. The girl needed money to take her sick sister to a warmer climate. Mr. Meeson refused to pay the girl any more, and reminded her that she was under contract to sell all her stories to him at the same compensation. The discussion between the two was witnessed by Meeson's nephew, and after the girl's departure the young man denounced his uncle so vigorously that he was disinherited

But while entertaining the fair one in his own inimitable way, her husband enters upon the scene and pulls a gun, Whiffles making his escape in the nick of time. He returns home to meet his wife and while they are talking things over a detective comes along and hands in his bill for services rendered. AT BAY (Gold Rooster Play—Five Parts—Nov. 26).—The cast includes Florence Reed, Frank Sheridan, Charles Waldron, Lyster Chambers and De Witt Jennings.

District Attorney Graham starts a crusade against the city's gambling houses. Judson Flagg, a lawyer, owns a notorious joint and knows that nothing can stop Graham once he gets his hand in. He then enters the fight armed with every weapon an unscrupulous man can employ.

Through Mrs. Cuyler Hastings, a society woman who owes him a gambling debt, Flagg introduces Joe Hunter, his aide, to Aline Graham, daughter of the District Attorney. Hunter, polished, dashing and handsome, is seemingly devoted to Aline, and manages to marry her secretly. Later, in a raid on Flagg's place, Hunter shoots Graham and runs to Aline with the plea that unless she gives him money he will divulge the whole affair, saying that the marriage was a fake to aid some political enemies of her father. He leaves with her necklace, but she writes to him at Fagg's office begging him not to desert her. The gambler gets the letter and arranges an interview before a cunningly concealed camera, with the hope of getting her in a compromising position. How she is finally rescued and her fair name saved makes a charming ending to this drama.

TINKERING WITH TROUBLE (Phunphilms—Nov. 17).—Sour Bal Joe gets the "can" for sassing the tenants, and Easy Otis supplants him. But the latter does not know an awful lot of the art of "janitoring" and soon gets into many and various jams with the people upstairs. Multifarious are the tasks assigned to him and he knows naught of any of them. Then, to cap the climax, the janitor who received his passports comes back to start something. He figures that to change the gas and water pipes would be a good stunt and he does it.

Upstairs, a fair dame wants her gas-stove fixed, but when she turns it on, out come many streams of water. A love-sick lad across the hall contemplates suicide by gas, but he too, gets water instead. And so it goes until the whole place is in an uproar. Then they start for Otis, but he believes discretion is the better part of valor and takes it on the run.

NEAL OF THE NAVY (No. 12, "Backed by the U. S. N."—Two Parts—Nov. 18).—Annette gladly concedes to the Government the right to establish a coaling station on Lost Island, and prepares to leave for her inheritance on a ship fitted out for the purpose with a battleship escort. But before sailing she rides horseback one day and through the perfidy of Joe Wheeler, her foster-brother, is thrown and seriously injured. Hernandez and Inez, the schemers in the plot to secure Annette's map of Lost Island, make it a point to be near at hand and take her to a deserted house, where they try to intimidate her. But the house catches fire and is destroyed, Neal coming along on horseback just in time to save the girl. Later they leave for Lost Island—with Hernandez and his henchmen stowed away in the hold. He almost succeeds in wrecking the ship, but all hands escape in small boats and land on the shore safely. The Brute swims ashore with Hernandez in his grasp. The windup of the episode is a most unusual one of interest. The next episode is called "The Good Man."

ALL DOLLED UP (Starlight—Nov. 20).—Heinie and Louie learn that a highpriced mechanical doll is about to be sent from abroad to Mrs. R. U. A. Nutt, so they figure that they may as well get in on the good thing. Accordingly, Louie is "all dolled up" to represent the mechanical wonder and is brought to, Mrs. Nutt's home. They manage to get away with it for awhile, but later on, Slippery Jim, who has also fallen for the mechanical doll stuff, brings one of his own. The two dolls meet each other and their antics are most ludicrous. But finally the real doll makes its appearance and the plotters are put to rout.

He works night and day and beats the stock market. His health is almost wrecked and he becomes money-mad.

On the third annivarsary of their marriage, the wife goes to her husband's office thinking that he will give her some token in remembrance of the occasion. She is grieved by his lack of memory of the event and by his lack of sentiment when he writes her out a check for $50,000 and hands it to her coldly.

Then a rival in love and business finds a chance to put the husband in difficulties in the stock market. The husband appeals to his wife for the gift so that he might retrieve himself. She refuses and his fortune is swept away. He is about to shoot himself in his home, when he overhears his wife conversing with his rival, who is trying to win her away and asks her why she refused to help him with the $50,000. The wife tells the rival that she did it to get her husband away from his money-mad career. The husband enters, sends the rival away and is reconciled to his losses in the knowledge that he has his wife's love.

Fred Mace as a burly janitor, Marta Golden as his wife, and Harry Gribbon as an artist, have some exciting times in "A Janitor's Wife's Temptation." She sends Mace out to beat some rugs in the hall and sends the steak up to Gribbon. Mace is furious on his return, but is diverted by the landlord who sends him out to clean up the house. Then the landlord demands rent from Gribbon, who is unable to pay.

Gribbon goes out in the hall and gets Miss Golden to elope with him taking a sum of money from the landlord's strong box. Mace is arrested for the theft and is jailed. On the plea of his little daughter, Mace is released. He and the child pass a cabaret, Mace sees Gribbon and his wife within. He is refused entrance in front but gets in by way of the kitchen. There is a great overturning of tables and smashing of dishes, when Mace sees Gribbon and starts in pursuit. It finally ends with their meeting on the roof. Mace is thrown through a glass dome and lights in a fountain where he bobs up and down like a rubber ball on the stream of gushing water. He is finally rescued by the police who put a table under him and he rolls off on the floor. Then the Keystone police are seen hanging in the air supported by the table upheld by the fountain. The picture ends with the arrest and discomfiture of Gribbon and the reconciliation of Mace and Miss Golden.

THE BEST OF ENEMIES (Keystone—Dec. 5).—The cast: Joe Weber, Lew Fields, Mae Busch, Joseph Swickard, Billie Bennett, Chester Conklin, Mack Swain, Guy Woodard and Frank Opperman.

Joe Weber and Lew Fields play all kinds of practical jokes on each other in this Keystone comedy, "The Best of Enemies." Their experiences begin with their entry as guests into a fashionable country house. Arrayed in evening dress they fall downstairs, get into the wrong rooms, and one falls into a bathtub but is rescued by the other. They finally land in the reception room, where they quarrel over Mae Busch. Fields gets the best of Weber and kicks him away, whenever he tries to "butt" in.

Joe plans revenge. He notifies the police that if he disappears that he has been killed by Lew. He leaves his clothes by a pond to confirm the information. Lew is arrested and after a humorous trial is sentenced to be hung. Mae Busch smuggles a file and a sheet to Lew and he makes his escape. Joe is captured and is going to be hung in the place of Lew so that the Governor won't be disappointed. Then Lew breaks into the room and the Governor pardons both to the disappointment of the bloody executioner, Mack Swain.

DOUBLE TROUBLE (Fine Arts—Dec. 5).—The cast: Douglas Fairbanks, Richard Cummings, Olga Grey, Margery Wilson, Gladys Brockwell, Monroe Salisbury, W. E. Lowery, Tom Kennedy, Kate Toncray and Lillian Langdon.

Fairbanks, a young banker, is very timid in the presence of his stenographer—and all young women. However, he is shown to be at home addressing a Sunday School in his capacity as President of the Sabbath Day Society. As he is leaving on a vacation, Fairbanks as the Banker Amidon is hit on the head by a thug. Five years later he awakes as Amidon again while in pajamas on a Pullman car. He is astonished when he sees a paper and notes the lapse of time. He is still more surprised at seeing a suit of sporty checks, which he discovers belongs to him. He goes to a hotel and is again astonished to find that he is greeted as an old and familiar guest.

He meets an old friend, Judge Blodgett. They go to a clairvoyant, who puts him in a trance. He awakens as a Mr. Brassfield. In that character he tells of waking up in the boom town of Bakerstown after the blow on the head with no consciousness of what had happened before or even his name. He takes the name of Brassfield, strikes oil, becomes a wealthy man and is nominated to be mayor. When he enters on his love affairs, he is so enthusiastic and has apparently been breaking hearts right and left besides engaging himself, that the old judge and the clairvoyant decide that he had better become Amidon, the good and respected banker. They go to Bakerstown. There Amidon is unable to transact the big business built up by Brassfield. He is again returned to the aggressive Brassfield. He proves very successful in business dealings and also in political affairs, but is so unscrupulous as to railroad a poor man who wouldn't be bribed. He also plays fast and loose with his sweetheart, flirting with a girl known as Strawberry and others as the occasion permits. The clairvoyant turns Brassfield back to Amidon, who rescues the poor family from death by gas and releases the father from jail. He also is reconciled to his sweetheart through the good offices of the clairvoyant, who explains that gradually the two characters of Amidon and Brassfield will be blended into one, the good qualities of each being retained and the bad ones neutralized.

BELLA DONNA (Famous Players—Five Parts—Nov. 15).—Pauline Frederick, Thomas Holding, Julian L'Estrange, Eugene Ormonde, Geo. Majeroni, Edmund Shalet, Helen Sinnott.

The exploits of Bella Donna, an English adventuress, are matters of common gossip in London. Despite the fact that her reputation is distinctly unsavory, the Hon. Nigel Armine, an impressionable and rather unsophisticated man, refuses to believe what he hears. Struck by the marvelous beauty of the woman, he marries her and takes her to Egypt. But the simple-minded Armine soon palls upon this roving, restless spirit which fastens upon a handsome native, Baroudi, as the object of its fierce and hungry adoration.

The clandestine love affair increases in intensity until Baroudi so masters Bella Donna that he persuades her to poison her husband, and she places small doses of sugar of lead in Armine's coffee. Day by day Bella Donna watches the deadly effect of her work as her husband grows steadily weaker. Just as his rapidly weakening condition holds forth the promise of quick release from her irksome ties, Dr. Isaacson, an old friend of Armine, arrives on the scene. In the battle of wits between these two instinctive enemies, the doctor is the victor and he discovers what Bella Donna is doing. He denounces her to her husband and is ordered out of the house for his pains. Armine, innocently wishing to explain his action to Bella Donna, tells her tenderly of the attack which Isaacson has made upon her and assures her that he does not believe it.

It is too much for Bella Donna's frayed nerves. Her hate for this insipid man has increased with every day and now that her plot has been frustrated and her dream of freedom shattered, she loses control of her temper and pours upon the astonished head of her husband a torrent of abuse which culminates in the startling statement that she is sick of him and is going back to Baroudi. But when Bella Donna arrives triumphantly at Baroudi's she is stunned by her lover's statement that she is too dangerous a toy for him. His door closed upon her, she totters falteringly back to the house which she had so dramatically spurned. But she is met by her old enemy, Dr. Isaacson, who shuts the door in her face before she has an opportunity to reach her impressionable and soft-hearted husband. With the only two havens of refuge closed, Bella Donna, her wild dream of wealth, power and luxury shattered forever, gazes wistfully out upon the desert waste in the black night. Then she slowly traces her weary and faltering way out across the desert—and into oblivion.

THE GENTLEMAN FROM INDIANA (Pallas—Five parts—Nov. 25).—After leaving the university, where he has been one of the greatest football stars in years, John Harkless plunges into the thick of Indiana politics through purchasing the Plattville Herald and fearlessly smashing the corrupt political machine of Rodney McCune. With this prestige, Harkless becomes the accepted leader in the congressional district—a veritable tribune of the people—who protect their interests at all times even to the extent of drumming out of town a brace of gamblers who are fleecing unsuspecting farmers with a crooked shell game on Circus Day.

Returning that night from a call upon Helen Sherwood at Judge Briscoe's, Harkless is waylaid by mysterious assailants during a thunderstorm and is seen no more until he is discovered miles away in an emergency hospital. Vigilantes quickly rally in Plattville by hundreds to avenge the murderous assault, and while there is doubt as to whether the Whitecaps, McCune's henchmen, or the gamblers are to blame, suspicion finally fastens upon the Whitecaps and, in view of the many anonymous warnings they have sent Harkless for his activities against McCune soon amounts to a certainty. Marching cross country to the grim chant of "John Brown's Body," the avenging host raids the crossroads settlement of the clan, annihilates the band and burns their evil nest to the ground.

The return of Harkless from the hospital, the ingeniously contrived campaign which elects him to Congress which has been contrived by Helen Sherwood, and the meeting of the girl and the plucky editor in his own printing office, which she has benevolently usurped, makes this picture a worthy offering.

JANE (Morosco—Five parts—Dec. 6).—Charles Shackelton offers Jane $500 to pose as his wife during his uncle's approaching visit. The housemaid who, with William, her butler-husband, is planning on a chicken farm, accepts the offer much to the relief of the gay young bachelor, who has told his relative he was married in order to secure an increased allowance. Jane finds it hard to lay aside her feather-duster instincts, but gets along very well until the uncle inquires for "the baby." To quiet any suspicion the conspirators fill the vacancy, but unfortunately requisition the infant of a reluctant washerwoman who does not speak good English, and in the midst of the uncle's ecstacies over the "heir to the house" the illiterate mother bursts in and demands the immediate return of her child. Repulsed, she summons the police, who, finding the baby in the uncle's arms, nab him as the kidnapper.

Desperate at this new contingency, young Shackelton throws himself at the feet of his true lady love, Lucy Norton, whose father has ruled against him because of his wildness, and she is about to brave parental wrath and become his wife when she, too, discovers the baby and the supposed alliance with Jane. Reduced to the last resort, Shackelton finally has to tell the truth and this proves the best strategy of all. The uncle is mollified, Shackelton gets the wife he had despaired of, and Jane tucks away $500 for the chicken farm.

KLEINE-EDISON FEATURE SERVICE.

THE DANGER SIGNAL (Kleine—Five Parts—Dec. 1).—The cast includes Arthur Hoops and Ruby Hoffman.

Danny Canavan, a blacksmith's son, possessing great strength, is a cringing, wavering, abject coward, scorned by all, particularly his father. Danny's wife does not neglect any opportunity to browbeat and scold him, neither do the helpers in his father's shop miss a chance to kick and beat him. President Cadbury, of an insurance company, is one day riding with his fiancee in a carriage that knocks down and severely injures Canavan. He is carried home and put to bed where he remains for many weeks, unable to escape even for a moment the gibes and taunts of his sharp-tongued wife, who, when he recovers, goes to the ward boss and obtains, through him a position as laborer for Canavan. Here, scorned by fellow workingmen, and nagged by a pitiless foreman, he spends a most unhappy time.

One day he is called upon to warn vehicular traffic and pedestrians not to approach too near an excavation where dynamite is to be exploded. He is given a red flag to wave, and that marks the turning point in his life. He is astounded when everybody obeys his command, backed by the red flag. A great awakening fills his soul, and he feels the tingle of real manhood in his blood. The red flag, the danger signal, has wrought this marvelous change. Within an hour he asserts his independence to his father and his wife, and whips an employe of his father's.

At a ward caucus later, he wins the favor of a political boss by whipping a dozen political mar plots, and is then taken into the "boss'" office. He quickly becomes a power in politics through the force of his dominant character, and is later made chief of a powerful political party organization. He now has social ambitions and when he has an indictment against Cadbury quashed, he demands as his price that Cadbury and his wife sponsor his social aspirations, which they do, with the result that he is soon dominant in that sphere. Canavan takes a party to England, buys an entrant in the English Derby and wins that classic of the turf. His personality is simply overpowering, and none can successfully oppose him. Cadbury is killed while the party is in England and Canavan, who had become a widower, crowns his triumphal march by marrying Mrs. Cadbury. The latter quickly discovers Canavan to be without manners or polish, and she tells him of the embarrassment this causes her. Then comes the climax in which Canavan rises to the occasion, and again has his way.

THE DESTROYING ANGEL (Edison—Five Parts—Dec. 8).—Mary Ladislas elopes with the chauffeur because of his sympathy for her ideals, and they stop at a hotel. The scornful attitude of all who meet them causes Mary to desire immediate marriage, but on the way for a license, the auto overturns and kills the chauffeur. It is too late for Mary to return home now and she is left alone, disconsolate.

Hugh Whittaker, ill, given up by the doctors, leaves his affairs in the hands of Drummond, his partner, and prepares to leave for the West. He meets Mary and prevents her suicide. Pitying her and feeling his own end near, he marries her and continues on his journey, after giving her a note to his partner, Drummond, so that he may provide for her. Drummond, who is dissipating and appropriating Hugh's funds, is fascinated by Mary, but she refuses his aid. Later, news comes of Hugh's death. Mary obtains the title role in Carmen at Max's theater, who treasures her for her artistic acting. In a jealous rage he causes the death of David, another actor whom Mary is to marry.

Four years pass. Thurston, a young millionaire, who is to marry Mary, is pushed off a ferry boat by Max and drowned. Drummond, meanwhile, is forcing his attentions on Mary. Hugh, contrary to reports, has not been killed. His mining operations in the West have made him a millionaire and he returns home cured. At the theater he sees Mary. She recognizes him and suffers a nervous breakdown. Her unfortunate affairs with men have earned her the title of "The Destroying Angel." She goes to the seashore to recover from her attack. Drummond, meanwhile, who has spent all the money left in his care by Hugh, has disappeared.

Unconscious of Mary's whereabouts, Hugh also takes a cottage at the seashore. He foils Drummond, who has suddenly reappeared, in an attempt to kidnap Mary. Drummond is killed in the scuffle by Hugh's valet. Fearing to cast her terrible spell upon him, Mary leaves Hugh and returns to the stage. He follows, however, and Max attempts to shoot him, but Hugh has broken the deadly spell, for Max's bullets go wild. Mary, who really loves Hugh, gives herself up to her love, and returns with him. His is the charmed life which has pierced the circle of death about "The Destroying Angel."

WORLD FILM CORP.

A CORRECTION.

"The Little Church Around The Corner," a five-part World Film picture, which was originally scheduled for release on November 22, and a synopsis of which was published on page 1036 of the issue dated October 30a, has been postponed until January 3, 1916. In its place will be released "Body and Soul," a story of which will be printed in a future issue. Exhibitors will please observe the change.

HEARTS OF MEN (Harris—Nov. 8).—The cast: Arthur Donaldson, Beulah Poynter, Frank Longacre and Ethelmary Oakland.

At Cologne, in Germany, two young men work in a perfume factory. One has devised a formula for an Arabian Rose perfume. His false friend steals the formula and some money, leaving the patentee penniless. The two young men consequently come to America. The thief has become a wealthy perfumery merchant. The inventor meets him and there is a quarrel, when the cheated man demands the money that has been made out of the formula. The former friends have married and their children fall in love. But when the parents discover this, there is great unpleasantness. However, in the end, as the children promise to be sweethearts through life, the old friends are reconciled.

A BUTTERFLY ON THE WHEEL (Shubert—Nov. 15).—The cast: Holbrook Blinn, Vivian Martin, George Ralph and June Elvidge.

Peggy Admaston and her husband are rich and should be happy; but after the honeymoon Admaston neglects his young wife for the cares of his business. The result is that Peggy lends a willing ear to the love pleadings of Collingwood, a friend of her husband.

Nevertheless, Peggy remains loyal to her husband. But both are present at a theatre when it catches fire and so Admaston's doubts of her fidelity are aroused. Subsequently when Admaston discovers Peggy and Collingwood together at a country road house under what appears to him to be suspicious circumstances, he resolves to divorce his wife, and does so.

After the divorce, a friend of the Admastons, Mrs. Attwill, who had sown the seeds of strife between husband and wife, establishes Peggy's innocence to the satisfaction of her husband, and the young couple are reunited and made happy.

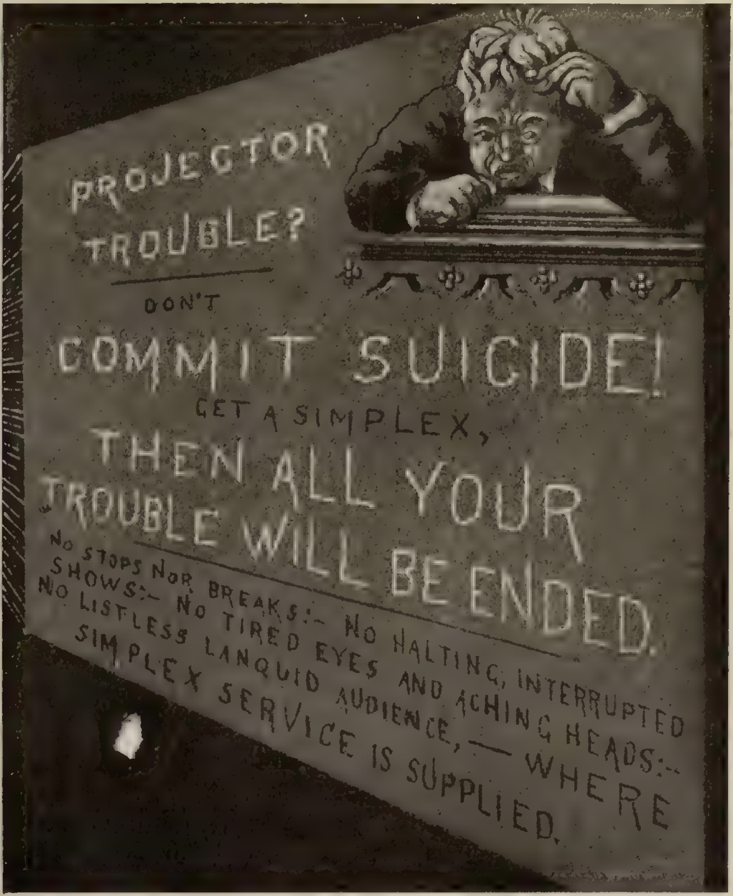
SIMPLEX PROJECTORS GIVE EXCELLENT SATISFACTION



PROJECTOR TROUBLE?
DON'T COMMIT SUICIDE!
GET A SIMPLEX,
THEN ALL YOUR TROUBLE WILL BE ENDED.
NO STOPS NOR BREAKS:- NO HALTING, INTERRUPTED SHOWS:- NO TIRED EYES AND ACHING HEADS:- NO LISTLESS LANQUID AUDIENCE,— WHERE SIMPLEX SERVICE IS SUPPLIED.

Precision Machine Company.

Gentlemen: I want to give you my opinion of the Simplex Projector, as you certainly deserve all the praise coming to what I consider the manufacturers of the only real moving picture machine on the market.

I have been in the business now going on seven years and I have owned and operated every make of machine, but if I were today ordering a car load of projectors, every one would be a Simplex without exception.

In our other house we have a motor driven machine, but when it comes time to replace with a new machine it will be a Simplex.

You are at liberty to use this unsolicited testimonial in any way which you may see fit.

Yours very truly, (Signed) C. A. PRATT,

July 5th, 1915. Fox Theatre, Electric Theatre Co., Washington, Iowa.

Your Pictures Are Judged on the Screen

Whether you are the owner in the box-office or the operator, remember that pictures are judged on the screen. Poor pictures drive away those who would gladly patronize you. Bigger profits result from better pictures; and these are guaranteed when you use

Bausch and Lomb
Projection Lenses

No matter how long or short the throw, our lenses lose none of the detail in the picture, out to the very edges. That is a test too severe for a poor lens. Yet your patrons pay to see all the picture.

The Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly equipped with Bausch and Lomb lenses. You can secure them through any film exchange.

Of Course, There are Reasons for the Installation of Over

9000 MIRROROID SCREENS

in the largest and all up-to-date theatres, in government, colleges and other institutions.

REPUTATION

This word speaks volumes and surrounds our 7 (seven) years as manufacturers of the world's best screen—bar none—MIRROROID. It is the only screen that is made of canvas—not window shading. It is the only screen that is guaranteed waterproof, not to crack, peel or tarnish, and we issue a five-year guarantee to that effect. MIRROROID is the only screen that eradicates that hazy, out-of-focus effect on close-up or angle view so plainly observed in other metalized screens, because it is the only metalized screen in the world made with a rough or matte surface finish. In three tints—Silver White, Pale Gold, Silver Flesh. One Price—36 1/9c. a Square Foot, $3.25 a Square Yard.

WHERE QUALITY COUNTS WE WIN. Do you know that the Pathescope Co. buy thousands of Mirroroid Screens yearly? Why? More Proof:

THE REGENT THEATRE
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Nov. 4th, 1915.

The J. H. Genter Co., Inc.

The Mirroroid Screen used in the Regent Theatre as well as all other Rowland & Clark Theatres are giving most satisfactory results.

Yours very truly,
ROWLAND & CLARK.

If Messrs. Rowland and Clark were not obtaining results, do you suppose they would become Mirroroid boosters? Why do we publish more testimonials than all others combined? Well, let us send you, Absolutely Free, our 12 x 18-inch samples. Test any way you desire and against any screen on earth, put it especially through the cracking, peeling, water and tearing tests.

THE NEW GENUINE 1916 MIRROROID SCREEN HAS A BLACK BACK. DON'T BE MISLED. Patented June 9th, 1908—Feb. 13th, 1915

6 Vital Reasons

why you need

THE AUTOMATIC TICKET SELLER & CASH REGISTER

First: Because you do a cash business.

Second: In doing a cash business, you must protect your cash receipts.

Third: In order to protect your cash receipts, you need an automatic register showing accurately your cash receipts each day.

Fourth: Because you need a Business System which gives you absolute control and accurate knowledge of your daily business.

Fifth: Because by using our automatic machine you secure the protection which an infallible record of each ticket sold through your machine will give you.

Sixth: You will have a "Silent Watchman" on guard in your box office at all hours of the day and night, affording a complete record of every transaction, so you can at all times verify your cash receipts, and have your business under easy personal control.

These are the reasons why Moving Picture Owners in every State and almost every City in the Union have installed this machine. For the same reasons syndicates send us their orders for each new theatre they add to their chain.

If you will investigate this subject these will prove your reasons for giving us your order

THE LITTLE GIRL IN THE BIG MOON

She sat all alone in the big moon and she was very, very lonely.
Her mother had forbidden her to see the only playmate she had.
She looked at the blinking lights of the far away city where her mother promised her some day she would find wealth and position.
But her heart was sad, for it was cold in the moon and she longed for the warmth of love.
Then the rich man her mother was seeking asked her to come and play.
She didn't know he wouldn't play fair, but her playmate did. He was watching and when the rich man hurt her so that she cried out with pain, he came and drove him away.
Then he whispered:
"I love you."
And she was very happy at last.
This beautiful story of a girl's love, so nearly wrecked by a vampire of society, is found in Essanay's five act photoplay —

ACHIEVEMENT

IN all the history of Moving Pictures there is no production which can compare with "THE NATURE MAN." The time, the energy, the patience of its producers as evidenced by the rare pictures shown, are nothing short of marvelous.

You see a man enter the primeval wilds of the California mountains, unarmed, without tools or provisions of any kind, and in a succession of the most intensely interesting scenes, you see how he conquers the forces of nature; how he clothes and feeds himself; makes a fire; and emerges conqueror of brute force by the supreme intelligence of a human being.

EXTRAORDINARY

WAY

THE pictures themselves are the fullest proof of the genuineness of the scenes, and every man, woman and child, regardless of their moving picture likes and dislikes will be held in thrilling fascination while the "Nature Man"

- Builds a fire by friction
- Makes a comfortable shelter
- Makes a rope of bark
- Weaves a fish net from bark fibre
- Fashions a fish spear and spears fish
- Builds a birch canoe
- Makes pets of bear cubs
- Snares rabbits for food
- Captures and kills a fierce mountain lion without weapons
- Snares wild elk and other animals
- Shoots the rapids of a mountain stream on a log raft.

And there's more and more. Every reel is full of breath-taking scenes—all actual happenings. Fights between wild animals, a wrestling match with a bear—punches galore. It provides new brand of thrills THAT THE WISE EXHIBITOR CAN CASH IN ON FOR REAL PROFITS. If a feature house had this they would make it a "special" feature and you couldn't touch it with a ten-foot pole. Released on the Universal Program, it offers you a rare opportunity to book a wonderful picture at a REASONABLE rental and a chance for a genuine cleanup. Write or wire your Exchange now for release date and booking. Prepare to do special advertising and get the crowds.

One Hundred Dollars Quick For a Name

THE UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY desires to secure immediately, the very best name for a new brand of feature film plays, these plays to be the very finest of their kind ever filmed, and to the person who sends in the most appropriate name on or before MIDNIGHT OF DECEMBER 10th, the UNIVERSAL will PAY ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ($100) IN SPOT CASH. The UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY will release this new brand of features under the brand name that is chosen from the names sent in.

In sending in your name suggestion for this new brand, bear in mind these several important points: first: this new brand will be of a class and character which will be adequately described as distinctive moving picture achievements. The name MUST BE SHORT and names composed of a single syllable will be given preference over names containing more than the one syllable. The name must lend itself to several things, i. e., the adaptability in trade mark designing—to psychological advertising possibilities and most of all, IT MUST BE SIMPLE AND EASILY PRONOUNCED so as to be EASILY REMEMBERED.

The name must carry a certain punch to it—must personify CLASS AND QUALITY in its very highest form and must have something about it that will clearly distinguish this new brand from the ordinary brand names. The title, after it has been chosen by the officials of the UNIVERSAL, will be announced in all the leading moving picture trade-papers, together with the name of the person who suggested it. You may send in one name or a hundred names. The number of names you suggest makes no difference—but, KEEP IN MIND, WHAT IS WANTED, from the above description. Your suggestions for brand names MUST REACH THIS OFFICE NO LATER THAN MIDNIGHT OF DECEMBER 10th.

Gentlemen:

Having the largest seating capacity of any Theatre in Cleveland, it has been a difficult matter to determine definitely what policy would produce the largest net income, and as an experiment we have tried Vaudeville, Feature pictures, regular programs and after experimenting for several months, sparing no expense, we have now found the regular Universal Program and Broadway Features produce a greater net profit than any other policy we have tried - and net profit is one of the important items in connection with a Theatre.

Yours very truly,

Read What the Daily Papers of the Country Say:

PITTSBURGH, The Sun. "An Alien" is an intensely appealing play with humor, pathos and real thrills following so closely that there is not a dull moment in the entire production.

MILWAUKEE, Free-Press. "An Alien" is what might be called a "superfeature" in that it is in eight reels and has an exceptionally good story, is splendidly acted, and produced by Thomas H. Ince with more than usual care to details.

CHICAGO, The Tribune. Alfred Hamberger seems to have hit upon another winner in the production of "An Alien," which is destined for a long time engagement.

TOLEDO, The News. "An Alien" is one of the greatest productions that has been filmed. The picture ran for weeks at the Astor Theatre in New York, and was secured by the Alhambra here at considerable expense.

CINCINNATI, Times-Star. "An Alien" with the celebrated Italian actor, George Beban, in the leading role, has scored a hit throughout the East.

SAN FRANCISCO, The Bulletin. "An Alien" is at the Tivoli where hundreds of theatre goers are being turned away this week. Many requests have been made for a second week of Beban in his massive film production.

CHICAGO, The Examiner. Together Beban and Ince have given the motion picture world in "An Alien" a production of human interest, filled with absorbing situations, gripping and eloquently told, which establishes a high standard in motion picture art.

MILWAUKEE, Sentinel. No photo drama ever offered has proven its worth as a promoter of sobbing, tears and smiles, as does "An Alien" in which George Beban is starred.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, Vindicator. Owing to the tremendous success of "An Alien," the picture was booked for the entire week at the Park Theatre, as it was considered that the customary three days would be too short to accommodate the crowds wishing to witness this powerful and appealing story of human emotions. Whereever "An Alien" has been shown it has broken all attendance records.

The terrific explosion of the ocean liner in "Sins of Society" is but a sample of the element of suspense and punch and action now being put in each World feature in addition to its natural appeal in strength of story and star.

For instance in "The Gray Mask" an auto leaps from a ferry boat carrying its passengers into the swirling waters.

There's a punch in every reel of "The Siren's Song." At the start a maddened mob destroys a bank. In the second, after a never equaled fight a man is thrown off a steamer in midocean while the climax is reached in the meeting of the two men in bedroom at midnight.

As for "Camille," it is sufficient to say that it is Clara Kimball Young's best.

They all come in December. Did you ever see such a lineup? Have you secured your contract?

Facts and Comments

THERE is a movement on foot to abolish the word "censorship" when used in describing the activities of the National Board. The National Board does not want to part with the obnoxious work—not just yet. The Board says some pertinent things on the subject. We quote this sentence: "The National Board exerts an immense influence throughout the country because, in the minds of many influential individuals and social groups in every locality, censorship of motion pictures is distinctly necessary at the present stage of their development and they will understand no other term as they insist on censorship and censorship alone." No one appreciates more than we do the splendid and really unselfish work of the Board, but their logic in this case is far from impressive. The word censorship is as hateful and as undemocratic as the thing it expresses. If we want to do away with the thing itself why not begin with the name of the thing. The dictionary abounds with good substitutes. If the Board would throw away the word it could never again be accused of competing with any censors anywhere. Censorship is much sicker today than it was two or three years ago.

* * *

FIVE or even three and two years ago such a thing as a moving picture section in a daily paper was not even known. Today the moving picture sections are comparatively common and there's the point —they growing every day. A few days ago the writer was shown a list of dailies and weeklies now printing a moving picture section and he was surprised at the number. Even the smallest country weekly often boasts a motion picture department. The tone of all these sections is friendly throughout which primarily benefits the local exhibitor.

* * *

BUT very few motion picture theaters of any size are now without their regular daily programs which are distributed among the patrons. Within the past few weeks the writer has seen a great variety of programs most of which were well edited and typographically attractive. One man believes in featuring the star and another man thinks he ought to feature the story, while a third man hopes to impress his patrons with the name of a company. The experiences of these men would no doubt make very interesting reading. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be glad to relate the experience of its readers and hopes to hear something on this vital subject from many of them.

* * *

"NEVER had a paper like THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD," said an exhibitor the other day in his theater in a suburb on the Jersey side. "We knew it when we used to use a bedspring for a rheostat; it was fine then and it's finer than ever now. All the managers and operators know that." Whereupon the man renewed his subscription. The writer heard this quite by accident and wants to let the maker of the compliment know that we appreciate what he said.

* * *

WE are in receipt of a letter from a valued friend and correspondent in a Western state. He has had a very painful experience with the vagaries of the Special War Tax and its strange interpretation by the Internal Revenue Office. He bought a small theater on which the special war tax had been paid up to June of this year. "Late in October," he states, "the government official came around to collect the $25 license and $12.50 penalty for non-payment. * * * This theater had something like five different owners the first half of this year. Though all of them lost money on it they will now have to pay the license for the remainder of the first half of the year with the 50 per cent. penalty, aggregating about $130 on a $25 house; all on account of the license not being transferable." All fairness and equity would seem to demand a tax upon the place of business rather than upon the temporary owner of the theater. The licensing policy of all the states and municipalities is based upon that principle and there seems no reason for Uncle Sam to deviate from this time-honored practice.

Acting That Is Not*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE art of the Theater," says Gordon Craig, "is neither acting nor the play, it is not scene nor dance, but it consists of all the elements of which these things are composed." This sums up an entire book he has written on the subject, but, like many another talented writer, he appears to avoid saying definitely what acting is and what it should be. So far as the screen is concerned, the entire subject is a rich field lying fallow. Even the keenest critics avoid scratching it.

Grant in advance that the absence of uttered speech severely conditions expression of thought and feeling in the photo-play, it would seem from the finest examples of work done by silent performers that there is being unconsciously shaped a definite art of ministering to the minds and hearts of an audience through silent portrayal of character, even in its psychological depths; of motive, even in its hiding places; of recreated human experience, even in its most intense moments, and of great moral passions, even those which occasionally convulse the whole world.

Now comes a young lady with eyes, nose and chin worth several thousand a week. "She has such pretty hair," observes the contented fat lady who remarked that there was a pretty baby in the last play. The hair is really beautiful. It must have cost an expert infinite pains to brush and curl it. The arrangement is as obviously artificial as it is costly, but the young actress is impersonating a ragged and half-starved waif of the slums. The director told her to make up for the part, and she possibly understood him to mean that she should "make up" in hair for what she lacked beneath it.

The author may have had an artistic creation in mind, such a brilliant insistence of the central figure as occasionally causes the story to stand forth as a noteworthy achievement. Why should the high-priced star care? She is chiefly concerned with making an impression of her personality, as conveyed by careful manicuring and hairdressing, rather than that of the play. Even when we all love a star—sometimes it is only the director—we feel that she should deserve a fine part by making the best of it. We best enjoy her participation in the story as one of its natural and consistent factors, and our interest in her begins to wane when her appeal is a smirk that speaks louder than words, "Don't you think I am well worth all the time and money spent on ME?"

It is not just to the audience when a really fine stage performer slights the screen representation, depending wholly upon past reputation to carry over a mediocre effort, particularly when the silent picturing of thought and emotion calls for all the intelligent application of her art that an accomplished actress can give. Great stars are known to accept the money for good service and give it so grudgingly, even disdainfully, that their movements and gestures become as automatic as they might be in eating soup while reading the paper.

Many patrons who would go regularly to the picture shows, just as regularly as they read their daily papers, are drifting away to other forms of entertainment during intervals, though they return again, ever hopeful, always serene in the faith that the best is yet to come, and unfavorable comments made are nearly all of the same kind. Such and such an artist merely walked through her part and spoiled the story.

Let us illustrate what an actor may do and may not do in a little imaginative illusion of our own. The play opens with a severe and orderly room, a well arranged library, in which books and writing materials indicate that the owner is a man of high standing and a student of law. In the foreground at one side, that it may be prominent without intruding on the action, is a figure of Justice. Presently Judge R. enters and hands his things to a servant who follows. Servant gives Judge an important-looking envelope and retires. Judge R. is not in a state of fatigue, but he exhibits relief on sitting down. He is a fine type, thoughtful, impartial, high-minded.

He turns calmly to the envelope, glances at the superscription, and opens it with calm deliberation. Its contents prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that he has been guilty of a decision which wronged another man and wrecked the unfortunate victim's life. An exhibit of the document reveals to the spectator that a faulty decision has involved the happiness of the victim's family. What does the Judge do?

What WOULD such a Judge do? Would not such a revelation come to one of his usually accurate judgment in the nature of a shock? His whole theory of himself is upset. He who has spent his best years in righting wrongs has committed a grievous one. It is scarcely to be credited! A second examination of the document brings out with terrible force that it is a pure expression of the truth. He falls into a reverie, during which the existing scene dissolves to that of the wrong and back again. Now his eyes open wide with horror in the first torment of conscience.

A period of time can be covered with a glimpse of other action, a line leading up to the main one, and return is made to the Judge. It is thus shown that he is a man to think long and hard on a subject. He has a habit of mentally reviewing all the testimony before reaching a mature decision. He first exhibits emotion, then his mind begins to reach out for a solution of his difficulties. He is not a man TO JUMP AT CONCLUSIONS. We feel that something larger is coming than a plan merely conceived on the impulse of a moment. Higher suspense is aroused by thus forecasting events of large importance.

Is not this adequate interpretation of character, at once a revelation and a prophecy, a finer quality of acting than the more or less automatic movements and gestures ordinarily employed? The Judge develops a plan of clandestine relief for his victim's family, and this is gradually unfolded in what he does. What he does is of interest, but it does not afford the relief expected. He cannot shake off the phantom of wrong, because he is persisting in his methods towards others

He must be made to FEEL deeply, and the mental process by which he reaches a complete conversion of character cannot be consistently hidden. How does he bring about a reconciliation of his daily acts and the new ideals which are preying on his mind? Why secrete the forces now at work making a complete change in the man and their effects upon him. Quite as well as studied facial expression, gesture and movement, we enjoy the unconscious revelation of soul which comes to us of itself when the performer lives the role he is enacting. Is not fine acting on stage or screen largely a question of psychology?

The Result of a Test

By W. Stephen Bush.

EXHIBITORS who have the courage and the initiative to make an original test usually discover something to their advantage. A most interesting letter describing such a test reached the office of The Moving Picture World recently. The subject is bound to be of vital importance to seven exhibitors out of ten and for this reason I feel justified in going somewhat into the details of the situation.

Says our correspondent: "I have been of the opinion for a long time that the public did not care so much for the usual five and six reel features but that it was the extra advertising that such pictures receive that get the business and in order to satisfy myself I decided to make a test."

There is no doubt that the same idea had entered the minds of other exhibitors and I have little doubt that other exhibitors have made a similar test but they have never published it for the benefit of all their colleagues.

Here are the details of the test which had best be described in the language of our valued correspondent:

"My method"—I am quoting him again—"was as follows: First, I booked a recognized feature program, these features to be shown on the same days each week, then I reasoned that if I gave these features exactly the same amount of publicity as I did my regular ——— program and showed them at the same price my patronage on feature days would soon show whether the public really liked these features so much better. I have just finished a three months' trial as outlined above, and the best that I can say for the features is that they have nearly held their own. Last night my regular ——— program, made up of a three reel ———, a ——— comedy and a serial story did thirty per cent. more business for me than a good ——— feature did the night before with local conditions, weather, opposition, etc., the same both nights and the prices of admission exactly the same. It is my candid opinion that the small town exhibitor can make a lasting success of features only if he uses the very best at advanced prices and those only as local conditions warrant. Conditions may be different elsewhere, but I think I can see the handwriting on the wall."

Of course conditions do vary all the time. There may and there probably are localities where the same test would result in just the opposite results. Each man must be the best judge of conditions in his locality.

One thing, however, is absolutely sure and it applies everywhere and under all circumstances. THE PADDED FEATURE must go, whether it be released by a feature company or whether it comes as part of a regular program. I am speaking with deep conviction and much earnestness because I know at first hand. A hundred exhibitors have voiced this complaint to me, but I have better evidence than hearsay. I have within the last four weeks spent a good deal of my nights in motion picture theaters. I have sat in small neighborhood theaters and in big houses in the center of the city and I have watched as many varieties of audiences as one can imagine. They all rebel against padding. It's horribly tiresome and in a place of entertainment anything that is tiresome is fatal and intolerable. Even the audience in a remote burg in the wilds of Jersey is "wise" when the padded feature comes on. They will sooner put up with anthropoid vaudeville, and that's saying a good deal. The present revival of the old single reel as evidenced by the remarkable success of the Biograph reissues is largely due to the disgust and resentment aroused by the padded feature.

Box Office Boomerangs.

By W. Stephen Bush.

SOMEBODY recently remarked that the criterion of success in films and features was their money making power.

Not long ago an exhibitor in an eastern city imported a film from Paris. Of this film no description can be given in these columns other than to say that it was a mass of mingled filth and suggestiveness. The film was exhibited in a public theater after the regular performance. The theater was sold out at an average of two dollars a seat. The standees, glad to pay the same price, brought the receipts of the performance up to an amount that broke all records.

After the exhibition the license of the theater was revoked and the ministers in the city started a bitter campaign against all motion picture theaters. For a time all the motion picture theaters suffered. The police officials who had tolerated the indecent exhibition were punished for neglect of duty. The matter has since become an issue in politics and the film men of the whole city are in great anxiety over the final outcome. There is no doubt, however, that the offensive film was the greatest box office attraction in the history of motion pictures.

Any exhibitor with a business experience of a year or more knows that not every film which insures a crowded house for a night or two is necessarily a good film for him to book. On the leading thoroughfare of a large town in this state were two houses of about equal seating capacity and with about the same advantages in the matter of location. When the "white slave" films had a brief and sensational vogue Exhibitor A was approached by the booking agent of one of the worst of these productions.

"Sooner than show this sort of stuff to my people I would burn down this house," was his reply.

Exhibitor B booked the objectionable film in a hurry. He advertised it heavily. As a result he did an enormous business. Expectant crowds packed the sidewalk in front of his theater. He probably did three times the business of his competitor. Then followed a violent ministerial crusade against motion pictures. In this case the crusade against the offending theater was supported by public sentiment. In three nights the exhibitor had destroyed the reputation of his theater, which has twice since changed management.

No exhibitor can stay in business permanently if he tries to make money regardless of the decent sentiment of his community. It is one of the duties of The Moving Picture World, the true journalistic representative of the industry, to warn its readers against such films. We have done so in the past and will do so in the future. We will also continue to refuse the advertising offered by the promoters of offensive films.

NOT PRIMARILY FOR CHILDREN.

ONE thing has gradually been recognized by even the most strenuous advocates of censorship: The motion picture is not intended primarily or even largely for the amusement of minor children. Only those censors whose daily bread and butter depends upon their continuance in office pretend to believe otherwise. There are exhibitors who believe that a strict enforcement of the law against the admission of unaccompanied minor children is a hardship. If they will think the matter over they will be able to see that there are two sides to this question.

Hearst With Vitagraph

Weekly Photo-News Reel Formerly Made in Conjunction With Selig, Will Be Issued by Arrangement with Vitagraph.

WHEN it was announced in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World that the Selig Polyscope Company had made an alliance with the Chicago Tribune for the purpose of issuing a weekly news reel beginning January 1, comment was occasioned as to what had happened to Hearst, who had, for the past year collaborated with Selig on the Hearst-Selig Weekly. The answer is now at hand in the form of a four page announcement elsewhere in this issue of the World.

Hearst has formed an alliance with the Vitagraph Company and promises a photo-news weekly reel, more comprehensive than ever.

The plans upon which the new news reel is to be made are novel and far reaching. It contemplates the division of the country into zones and the selection of a certain part of the incidents depicted in each reel that will pertain to the zone in which it is published. In other words, the service will be, in a certain degree, local as well as general. As now planned there are to be three of these zones.

Another feature of the service is that it will be independent of all other distributing agencies. It will not be associated with any other program or service. This feature is said to have its advantages.

Each zone will have its headquarters and its own news gathering staff and will supply all local event pictures to exhibitors in its territory along with the state and national events.

A still further innovation is a plan by which an exhibitor may name his own price for the service he gets. The details of this plan are not at hand, but can be obtained by communicating with the Hearst-Vitagraph Company.

There will also be "special service" in the way of photographs of unusual importance and a system of lobby announcements and posters.

Much might be said here about the success of Mr. Hearst in his ventures into the field of motion pictures and of the great facilities of the Vitagraph Company to carry out its end of the new project, but these subjects are too well known to motion picture exhibitors to require rehearsal at this time. The alliance is an interesting one and its progress will be watched with no little concern by the trade.

Vitagraph Plans

Albert E. Smith Announces Some Innovations—Will Show Pictures in Advance and Offer a Personally Picked Program.

ALBERT E. SMITH, treasurer of the Vitagraph Company, makes an interesting announcement in behalf of that company that will be of moment to motion picture exhibitors generally. In the first place, he declares:

"Today the wise exhibitor buys in the open market. He picks his program according to merit only—he gives his patrons what they want. In the past you have accepted what the exchanges offered, simply because you did not have the opportunity to choose your subjects. But the Vitagraph has established a precedent. After great forethought, after analyzing conditions, after considering the wants of the exhibitor, we have decided to let the exhibitor see every picture that he books. We do not ask exhibitors to buy our product in the dark."

This is a startling departure from the old order of things and should be welcomed by exhibitors.

Vitagraph is now releasing a single-reel comedy every Monday, a Sidney Drew comedy every Friday and a Broadway Star feature of three reels every Saturday.

"Probably the greatest change in our releasing system," said Mr. Smith, "is our personally picked program—a program composed of a four-reel dramatic subject and a single-reel comedy. This personally picked program is produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Blackton and myself. This innovation will give the exhibitor a well balanced evening's entertainment complete in all detail.

"The features are especially selected and are strong in heart interest, while the comedies are the variety of comedy that can be shown in high class theatres; that contain comic situations without vulgarity. We know this personally picked program will make money for exhibitors. Our knowledge of the industry leads us to believe that the public wants this kind of entertainment; it is a complete show and will satisfy the most critical audiences. Heretofore you have had to take other productions in conjunction with Vitagraph releases. Heretofore it has been necessary to accept other makes of film in order to get Vitagraph subjects. Heretofore you had no opportunity of picking the subjects you desired.

"Now you can give the public what it demands. You can give them all Vitagraph if it suits your purpose. You can combine and lay out your program so that it will be well balanced, and you can also give a complete evening's entertainment, with the knowledge that you are using the best that the land affords by using the Vitagraph personally picked program."

Virginia Pearson Plans Poe Monument

EDGAR ALLAN POE, the great writer, is to have a fitting memorial erected to his memory in New York City if the plans of Virginia Pearson, who recently deserted the stage to star in photoplays, do not go amiss. For years an ardent admirer of Poe and his works, Miss Pearson has long harbored the idea of assisting in a movement to give this noted author a suitable monument, and when it was suggested by several prominent men that she herself inaugurate a fund to this end the star immediately designated her willingness by depositing her check for $250 in the Commercial Trust Company in New York City to the credit of the Edgar Allen Poe Memorial Fund. In addition, Miss Pearson has written to the editors of the foremost publications of the country inviting them to serve on a committee for the collection of the fund and subsequent erection of the monument. Many have already accepted, and so ready has been the response from well-known men and women offering their support that it is believed that the $50,000 which it is planned to secure for the monument will be available in a very short time.

Virginia Pearson.

Mayor Preston of Baltimore, in which city the remains of Poe are buried, recently wrote to Miss Pearson an encouraging communication in which he suggested that the monument be erected in Baltimore. After investigation, Miss Pearson decided New York to be the logical city for its erection and took up the matter with Cabot Ward, Commissioner of Parks of New York City, who promised his assistance in securing a fitting site for the statue.

NOILA THROUGH ASSOCIATED.

Capt. William J. Hannon, president of the Noila Film Company, of New Orleans, was in town last week and arranged to release his five-reel features through the Associated, offering one feature every four weeks. The releases will start in December.

The Noila is not a new company, having been organized for some time, but the brand has not been made known until now. They have a glass and electric studio on the Bayou St. John, the studio grounds covering about 18,000 square feet, with laboratory, offices and full equipment, and they have now on hand a stock of negative that will ensure regularity of release.

Capt. Hannon's son, William Morgan Hannon, author of "The Photodrama" and other essays, is the company's editor and will also have full supervision of the sub-titling of films, ensuring a freedom from the annoying errors in grammar and spelling that mark so many feature releases. His standing in the literary world of New Orleans is also assurance that the stories will possess literary as well as pictorial merit.

Coming Triangle Attractions

Billie Burke, Marie Doro and the Talmadge Sisters Featured in Three Strong Productions.

MISS BILLIE BURKE'S recent flying visit to the Ince studios in southern California indicates to theatrical sharps that she contemplates becoming a regular Ince star. This will surprise a good many persons who thought that the picture play "Peggy" was to be her first and only film play. A recent letter from the coast said: "You cannot exploit 'Peggy' too strongly. It is really one of the most attractive film comedies ever made, and Miss Burke has proven herself a perfect screen subject."

Scene from "Peggy" (Triangle).

Billie Burke is said to be the most expensive stage star ever engaged for the pictures, not excepting Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree who passed through New York last week on his way to the Griffith studio. Her probable future re-employment at Inceville means that Triangle directors realize she is able to "deliver the goods" in proportion to her enormous salary. "Peggy" is a story of the eternal conflict between the old and the new, the spirit of conservatism in the Scottish Highland community and the social and moral revolution affected by the entrance of the New York girl, Peggy Cameron, on the scene. It will be released to exhibitors generally in January.

Scene from "The Wood Nymph" (Triangle-Fine Arts).

Out among the redwoods of California, the land of vast dimensions and vast silences, Nature often takes captive a lonely heart that with little or no human companionship rests content in the abode of beauty. Such a character, living over again the Grecian mythology of gods and goddesses, Pam, Satyrs and wood nymphs, Granville Warwick created in the new Triangle-Fine Arts play, "The Wood Nymph," which will shortly have its first public view at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York. It was fortunate that Miss Marie Doro's engagement under the Triangle happened to be so timed that she could essay the stellar role of Daphne, the Californian wood nymph, in this story. D. W. Griffith who supervised the production has been careful to surround Miss Doro with an able cast. Among them are the handsome Charles West, as the star's leading man; Frank Campeau, the wonderful ex-bandit of "Jordan is a Hard Road;" Wilfred Lucas, the clever heavy of "The Lily and the Rose," together with Cora Drew, Fred Graham and Pearl Ellsmore. "The Wood Nymph," with Miss Doro, will be one of the early showings at the Knickerbocker theater, with a general Triangle release soon after the first of the year.

The advent of the Talmadge sisters, Norma and Constance, to the Griffith studio, is one of the recent pleasant incidents of Triangle activities, and their first new play under this sign, "The Missing Links," is scheduled for early presentation at the Knickerbocker theater. Miss Norma Talmadge is one of the youngest stars at Griffithville. Her entire experience has been in the films. In her first effort for the Triangle she is co-star with Robert Harron, and the quality of the cast is indicated by the fact that Thomas Jefferson, Elmer Clifton, Hal Wilson and Constance Talmadge are in it. "The Missing Links" takes its queer title from the circumstance that a missing cuff link figures as a clew to the discovery of a murderer. The play is an absorbing tale of loves and hates and financial tangles in a small country town.

JOHNNY POWERS-EDNA PENDLETON.

Johnny Powers, the popular assistant director to Stuart Paton of the Imp-Universal studio, and who accompanied the company on the Nassau trip last summer, was introduced to Miss Edna Pendleton, a member of the company, by Jack Cohn, and it resulted in a case of love at first sight, culminating in a little trip to the Church Around the Corner. It's about three weeks now since Johnny and Miss Pendleton, starting out looking for locations for Director Paton, quietly got the location they wanted at the parson's and were there joined in the holy bands of wedlock. After keeping the news a secret for a couple of weeks it was whispered around the studio that the little flirtation led to a more serious courtship with the results above mentioned. Now the happy couple is being showered with congratulations by the employees of the Imp studio.

NEW EXPORT REGULATIONS.

The announcement that new United States regulations relative to export procedure will become effective January 1, 1916, has created such intense interest among manufacturers and shippers that the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, Washington, has found it necessary to reprint the new order with explanatory text. That pamphlet is just off the press and is being supplied free of charge to those interested, upon application to the above mentioned office. All shipments for export to foreign countries or to Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico will be affected by the new regulations.

Triangle Protests

Avers That Its Transfer of the Studebaker Theater to Jones, Linick & Shaefer Does Not Mean the Failure of Its "Two Dollar" Policy.

IN last week's issue of the Moving Picture World our Chicago correspondent communicated the information to the trade that the Triangle Film Corporation had turned the Studebaker theater in that city over to the firm of Jones, Linick & Shaefer, which would in future operate it, showing Triangle pictures at 25-cent and 50-cent admission prices, drawing the conclusion that such action pronounced the failure of the Triangle's plan for two-dollar pictures in Chicago.

Decided exceptions are taken to this conclusion by the Triangle Corporation in a letter to the Moving Picture World signed by Campbell MacCulloch, manager of publicity and promotion for that corporation, who cites the following message, which is a copy of one sent to the daily press of Chicago and is said to contain the true reasons for the change of management:

COPY OF TELEGRAM.

New York, Nov. 13, 1915.—Beginning Monday, November 29th, the Studebaker Theater will pass back into the hands of Jones, Linick & Schaefer interests, who will continue therein to exhibit the Triangle plays which have achieved so favorable an impression in Chicago, exactly as they have been shown during the management by the Triangle Film Corporation.

Motion picture exhibitors and theater managers in Chicago have brought no little pressure to bear upon the Triangle Film Corporation to have this theater released to some of their number on the ground that it is commercially unethical for a distributing corporation to engage in competition with its customers.

This theater was inaugurated as a high class playhouse, devoted to Triangle Film plays to demonstrate the practicability of the plan, and it has now served that purpose.

As the Triangle Film Corporation is engaged in producing film plays by Griffith, Ince and Sennett, and renting these plays to its customers, the motion picture exhibitors and theater managers throughout the country, Chicago interests have felt that it was more proper that such exhibition should be handled by one of their number.

Arrangements have been made with Jones, Linick & Schaefer, therefore, whereby, on the payment of a substantial bonus, the Triangle control of the Studebaker Theater will revert to these interests, beginning Monday, November 29th. No change will be made in the conduct of the theater. The plays will continue to be shown in the house as in the past, but the management will be the local Jones, Linick & Schaefer management, and not the Triangle Film Corporation.

A similar arrangement has been made with regard to the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia, which, on Monday, November 22d, will revert also to its former management, the B. F. Keith interests. Precisely similar conditions will prevail there, so far as to the management is concerned. Triangle plays will still be seen, as they have been, the single change being that of management.

In each case it has been interesting to note that the pressure for reversion did not come until after last Monday, November 7th, when the general release date for the first showing of Triangle Plays throughout the country proved the enormous drawing power of these productions. Immediately it was demonstrated that the Triangle service was without question an assured success, at that moment efforts to reclaim the theaters in Chicago and Philadelphia were made, and while tentative proposals had been in process before the Triangle success produced offers of heavy bonuses.

THE TRIANGLE CORPORATION.

Granting that all Manager MacCulloch says in his letter (which we do not publish) and the telegram to the Chicago papers is true in as far as it affects the acts and purposes of the Triangle Film Corporation, the fact still remains that Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who now control the house, have placed the admission prices at 25 cents and 50 cents, which must be accepted as their verdict as to the tariff for which the patrons of motion pictures in Chicago will stand. The matter would seem to resolve itself into a question of judgment between Jones, Linick & Schaefer and the Triangle Film Company, and that the correspondent of the Moving Picture World had merely recorded an inference, expressed or implied, by the local managers.

JOSEPH FREDERICK WITH PREMIER.

Joseph Frederick has been added to the staff of the Premier Program for scenario work. Joseph Frederick is best known as the author of dramatic productions. His three-act comedy, entitled "Worried Partners," having attained much success. Mr. Frederick has just completed an original libretto, based on "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the music of which has been written by Arthur Pryor, and which will be produced in the near future. Those who know Joseph Fredericks personally know him as Frederick Joseph Chipman, but in literary, dramatic and motion picture circles the name of Joseph Frederick is far more familiar.

"TWILIGHT SLEEP" BANKRUPT.

The Motherhood Educational Society, Incorporated, which has been producing a motion picture film known as "Twilight Sleep," filed in the Federal District Court Tuesday, November 23, a voluntary bankruptcy petition. It estimated its liabilities at $14,238, and said that its assets, which included the "Twilight Sleep" films and $504 in cash, were problematical in value.

Kalem Announces Plans

Will Adhere to Its Well Known Policy of Short Subjects With Strong Appeal.

THAT the interests of the Kalem Company would be centered on the production of one and two-reel films and that no attempt would be made to meet a rigidly binding schedule for the production of multiple reel offerings was the gist of an official announcement from that company early this week. The statement contained the first outline of Kalem's plans under the recently inaugurated General Film Company policy. It was also hinted that Kalem expects to be ready within a few weeks to make an announcement of unusual importance concerning the details of forthcoming productions.

"We are in negotiation with some of the most prominent authors in the country," explained an official of the company, when interviewed by a World representative, "and naturally as we expect to give exhibitors the work of these big writers in short films we feel that the news will be somewhat of a surprise. We have never swerved from the policy of putting our very best into even the one and two-reel films, and the wonderful success of 'Stingaree' which is being released in two reel episodes though written by so well known an author as E. W. Hornung, is sufficient incentive for us to make even more elaborate efforts in the future.

"I believe we may be pardoned for a slight feeling of pride in having seen the handwriting on the wall regarding the short film," he continued. "While it would seem that many manufacturers have allowed their short films to deteriorate in order to chase the feature will-o-the-wisp, trade paper readers will probably remember that Kalem has always been a champion of the short film. We have given our best directors and our best players to them. Take the case of Robert Ellis, whom I consider one of our most promising directors, and who has been responsible for some of our most successful multiple reelers. Just recently he has been placed in charge of the "Ventures of Marguerite" company because we want to give that single reel series the best we have.

"The statement that we will center our interest on the short films does not mean that we will withdraw from the production of multiple reelers. It means that we shall make no attempt to meet the rigidly binding rules of releasing a feature production on schedule week in and week out. When we secure subjects that we believe warrant treatment in four and five reels, and if the completed production comes up to the standard set, then we shall release multiple reelers. 'The Black Crook' is one of the big things that we will have ready to offer in a very short time. When we get subjects as strong and with as much novelty and drawing power for the exhibitor we shall produce other features.

"But just now we have three series that have proven winners and the well known 'Ham and Bud' comedies. The latter subject, with the 'Ventures of Marguerite,' 'Stingaree' and the 'Hazards of Helen' are in the sure-fire class, and it is up to us to devote practically all our energy to keep them so. That's quite a strong quartette of cards to pin your faith to, isn't it?"

KLEINE MAKES "THE SCARLET PATH."

"The Scarlet Path" is the title of a new Kleine feature under way. It is a story of New York's great white way and will be told by a star cast with Guy Coombs in the lead. He will be supported by Anna Q. Nilsson, Della Connor and others of like caliber.

"The Scarlet Path" contains a cabaret scene which for size and magnificence is probably unequalled. The entire floor of the big Bronx studio was given over to the staging of this scene. Several hundred people were engaged, and a balcony, mezzanine floor and grand staircase constructed. The entire production is characterized by a lavishness and wealth of detail commensurate with the splendid story it tells.

LONG DIED A MILLIONAIRE.

Litigation over the fees demanded by an attorney in the matter of the estate of Samuel Long, deceased, one of the owners of the Kalem Company, brought to light the fact that from an investment of $1,000 made in 1907 was amassed an estate now valued at a figure closely approaching $2,000,000.

It appears that Mr. Long made a will disposing of his holdings, but it was found to be illegal when offered for probate, and letters of administration have been issued to the decedent's widow, Alice M. Long. Long owned 40 per cent of the stock of the Kalem Company.

John D. Tippett Talks

Managing Director of Transatlantic Film Company, Limited, Visiting New York and Universal City.

BACK in New York for the first time in two and a half years, John D. Tippett, managing director of the Transatlantic Film Company, Limited, talked to a World man of his work in Universal House, 37-39 Oxford street, London. Mr. Tippett had arrived in New York the day before, Monday, November 22, after an exceedingly rough trip of ten days. He was seen in the office of Robert H. Cochrane at the Universal headquarters, 1600 Broadway. He said the film situation in England was holding up well, and that Universal films, the distribution of which throughout Great Britain and Europe was his whole concern, were doing a big business.

John D. Tippett.

When Mr. Tippett went to England in June, 1913, the various brands of pictures comprising the Universal programs were being distributed by four or five separate concerns. The Transatlantic Film Company was organized, with Mr. Tippett as managing director, to take over the agencies of all of them. Universal House, a six-story building, was fitted up. Offices were opened all over Europe. Prior to the beginning of the war there were fifteen of these. At present the Transatlantic is represented in Paris, Rome, Barcelona, Milan, Amsterdam, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Christiania, Petrograd and Moscow. In these offices Universal film is handled exclusively. "These cities have done good business right from the start," said Mr. Tippett, "and the Universal is as well known in all of them as it is in the United States. Especially is this true in Russia.

"Quality of films counts in England," went on Mr. Tippett. "Good pictures sell themselves. Salesmanship as a factor in putting over films has minimum value. If a man presumes to suggest to a professional viewer that a certain subject is a good one very likely he will be met with a remark such as: 'Please bear in mind the fact that I see upward of 40,000 feet of film a day—yes, from 200,000 to 240,000 feet a week. I know what is being made throughout the world. Who is going to tell me when a picture is good or when it is not?'

"There's the situation. They do know, too—both viewers and dealers. They are business men. Films are sold on merit. And the Universal is doing one-third of the business in the open market in England. In spite of the fact that there are only 4,000 picture theaters in Great Britain they assimilate everything that is made in the world and they are doing a good business. Of course, many men have been taken out of the country. Exhibitors are playing features strongly. Programs, which consist of six or seven reels, are changed twice weekly. For wonderful projection, splendid music and general tone there is nothing in the world like the English theaters. The price of admission ranges all the way from 5 cents to $2. The most scrupulous care is taken with the program.

"We have been successful with our serials. With 'The Black Box' we sold forty copies, and there is every reason to believe we will dispose of fifty of 'The Broken Coin.' How did Nat Goodwin's 'Business Is Business' go? Now you are talking of a picture that I thought a lot of. When I showed that subject of Otis Turner's in France I was told the atmosphere was ideal, that it could not have been made there to greater advantage."

Mr. Tippett was asked about the Bernhardt subject. "Jeanne Dore," and especially as to the authenticity of the guillotine scene. "That was the real thing," said the Transatlantic director. The guillotine was built by the concern that makes these instruments for the French government, and by the way, is the only one that ever was made for any purpose other than straight business. Ours was set up on the outskirts of Paris against a great stone building near the fortifications. The scene of the execution was a duplicate of what happens on those grim occasions when the mandate of the law is being carried out."

Mr. Tippett said the execution scene as it will be shown in England and in this country is somewhat different from the view the Russians will get. In the land of the Czar picture patrons demand extreme realism, and with this in view the drop of the knife was made to simulate the real thing as far as that could be accomplished with a dummy. While this scene was being taken a German Taube flew over the heads of the actors. The anti-aircraft guns popped on all sides and, as Mr. Tippett put it, "Mr. Taube very suddenly changed his mind and started for home in a hurry."

There are about 600 picture theaters in France and in Europe in normal times about 5,500, Mr. Tippett estimated. The number of those in the latter now in operation can only be guessed. It may be interesting to note that this makes the total of picture theaters in operation in Great Britain and Europe in peace times approximately 10,000.

The Transatlantic has had two companies making pictures for the past eight months. The laboratory work on the films of these as well as on all the positives for distribution through foreign Universal agencies is done at a big factory in Epping Forest, one of the suburbs of London, about thirty-five minutes ride from Universal House.

When asked if the new impost on films would be appreciably felt by the Transatlantic Company, Mr. Tippett replied: "It will. I estimate it will cost us $6,000 to $7,000 a week and may run as high as $400,000 annually. The matter has been taken by all branches of the film industry in England, with the result that arrangements will be made so that the burden will be distributed equitably among all. There is no disposition anywhere to avoid meeting a due share of the enormous expenses of the war."

Mr. Tippett left on Friday for a flying trip to Universal City as the guest of President Laemmle. He will, according to present plans, return to England on December 15.

Mae Murray in Lasky Productions

FAMOUS at one time as the "most beautiful show girl in the world," Miss Mae Murray until several weeks ago one of the important principals in Ziegfeld's "Follies of 1915," has left the musical comedy stage for an indefinite period to appear exclusively in photoplay productions of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company on the Paramount Program.

Mae Murray.

Miss Murray left for the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Calif., last Monday. She will begin her work immediately under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille.

However famous Miss Murray became by reason of her wide reputation as a "show girl," she won added popularity for herself during the past two years by reason of her remarkable dancing. Probably no woman besides Mrs. Vernon Castle enjoyed so great a vogue as a dancer than Miss Murray since the modern dancing "craze" swept the country. She toured across the country in vaudeville and on her return to New York last spring she was established as an institution of New York's gay life atop the Forty-fourth street theatre at Mae Murray's Danse Marigny.

Miss Murray brings an unusual experience to her new screen work. She never posed before the motion picture camera until last spring when the new "Follies" was being rehearsed. One of the features of that performance is a burlesque on motion pictures which shows players on the screen receiving orders from the director who stands in the aisle among the spectators of the audience. Miss Murray is the heroine of the burlesque.

Miss Murray is twenty-two years old. She is a blonde type, with wavy hair, big eyes and clear features. Her motion picture plans for the future are said to contain some very interesting things for her.

Helen's Anniversary Thrill

Fourteen-Foot Drop from Top Girder of Bridge to Train in "A Boy at the Throttle."

THAT December would be "anniversary month" for the "Hazards of Helen" series was announced in last week's Moving Picture World. In "A Boy at the Throttle," released by Kalem on December 25, Helen presents her "anniversary thrill." The players of the company at the California studio originally planned to hold an elaborate celebration on the day that the series was a year old, but Helen Gibson, who is playing the lead in the "Hazards," declared that the perilous situation of the picture then in making should be staged on the birthday before the feasting began.

It took considerable ingenuity to devise a peril more extraordinary than Helen has encountered in the past, but that the task was accomplished may be guessed from the photograph shown on this page. The top girder of the Melius drawbridge, near the studio, is fourteen feet above the top of trains passing below and it was decided that a drop from there would give all the thrill necessary to bring any photoplay patron to the edge of his seat. So Helen prepared a rope with sling knots, the train was started on its race across the bridge, and at the right moment Helen slid down the rope to within six feet of the train and dropped. A second's miscalculation would have caused her to slip between the cars, and, as it was, the landing on the train caused sufficient shock to come near to marring the celebration planned for later in the day.

The story of "A Boy at the Throttle" concerns Bobbie, the son of a station engineer, who climbs into the cab of an engine while the engineer is busy elsewhere and pulls the throttle open. The alarm goes out, and Helen, the operator at Lone Point, is ordered to derail the runaway and thus prevent it from running head-on into an approaching passenger train. Fearing for his son's life, Bobbie's father phones Helen and implores her not to send the engine into the ditch. Outside the station a small truck suggests a way out of her dilemma. Putting the car on the track, Helen speeds down the grade and flags the passenger train, switching it to a siding. Helen then races to the switch, which she reaches before the runaway train and then boards as shown in the photograph.

DE WITT C. WHEELER DEAD.

DeWitt C. Wheeler, best known throughout the United States as the greatest manufacturer of illustrated song slides when that industry was at its height, died very suddenly while visiting friends in New York on Sunday, November 21. Up to within a very few years Mr. Wheeler conducted a prosperous business in song slides, but the failing popularity of that form of entertainment led to the failure of his company, after which he turned to motion pictures, for which his long photographic experience especially fitted him.

For a time Mr. Wheeler manufactured pictures on his own account, but inability to find a suitable market led to failure in this venture, and of late he had been working as a camera man.

The deceased was about fifty-three years at the time of his death.

Cyril Scott

CYRIL SCOTT in 1884 a thin, skinny, though handsome young lad, had inclinations to get into the show business. At that time Miss Minnie Maddern was engaged by Charles Frohman to become leading lady and co-star with Henry Miller in "Caprice," which opened November 8 of that year at Indianapolis. He was chosen for a minor part in the play and received the sum of fifteen dollars a week. His role was that of a young athlete in the prime of life, full of health and vigor, trained to the inch, and being nothing but muscle and bone. He made the most of this slender opportunity and is today one of the leading stars of Broadway.

Cyril Scott.

When the Universal Film Manufacturing Company decided to film Meredith Nicholson's famous story, "Lords of High Decision," they wanted a prominent and well qualified Broadway actor to take the leading part, and, strangely enough, Cyril Scott, who played the role of an athlete in his first appearance on the speaking stage, was chosen for a similar part in his first appearance on the screen with Universal.

The Universal spent several weeks in Pittsburgh to film the story, where they used the mines of a large concern for many of the scenes and in order to get realistic effects not obtainable in any other way engaged the entire mining force to take part in the picture which gives it the actual mining atmosphere and scenery required for the proper portrayal of the story. The actors went several miles into the mines, and it took them several days before they became sufficiently accustomed to the change of air to act their roles in the bowels of the earth.

TOM MOORE WITH LUBIN.

Announcement is made by the Lubin Manufacturing Company that a contract has been entered into between that company and Tom Moore, one of the most popular men of photoplays, whereby that idol of the fans begins work with Lubin in the coming feature production, "Dollars and Cents," in which he will play opposite Ethel Clayton, the Lubin star.

Tom Moore needs no introduction to followers of motion pictures. Mr. Moore with Alice Joyce were one time favorites with the Kalem Company, and quite recently his retirement came from that company; since which time he has resisted many flattering offers from this or that concern, until Messrs. Singhi and Lowry for the Lubin Company made overtures which he confesses he could no longer resist.

In casting Mr. Moore for the leading male role in "Dollars and Cents" Director Joseph Kaufman, under whose supervision the production is to be made, has made a selection which not only assures an enhancement in the value of the production itself, but one which will afford to Tom an opportunity to display the remarkable screen playing ability which earned for him the reputation he enjoys.

"Dollars and Cents" is the story written by the eminent American writer, Albert Payson Terhune, which appeared both in serial and book form and which has been one of the best sellers of the age.

WILL EXPLOIT FEATURES.

The Public Service Film Company will fill a long felt want in the exhibiting end of the industry. Headed by Joseph Leblang, the noted organizer, it is the intention of the company to accept and exploit important features for owners who are not familiar with the game. The success achieved by the Public Service in their exploitation of the Chicago Tribune's German War Pictures bespeaks for the patrons of this company efficient and able representation.

Equitable Directors Busy

Big Scenes Being Filmed—Mexico and the Southland in New Plays.

THE Equitable's Fifty-second street studio put over two big scenes last week. One of them was in "The Dragon," where Margarita Fischer, the star, was supposed to make her first acquaintance with the way things are done in the salon of a fashionable Modiste, and the other called for the use of Murray's Forty-second street dining place, as headquarters for a select cafe party. For the first the Maison Maurice was drawn upon for a display of the very latest and most costly gowns, and there was a valuation of more than $3,000 placed on the articles of feminine adornment which were displayed by the mannequins who paraded through the beautiful hall. The set occupied the whole floor of the big studio, and was a revelation of what can be done when the resources of a well equipped establishment are called on.

For one of the last scenes of "Idols," which Webster Cullison is directing, with Katherine Kaelred as the star, Murray's was filled with guests in full dress and evening costumes, and seldom, if ever, has the well known resort presented a more brilliant appearance. To George Sheer, of the Fifty-second street studio management, is given the credit of making the arrangements for securing the use of the place, handling the lights, the crowd, and the other accessories, and the whole thing was over before the regular diners made their appearance for their noonday repast.

Up in the Bronx Marie Empress and her prize winning Manchester black and tan "Baby," are busy with the first scenes of "Behind Closed Doors," under the direction of Joseph A. Golden, of Triumph, the Equitable's producing ally. The actress, of course, is the star of the play, but the dog, which is regarded as the most valuable 30 ounces of canine flesh in New York, will have an appearance, if not a speaking part, in the new production.

Over in Flushing S. E. V. Taylor is busy with "Nan Perrine," the title part of which is being taken by Molly McIntyre, and in which some heavy scenes are scheduled, and John Ince is preparing to start Frank Sheridan off in the filming of "The Man Higher Up."

Director Hopper, having finished "The Labyrinth," is expected to start for Mexico within a few days to pick out locations for his next big feature which has for its basis a story of Mexican intrigue, love, and psychology which will prove of absorbing interest. It is an original story from the pen of H. R. Durant, and will be called "Her God."

Charles M. Seay, who since the finish of "A Daughter of the Sea" has been making arrangements for filming his new script "Babette of the Ballyhoo," in which Muriel Ostriche will take the part of circus girl, is ready to take his principals into the southland, where they will join a road show and get "atmosphere." Mr. Seay will be on familiar ground, as his experience in making circus story pictures has gone far beyond the confines of the "Big top," and has taken in everything down to the cook tent.

ESSANAY TO MAKE "THE MISLEADING LADY."

Essanay is making extensive preparations for the taking of its coming five-act feature, "The Misleading Lady," adapted from the stage success written by Charles W. Goddard and Paul Dickey.

In order to make the play as realistic as possible, A. Berthelet, the director, accompanied by Henry B. Walthall, Edna Mayo and other leading characters, will make a trip to the Adirondacks to take several scenes.

The scene in which the heroine is kidnapped by the soldier-of-fortune and taken to his mountain lodge takes place in the Adirondacks and will be staged there in the exact setting as in the play.

The homes of several of Chicago's wealthiest citizens will be employed in taking the house party scenes, and other scenes which take place in the homes and on the estates of the rich.

The play has a stirring theme, with a cave man in evening clothes, a woman, primitive as the first mother, and the crashing, merciless battle of the sexes in the wooing of the pair.

LEHRMANN RETURNS TO COAST.

Getting to See Edna Mayo

By Margaret I. MacDonald.

"O-OO!" replied a small but musical voice from the dressing room region of a Fifth avenue photograph studio to the attendant in the outer gallery. "Have you got a little, wee brush?"

"No, but we have an eyebrow pencil if that will do," replied the attendant.

"No, no, I've got too much on now, and I want to get some of it off. Haven't you got a little brush? No?"

The small voice rose to the last interrogation in diatonic ascendency, which signified the question left unspoken. "If you haven't, why haven't you?"

Perched on a window seat opposite where the voice came from, all I could see of its owner was a pert little chin and mouth that was rudely amputated from the saucy nose, perfectly innocent blue eyes and blonde curls that belonged on the upper register, by a bronze lamp with a very officious rose gold shade that stood on a cumbersome table whose weight of rare old timber was not sufficient reason for its being very much in the way just at that moment.

Edna Mayo.

I might add by way of explanation that this was the first appearance of Miss Edna Mayo, Essanay film star, on the scene of my waiting, and that the next appearance of this capricious little body was some time considerably later.

Miss Mayo came to town from far Chicago on Saturday, the 20th day of November, with only Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and part of Wednesday to do a lot of necessary and wonderful things, among which was the selection of ever so many dollars' worth of gowns, I wouldn't even whisper how many, ravishing creations designed by Lady Duff Gordon, to decorate the little lady socially and picturewise. She left New York again for the West on Wednesday by the 2.45 train, or at least such is my understanding.

A picture story is never a success unless you have plenty of suspense in it, so they say, and when I tell you that it took me almost twenty-six hours to catch up with Edna Mayo in her whirlwind chase around New York City you will realize that some suspense attends the story of my trying to get even with the little star, which started at shortly past eight one chilly morning.

When we did get even she told me with breathless haste during the process of re-attiring herself for the street that when she is at work at the Essanay studios in Chicago she rises at seven every morning, goes to work between eight and nine o'clock, works until five in the afternoon, and retires at nine.

The first picture production she will work in after reaching Chicago will be "The Misleading Lady." She says she does not like herself in every picture she appears in, but is rather partial to "The Little Deceiver," "The Little Straw Wife," and one or two others I've forgotten the names of. She tells you with questionable titter that she was born in Philadelphia, and declares that she has to come all the way back from Chicago to dear old New York to get just the kind of clothes she wants to wear, meaning, of course, no reflection on our Western rival.

I'm glad I met Miss Mayo, and sorry that I have nothing more of real solid fact to tell you. But after all what more could one gather on a "quick change."

THOMAS BEDDING RESIGNS FROM WORLD FILM.

Thomas Bedding, who for some time has been connected with the publicity department of the World Film Corporation, has resigned. Mr. Bedding, who has had a wide experience in the film industry, has announced no plans for the future.

Richard Stanton Working on "Graft"

Producer Has Selected Strong Cast for the New Universal Serial—First Episode Quickly Made.

THE first episode of "Graft," the new serial of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been completed by Director Richard Stanton of the Pacific Coast studios of the Big U organization.

"Make it a stem winder," said Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company in a dispatch to Director General Henry McRea about the serial, adding: "I want it to be the best serial we or any other film company had ever put out. Don't spare the expense—give us the best serial results possible."

Richard Stanton.

Director Stanton and the officers of the studio plunged into the matter with a vim and soon had planned a campaign for the forthcoming serial. A few days later Director Stanton selected his cast, the leading roles being placed in the hands of Hobart Henley and Jane Novak. Henley's excellent work in "The Man in the Chair," "A Little Brother of the Rich," "The Tenor," and other recent photoplays, will be recalled by the followers of the screen as will also the splendid portrayals of Miss Novak in "The Scarlet Sin," and "A Little Brother of the Rich." Another of the principal roles was given to Glen White, a Universal favorite, who came to the coast especially to take part in the serial.

In exactly six days from the start upon the serial Director Stanton had finished the first episode, and when the two reels were given their initial showing in the projection theatre at Universal City a critical audience unanimously decided that they depicted an unusually interesting story which was splendidly acted by the leads and the entire company.

Dark Cloud

HERE is Dark Cloud, an Indian actor who made his debut this week in the first class New York picture program at the Knickerbocker theatre, appearing as the Indian Chief in the Triangle-Fine Arts play of "The Penitentes." His debut in the $2 pictures is rather late in life, for Dark Cloud is 76 years old. But he is as strong and sturdy as a boy of twenty, stands 6 ft. high, weighs 180 lbs. and is a man of wealth in the bargain, his bank account, it is said, totaling $100,000. He rides like the wind and in the battle and master scenes has the fury of the Sioux. Really he is a Penobscot Maine Indian, almost the last pure blood of his race, and has been in theatrical work of various kinds for the last 20 or 30 years. Dark Cloud is a considerable philosopher. He attributes the decay and coming extinction of the American Indian to interbreeding with the whites. He says: "My people understood nature and lived close to her throbbing heart. Your people do not know the shelter of the trees and the whispered secrets of the forest. They wear themselves out upon unspeakable realities, and they are never renewed. Modern science has come to realize that America is the oldest land in the world and that the Indian was the first man, Adam."

Dark Cloud.

Ellis Directs "Ventures"

Producer of Many Kalem Features to Stage "Ventures of Marguerite."

ROBERT ELLIS, well known as a player in Kalem productions for years, and who recently showed his worth as a producer of Kalem three and four reel features, has been given the reins for the "Ventures of Marguerite" company, and will produce the future episodes in the Kalem series featuring the dainty Marguerite Courtot. Ellis is considered by Kalem one of the most valued members of the directing staff, and his transference to the single reel stories is in line with that organization's announced policy of putting its best resources in the short productions.

Screen fans will not miss Robert Ellis as an actor, however, for it is probable that he will play the "heavy" roles in the forthcoming "Ventures." "The Ventures of Marguerite" have proven fully up to the standard of popularity of past Kalem series, and it is expected that with this change they will become even stronger. Miss Courtot will continue to wear Russek creations throughout the series as the fashion element has had no small part in the success of the series.

William Conklin

EVERY inch an actor is William Conklin, who has made his reappearance on the screen via the Balboa studios in "Neal of the Navy," the patriotic serial photoplay which was made with the approval of the United States Government. More than six feet tall, Mr. Conklin has an impressive physique and a clean-cut face that is good to look upon.

William Conklin.

He began young manhood as the junior member of the well-known drygoods firm of John M. Conklin & Son, in Brooklyn, one of the largest mercantile establishments of the East. During the troublous times of a score or more years ago, the concern closed its doors and William Conklin had to find something else to do.

The stage had always interested him. Through his club affiliations, he was acquainted with many of the leading managers and producers. One of them enabled him to begin at the bottom. But a man of Conklin's calibre climbs fast, once he starts. He has filled many notable engagements in the realm of the legitimate. All of last year, he was the leading juvenile man in one of Broadway's biggest hits.

Some years before, Mr. Conklin had been a member of a prominent stock company owned by H. M. Horkheimer, now the head of the Balboa studio. With a renewal of acquaintance between the two, it was natural that the actor should go to Long Beach. He had had a previous picture engagement with the All Star Feature Company, under the direction of Augustus Thomas.

Mr. Conklin has all the equipment necessary to make a successful actor, both on the stage and screen. When he finishes his present picture, he is to be featured in some notable Balboa releases that will enable him to appear to the best possible advantage.

BOWMAN DIRECTED "PENNINGTON'S CHOICE."

In a recent review of "Pennington's Choice," released by the Metro Pictures Corporation, O. A. C. Lund was named as the director. The Moving Picture World has been advised that William J. Bowman produced this picture and deserves full credit.

Making Films Steady

The Contribution to Cinematographic Art That Is Credited to Nicholas Power.

THOMAS A. EDISON is credited with having said: "Give me a motion picture machine and I'll teach more history in fifteen minutes than instructors and text books can drill into the minds of pupils in a month." But this was not in the early days of motion pictures—for the machines used fifteen years ago, when moving pictures were being introduced, were inspired with the jumps, flickers and dances to a degree that made it an optical hardship to look at a film.

When films were in the experimental stage the picture machine was equally undeveloped. Edison seemed to have other things to think of besides films and picture projection two decades ago. The inventive mind of the "wizard" had not then taken up the subject of pictures to any great extent, and it was many years after the picture business grew out of its swaddling clothes before anybody gave much study to the important detail of projection.

Finally one inventive genius—Nicholas Power by name—noted the defects in the early film displays, and traced the troubles to their source—the projection machine. Power was the first man to seriously apply himself to the perfection of "throwing pictures" upon the screen. He studied out the mechanical intricacies of the subject, and, having first foreseen the future of the film, devoted long hours and many months to experimenting with cranks, cogs, shutters and wheels.

Mr. Power knew that moving pictures would never succeed as an amusement unless they could be thrown clearly and steadily upon the screen; he sensed troubles with the eyes of millions unless the earlier projecting apparatus could be replaced with steady running, even "throwing," and flickerless machines.

Unlike most inventors, he was wise enough to keep the reward of his genius in his own control and instead of selling his patents for trivial sums he proceeded slowly and always within his means. New models were produced every few months, every machine he turned out was an improvement upon its predecessor, and finally he arrived at a point so closely approaching perfection that the Power's projectors are now established as the standard of all "picture throwing" apparatus.

The millions who find entertainment at the picture shows owe more to Nicholas Power than to any other one individual ever associated with the moving picture industry—for it was Mr. Power who devoted years of his life to taking the "flicker" out of the film and conserving the eyesight of his own generation and for generations to come. These are things the film promoters say little about—but the fact remains that there would not be so many admirable pictures and the photoplays would not be so immensely popular if they had not been set right "at the source" by Nicholas Power.

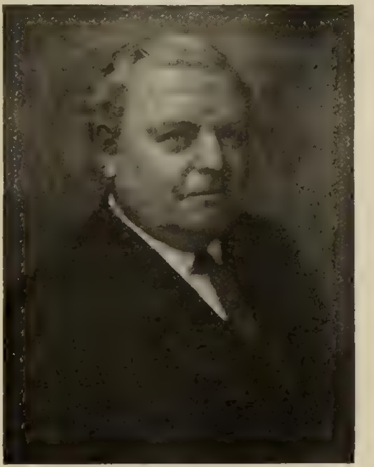
NOLA FILM TO PRODUCE FOR ASSOCIATED PROGRAM.

Capt. W. J. Hannon, president of the Nola Film Co., New Orleans, La., is in town and makes an announcement that he has just closed a contract with the Associated Film Sales Corporation whereby he is to make one five-reel feature every month, to be released exclusively on the Associated Program in addition to their regular service. The Nola Film Co. has a magnificent studio equipped with everything imaginable that would help make good pictures. They have at present three features made, the titles and stars of which will be announced soon.

MME. PETROVA IN NEW METRO PICTURE.

Mme. Petrova, the Metro star, who has been on tour in the successful play, "The Revolt," is taking advantage of her New York engagement by beginning work on another big Metro feature picture, "What Will People Say," at the Popular Plays and Players studio, in Fort Lee, N. J. This production will be mounted on an elaborate scale, and Mme. Petrova will be surrounded by an exceptionally strong cast including Fritz de Lint, Fraunie Fraunholz, Jean Thomas, John Dudley, William Morse, Geraldine Piers, Willis Enslee and other stage and screen artists. Miss Thomas is a member of Mme. Petrova's supporting cast in "The Revolt," and Miss Piers has an important role with Ethel Barrymore in the play, "Our Mrs. McChesney," at the Lyceum theater.

Pete Lang



Pete Lang.

PETE LANG, of the Lubin Company, lays claim justly to coming pretty close to being the Grandpop of Lubinville. As Pete explains it, "I just seem to have stuck along, growing to love and become one of the landmarks of the place, never creating a furore of excitement over my work and yet being more or less in demand every minute of the day—one minute hearing a call that I am cast as the boss of the opposition political party, then a candidate of another party, first a comedian then a tear provoker — sometimes a star and other times just a filler—one day a kid, the next a grandpop—in fact, anything and everything excepting that as yet I have done no female impersonating, chiefly because my chest has slipped down to where my waist line once was." But "Modest and Versatile Pete," as his colleagues of the Lubin studio call him, is loved by all of Lubinville and is praised by every man jack of the directors, and he has grown as an essential about "the yard"—the most used man of the staff. From 7:30 in the morning until the last man had crawled away in his Flivver, you'll find Pete on the job, on the bench by the gate, keeping 'em in the convulsions with a "parlor story" or two and then probably the next minute trotting in to play the part which it is sure-fire betting the critics are going to say "was played by Pete Lang as it should be played, and as only Pete Lang can play it."

Harry Vokes

BEFORE Harry Vokes, the comedian who is known to everyone from coast to coast, began his thirty-one years of playing with Ward in the comedy team of Ward and Vokes, which has of late years been disbanded, he was a clown in a circus. That gave him training in slapstick play, and fitted him for comedy work.

Harry Vokes.

Mr. Vokes is at present starring in two Casino Star Comedies at the Gaumont studios for release on the regular Mutual Program. One is "Beauty in Distress," written by Miss Dorothy Rogers, and "The House Party." In the former, Mr. Vokes is supported by Miss Rogers, the writer of the story, and in the latter by Miss Eleanor Fairbanks, who played last season in "A Pair of Sixes."

Mr. Vokes, with his comedy partner, Mr. Ward, began business with a capital of $650. This they put in the equipment for their first comedy sketch. It didn't take long to make that much, after they had once had a try at the stage. After that all they had to do was bank the money.

The comedy team is well remembered all over the country for their appearances in "A Run on the Bank," "The Governors," "The Head Waiters," "The Floor Walkers," "A Pair of Pinks," "The Promoters" and "Trouble Makers."

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

WELL, we have had our Triangle first night and liked it. The big Boston theater was crowded with an unusual sort of audience, including newsboys. Three of the films were excellent, especially "The Lamb" (as New Yorkers know already), and it served to introduce a local favorite, Douglas Fairbanks. David Griffith's master-hand was seen throughout, especially in the battle between the Indians and U. S. cavalry men. There was certainly punch with a capital "P" all through this and the others shown—"The Valet," introducing that clever young actress, Mabel Normand, in swimming stunts, and Raymond Hitchcock. I liked best "The Iron Strain," and the work of Charles K. French as the grandfather, who knew a real man at sight. Dustin Farnum always puts anything over and he is good to look at. As for "A Game Old Knight," it was nothing but horse play beside which "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" sinks in comparison, and that's saying much. It was the one disappointment, as slapstick has no place in a first-class theater, however the mixed audience present howled and applauded.

* * *

There seemed no change in the theater interior as announced except in the new screen and in the garb of the ushers, a soft, pretty grey. Miss Katherine Ward, the head usher, to whom I was indebted for admission, was in full evening dress and gracious to all. The stage still has a row of bright-hued flowers in pots and which are inartistic in coloring and needless. The orchestra itself is decorative enough, and this intervening strip jars. It was good policy to retain the Fadettes and the services of Francis Ferguson.

The Hub is "de-lighted" with the work of Mary Pickford as "Mme. Butterfly," but more especially with the work of the director in giving the public such wonderfully realistic scenes. Even to those of us who have visited Japan there seemed no flaw or a thing to criticize. Perhaps the big hit was made by the Japanese baby, who behaved so well and caused many exclamations. It is these details that elevate the films and set a high standard. My companion said, "To think of it, we get this wonderful picture for such a ridiculous sum!" I thought the moonlight scenes most artistic, and the perspectives, especially good showing a U. S. cruiser in the distance. We liked the ending, too, and the well-balanced company. On same bill at the Park was "Dora Thorne," with Lionel Barrymore and William Thomas Jefferson in the cast, sons of Maurice Barrymore and Joe Jefferson, and they certainly made good. Barrymore had a fine make-up as the irascible old father, and showed his art in illustrating the bad effects of ill temper in producing paralysis. The scenes were ornate, especially the interior of the mansion of Lord Earl. We felt, however, that the heroine was too much of the novice type. Isabel Rea was the favorite with the house. She also was most artistic as the young cripple in the Biograph film, "Her Renunciation," seen at the Boston theater Sunday night. A beardless youth just back of me said, "Gee, what a fetching dimple."

* * *

Say what you please, the Universals have some stunning leading men like Frank McGuarrie, with his clear-cut features—always the artist. He first attracted attention in "Fifty Years Behind the Times," and once seen is never forgotten. Sunday he showed his versatility in "The Unmasking," a remarkably strong play with its little lesson at the end brought about by that dear child. One of the finest scenes was that of the man, and the woman he wanted to wed, standing at the edge of a miniature pond on an estate, both figures reflected full length in the water. Great credit is due the men who staged that wonderful moonlight scene. Another gem furnished that evening was "The Clue of the Portrait," and again a child was a marked feature.

* * *

The Film Club had an interesting meeting Sunday evening last and closed its charter membership. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton and Rose Coghlan were made honorary members. The president, Marion H. Brazier, took the floor and paid high tribute to "The Battle Cry of Peace" and called upon the club secretary, Miss Mabel W. Brewerton, to read from her stenographic notes extracts from Mr. Blackton's address at the opening night at the Majestic theater and which no Boston paper quoted. Another feature of the meeting was a paper by Mrs. Cecilia Mahoney on Universal City and the Mission Film Co. (at Santa Barbara, Cal.), both of which she had visited. It was replete with inside information. This club has been admitted to the City Federation of Women's Clubs of Greater Boston and has for one of three delegates Mr. Samuel Grant, secretary of the Exhibitors' League and chairman for the coming ball, December 1. This federation has frequently criticised the motion pictures, which happily are more and more above criticism. The Film Club hopes to meet any future attempted censorship in that body, with convincing arguments. At Sunday's meeting there were remarks from Mr. Ernest Horstmann, president of the League, and one of the syndicate to purchase "The Battle Cry of Peace," which has made a tremendous hit here and is on for a run. Some local Germans have risen to condemn the film, but we fail to see what their grievance is, for the invading army is not labeled German. It will prove a good advertisement for the picture, anyhow.

* * *

Mr. Guston, former manager of the Boston theater, is to have sole charge of the Bijou, Boston's dainty playhouse owned by Keith. He tells me that they are to run Universal films only, and one may be sure of good music accompanying them. This is a fifteen-cent house and very popular. I have already told of the unique staircase leading to it.

* * *

Strikes me the Selig Company have put forth a daring film in "Sweet Alyssum," inasmuch as it tells plainly the immorality of the mother, where she has passed her nights, etc., showing the woman to be utterly devoid of soul, and we are glad when she gets out of the picture. Tyrone Powers, as expected, was excellent, and his conduct was entirely excusable in dealing with the guilty pair. Later on the story developed well, but somehow we could not quite get away from that unwholesome mother, and felt that one reel might have been censored.

* * *

It seems like "straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel" for a mayor of a small town to raise objection to profanity in "The Family Cupboard," which I have not yet seen filmed. As no words are spoken it is an easy matter to eliminate the sub-title. This mayor of a town near the Hub, would no doubt attend a performance of "Grumpy" and smile at the "cuss" words uttered by Cyril Maude every third sentence, and he might hear a few in any Shakespearean production. Why should it make a difference "whose ox is gored?"

* * *

We learn with pleasure that Francis Wilson's "Bachelor's Baby" is to be filmed, and it is good news to the Hub, as he could not produce the play here, because of our ridiculous blue law regarding children of the speaking stage. Mr. Wilson refused to play it with a 14-year-old kid, so we lost it, but many saw it in New York during its long run with our own Lillian Lawrence in the cast. Mr. Wilson ought to make a good subject with his mobile face and art.

* * *

I went up to the St. James theater to see "Evidence" last week, put on by the World Film, and found Richard Buhler in the cast, though not mentioned in the advance notices read. It was a "howling melodrama," as we used to call such plays, but well staged and consistent throughout, though it did seem like rubbing it in to have the heroine, a continuous victim of circumstantial evidence as Lady Una was. Lillian Tucker did a fine bit of work, and again a child figures delightfully. It was certainly some film, with action to burn.

* * *

"Pennington's Choice" made a big hit here, especially with men, owing to fisticuffs, doubtless. Bushman appears to great advantage in his evolution from the idler to the fighter, who then became worthy of his choice. It was good to see Beverly Bayne playing opposite, and she was some sight making her high dive and posing on the rocks semi-nude. It "got by" our City Hall censor much to our relief, for she was most artistic and natural.

* * *

I thoroughly enjoyed "The Closing Net," and this voices the sentiments of all about me. Howard Estabrook and Madeleine Travers did great work. It is one of the best of the "Gold Rooster" offerings seen in a long time.

* * *

Olga Petrova's name spells quality, and we were prepared to like "My Madonna," a most pretentious film. She was ably seconded by Guy Coombs, the young artist. There are some inconsistencies, but on the whole it was convincing, picturesque and the poses of Petrova at the opening and close of the films were far ahead of anything she has given us.

Executive Board Meeting Called

President Herrington Names Chicago as the Place to Hold It.

Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, submits the following letter to the exhibitors which is self-explanatory:

"To the Exhibitors:—I will call a meeting of the National Executive Board in Chicago some time during the last week in December. At this meeting it will be decided the place where the National convention will be held. At present it looks as though there will be some very hot rivalry between New York, Chicago, Detroit and Pittsburgh.

"As Chicago is centrally located I have decided to call a meeting of all the National vice-presidents and state officials to meet in conjunction with the National Executive Board at the Chicago meeting as I feel that it is only in this way that it will be possible to bring about the affiliation of the many state and local organizations into one compact National League.

"Now Mr. Vice-Presidents and State Officials, I appeal to you, through the pages of this paper, as business men, to use every effort to respond to this call when I open the above-mentioned meeting in Chicago, next month. Without your aid and that of every individual exhibitor I can hardly accomplish anything of any material benefit to you, and with your help we can organize or affiliate the State and Local organizations into one compact National League. Once organized into one solid body we can fight any question which might arise that will do harm to the motion picture industry, and we will not only fight them, but we will come near winnig every battle we fight.

"Yours very truly,
"FRED J. HERRINGTON,
"President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America."

NORTHEASTERN OHIO EXHIBITORS MEET.

The first metting of the new Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was held this week in the new headquarters on the fourth floor of the Republic Building. The executive committee of the body is considering a plan to have members book films through the organization. C. A. McGown, proprietor of the Cameraphone theater, originated the suggestion. He announced that he had been informed that a number of exchanges are willing to give the organization a rebate of $5 on all films booked through the organization.

McGown also declared that exhibitors in other sections of the state would be influenced by the judgment of Cleveland exhibitors in booking films that had been shown for their benefit, and that the exchanges would be saved considerable expense.

Members of the organization assert that the rapidly increasing cost of feature films is largely due to the fact that exhibitors outbid each other and do not stand together in combatting increased prices.

OPERATOR LOSES REEL OF FILM.

The Moving Picture World has been asked to aid in the recovery or tracing of a film the loss of which through theft has caused much distress to Edward J. Mace of Buffalo. Mr. Mace, who is the operator at the Jubilee theater, and a member of I. A. T. S. E. Local 29, writes that at the close of the day's work on October 2 he went to a large exchange to return film. A reel of film left on a packing case in the receiving room while Mr. Mace went upstairs was not to be found on his return. The subject was a Keystone Chaplin, "His Favorite Pastime," the property of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual. In the film was the identifying perforation, "No. 41, M. F. Co." Mr. Mace lives at 339 Watson street, Buffalo, and will be grateful for any information that help him to recover the film.

RELEASE DATE OF "CAMILLE."

"Camille," the master work of Albert Capellani, and the greatest role of Clara Kimball Young, is expected to be released on December 20. Extra care and extra time are being devoted to the finishing of the picture in order that the fullest possible justice can be done to all concerned, and that Miss Young can be presented to her legions of admirers with every completeness and adequateness. The cast is the strongest ever seen in a World Film feature. The fact that the part of Armand is in the hands of Paul Capellani lends this feature remarkable interest. The exhibitors throughout the United States have been more interested in this picture than in any other previous World Film release.

James Bradburry With Selig

James Bradburry.

JAMES BRADBURRY, the famous comedian, who has joined the Selig Polyscope Company, has a stage experience extending over thirty-four years. During his first three years in the spoken drama, he was employed at the Boston Museum in stock and was surrounded by the best players of the time and was given an opportunity to play with such stars as Edwin Booth, Dion Boucicault, William Warren, John Gilbert, Lester Wallack, the elder Salvini, and others. Later, Mr. Bradburry joined Edwin Arden in "The Eagle's Nest," removing to New York City. After several years with Arden, Mr. Bradburry went with Louis Carnot in a repertoire company, playing anything he was cast for and so establishing his line of comedy characters.

Following that engagement, Mr. Bradburry appeared with many companies and played many parts. Here is a list of plays in which Mr. Bradburry figured to a great extent: E. E. Rice's productions; with Nellie McHenry in "A Night at the Circus," "Ranch 10," "Gay Coney Island," "The Village Postmaster," "Naughty Anthony," "Captain Barrington," "Hearts Aflame," with Anna Held, "Fifty Miles from Boston," "Aero Club," "Is Matrimony a Failure?" "The Girl at the Helm," "The County Chairman," "After Five," "Along Came Ruth," "Inside the Lines," "Mollie and I" and others.

Mr. Bradburry is known as one of the cleverest character comedians in theatrical history and through his acquisition the Selig Company has engaged an artist with a new style of comedy which is sure to delight the photoplay public. Mr. Bradburry will appear in a number of forthcoming Selig Red Seal plays. He scored a hit as the manager of the Burlesque Co. in "A Black Sheep," which was his first appearance in the pictures.

MACKENZIE MAKING NEW PATHE PICTURE.

Donald Mackenzie, the Pathe producer, will soon start work upon "The Precious Packet," adapted from the novel of the same name by Fred Jackson. Lois Meredith, one of the most beautiful of the younger women upon the stage, and Ralph Kellard, have already been signed for the picture. Mr. Mackenzie will have to take his entire company to a Maine lumber camp to spend several weeks there, since many of the scenes are laid amid such surroundings. In the meantime he is anxiously awaiting from correspondents in Maine reports of heavy snowfalls.

SEVENTY-SEVENTH STREET THEATER SOLVENT.

Judge Charles M. Hough of the United States District Court has dismissed the involuntary petition in bankruptcy filed against the Seventy-seventh Street Theater, a corporation conducting a moving picture show. The petition was filed November 10, but inasmuch as the corporation has paid all its unsecured creditors in full, the court decided the petition should be cast out of court. Archibald Palmer, the receiver, was discharged and ordered to turn over the property to the theater corporation.

VIM PLAYERS HAPPY AT JACKSONVILLE.

Louis Burstein, director-general of the Vim Comedies, paid a business visit to New York last week. He declared that the Vim players are now comfortably situated in Jacksonville and hard at work turning out a comedy a week.

"It is only natural," says Burstein, "that I should be enthusiastic over Vim prospects, but never in my experience in the film business have I come across a more willing or competent aggregation than those composing the Vim players. We have got off to a fine start and I am more than satisfied that we can keep up the pace."

Eastern Pennsylvania Exhibitors.

Meet at Tamaqua, and Organize a League—Another Meeting December 5.

FORTY-NINE moving picture exhibitors, representing a total investment of over $3,000,000, recently met in the clubhouse of the Elks at Tamaqua, Pa., and organized the Exhibitors' League of Eastern Pennsylvania. Matters of vital importance to those interested in the moving picture industry were thoroughly discussed and many valuable suggestions were proffered to those in attendance tending to illustrate the plans of the successful exhibitor. Mart J. Franey of Shenandoah, was chosen to act as temporary president, and O. J. Miller, the well known exhibitor of St. Clair, was elected temporary secretary.

The main object of the organization is to promote a better feeling among the exhibitors and to bring them in constant touch with each other for their mutual betterment. It had long been felt that there was need for such an organization in that section of he State, and many suggestions were offered, but they always lacked initiative and as a consequence, failed to materialize. This time, however, the exhibitors are in earnest and it is their intention to lay the foundation for an association that will continue indefinitely and which will prove of enormous value to exhibitors for many miles around.

A meeting will be held on Monday, December 5, when it is proposed to effect a permanent organization. Agents have been working for some time past endeavoring to interest exhibitors in the project and their reports have been of a most satisfactory nature. According to returns there is every indication that several hundred exhibitors will join the infant organization, embracing practically all of the Eastern section of Pennsylvania, east of Williamsport. May the new league be entirely successful.

NEW HORSLEY DIRECTORS FINISH FIRST WORK.

David Horsley's recent additions to his directorial staff, Ulysses Davis and William J. Bowman, engaged to produce Centaur feature animal pictures in which the Bostock animals appear, have each finished their first Centaur picture.

Mr. Davis' production is entitled "The Arab's Vengeance" and is scheduled for release on the Mutual program December 16. The production is in two reels.

The initial effort of Mr. Bowman for Mr. Horsley is also in two reels and is called "The Terror of the Fold." The story is of the American west.

BRITISH NOTES

FOR three months past or more the representative associations of exhibitors, renters and manufacturers, have been repeatedly endeavoring to bring into being an equitable arrangement for the better control and preservation of open market films. After many amendments a definite plan of action has been formulated in the form of two special and binding agreements, the first between manufacturer and renter, and the second between renter and exhibitor. Although originally intended for Nov. 1 the date of its operation will not be until Nov. 15th. The agreement between manufacturer and renter provides for the sale (or should it be hire?) of practically all open-market pictures at a fixed price per foot, which the renter agrees to rent out in accordance with a fixed table of prices. These begin with the price per thousand feet on release day and for the succeeding twelve weeks and generally show a substantial advance upon charges for similar programs made to-day.

* * *

This is partially accounted for by the recent tax which it does seem unfair to be entirely borne by the manufacturer. Another clause limits the life of each film to nine months. Between renter and exhibitor the terms are different. In a manifesto issued to its members the Exhibitors' Association recommends that the new scheme be dropped for three months as a trial. It is only to be expected that the exhibitor will pay a higher price for his open-market program and the cost is calculated upon the manufacturer's price plus a profit of 10 per cent. for the renter. It is argued that this will be an inducement for both manufacturer and renter to maintain the hitherto unprofitable open-market programs. An odd circumstance in this circular is the tone in which the American manufacturer is painted as the menacing monopolist. "With the open market goes the open market renter, the final obstacle in the way of a combination of manufacturers who supply a large percentage of all films shown in this country and who by renting direct would save the middleman's profit and have the exhibitor at his mercy," it says. "What chance will the British manufacturer have under such conditions?" . . . The new arrangement "will improve the quantity and quality of open market subjects and will protect the exhibitor from an American monopoly involving methods which are repugnant to the commercial instincts and genius of our country."

* * *

Considering the melting attitude of a large number of members of the Exhibitors' Association towards the policy of the Essanay Co., the above exhortation is apt to lose some of its original flavor. Under the auspices of the Exhibitors' Association exhibitors from Lands End to John o' Groats, have publicly avowed their intention to boycott the firm in question but the number of exhibitors, especially in the provinces, who have gone straight from these meetings and booked the latest "Chaplin" comedy must be disconcerting testimony to the unity of the body as a trade association.

Lewis Waller, the Beau Brummel of the footlights, died from heart failure last week and shortly after the first show of his appearance as Brigadier Gerard in the play of that name, which was filmed during the summer by the Barker Company.

The American produced films, "Three Weeks" and "Five Nights," continue to occupy the attention of the law courts. As previously reported in the World, Mrs. Elinor Glynn, novelist, is seeking to restrain the Weston Feature Film Co. of this country from circulating a burlesque of her famous novel entitled "Pimples Three Weeks," without the option. The defence was that copyright could not prevent the caricature of a serious work and counsel cited "Punch," which caricatured Royal Academy pictures. Judge Younger stated that anyone induced by the title to see the performance of "Pimples Three Weeks" was entitled to get his money back, and in adjourning the hearing remarked: "The burlesque only exists owing to its inane vulgarity. I do not think Mrs. Glynn would admit that any person who read her book would derive pleasure from the burlesque.

* * *

In the case of "Five Nights," the National Film Agency of Manchester are, as already recounted in a previous letter, seeking to nullify the censorial powers of the St. Helen's magistrates in banning the local production of the version. This film paid £3,000 for Lancashire, Cheshire and Derbyshire rights of the film, and although it was banned at other places it passed the British Board of Film Censors. Judge Avory in upholding the magistrate's decision pointed out that it was a condition of the licensing of picture theaters in St. Helen's that no film should be exhibited which the magistrates objected to, and that Mr. Redford held no statutory authority in these matters, despite the fact that he said he found nothing of a prohibitive or indecent nature in the film.

* * *

A similar application from Liverpool was also disposed of. The latest prohibition by magisterial decree of this film is at Bradford, while Manchester exhibitors (where the film has been extensively shown) have received a broad hint from the authorities that to exhibit the film will be to court trouble.

* * *

The first production of the British Actors Film Co., which has adopted the late Sir Hubert von Herkomer's studio and plant in Hertfordshire will be entitled "The Lifeguardsman," after Walter Howard's melodrama. The work of this newly constituted company, although yet only within the realm of conjecture, shows definite promise, thanks to the ingenuity of a skilful promoter who has been successful in enrolling a number of theatrical celebrities as shareholders.

Two official cameramen rated as lieutenants have now left London for the front as nominees of the British Manufacturers' Association in conjunction with the army scheme to obtain authoritative records of the military operations. The films so obtained will be available (after war office censorship) for exhibiton through certain selected agencies.

London Trade Topics.

The announcement has been made by Mr. Scott of the new "Clipper" and "Mustang" brands. The American Company of London, Ltd., will handle these along with the usual issues from Santa Barbara on "open market" lines as heretofore.

Another Pinero play is being preserved for posterity at Walton-on-Thames by the Hepworth Company. The title is "Iris," with Henry Ainley and Alma Taylor in the lead.

The latest available abstract from the Board of Trade shows the following imports of motion picture films from abroad between January 1 and August 31 of the present year: Belgium, £266; British East Africa, £350; British West Indies, £405; Canada, £595; Cape Colony, £40; Denmark, £140; France, £36,167; Holland, £394; India, £7; Italy, £20,568; Japan, £62; Russia, £10; Spain, £32; Switzerland, £917; United States, £784,156; total from all countries, £844,109; total from all countries except the U. S. A., £59,953, showing nearly 95 per cent. of total film imports to Britain are exported from the U. S. A.

* * *

What is D. W. G. going to do with Sir H. B. Tree? is a question much in evidence in London today. The famous actor-manager's forthcoming tour to the States is known to be not exclusively for the benefit of the legitimate stage, and there may be more than at first meets the eye in the report that it is an educative preliminary to a film producing venture of his own. In America, however, he is certain to be figured in some of his remarkable impersonations of the characters in Shakespeare, most probably "Henry VIII." The materialization of his visit to the studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the anticipated collaboration with Griffith will be something worth waiting for.

The Bosworth film, "Hypocrites," which caused quite a flutter in the censorship dovecotes in your country, received the stamp of approval of G. A. Redford, last Monday. International Exclusives, Ltd., have the British rights and they were effectively prevailed upon to clothe the offending figure.

H. Rowson, of the Ideal Flm Renting Company, of London, is home again from the States after negotiating the disposal in America of "My Old Dutch" to the Universal Company.

Film critics in London, both in the trade and out, are just now making capital of the ubiquity of the six-shooter in the average imported society or domestic drama from American studios. The accusing finger is in particular pointed at one firm which, singularly enough, does not specialize in Western pictures, but which gives special attention in its last twenty-four consecutive releases to the machinations of its sophisticated gunmen.

* * *

When last Saturday's mail arrived with the preceding week's issue of the World, the one topic for rumination in the small but powerful American colony in the precincts of Gerrard and Wardour streets was the final squashing by Judge Dickinson of the Motion Picture Patents Company and associated concerns. The law against trusts in this country is not so definite and with the exception of regulations introduced into certain sections of the brewing industry is almost without precedent. Still the ruling of the District Court of Eastern Pennsylvania does not fail to reflect an effective moral to people much further afield than its own area of jurisdiction.

* * *

An unfortunate and obviously unanticipated side issue to the recently levied film tax has come under notice this week. A few producing companies here (Hepworth, Gaumont and others) have been generously sending a weekly program of films for the use of the portable moving picture theaters in the firing line in France for the entertainment of the Allied troops. The Gaumont Company have been officially notified that upon their return there films will be charged the customary import duty.

* * *

The Trans-Atlantic Company are launching features at high pressure. "The Broken Coin," "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," and "That Lass o' Lowries," are the extra specials announced to-day (Oct. 23d).

* * *

The visualization of Wallace's opera "Maritana" was unspooled the other day under the auspices of the Kalem Company. Exhibitors who do not attend the trade shows have been found to be prejudiced against booking film of this type, owing to a fallacious conception that these productions demand a special or heavily augmented orchestra, as in the stage version. The Kalem subject under notice is a convincing argument to the contrary.

Paul Kimberley's little experiment to test the pulse of the exhibitor in regard to "open-market" releases has delighted the European manager of Thanhouser interests. Excepting the bigger exclusives and serials it is safe to say the London agency of the New Rochelle house will let the question of renting direct seriously alone for some time to come.

* * *

Mr. Kimberley, by the way, has been appointed chairman of a sub-committee of the Cinema Ambulance Fund to deal with contributions, proposals and offers from America.

Accompanying this letter to New York per S. S. Lapland are Mr. Wood, the London manager of Gaumonts, and Mr. John D. Tippett, managing director of Universal interests here. Both are on short business tours to the U. S. A.

The world rights of the kinema version of Temple Thurston's novel, "Traffic," have been acquired by G. Sena of Denman & Co., London.

The Hepworth Co. to-day (Nov. 9th) exhibited "The White Hope," from Trowbridge's novel of the name, and "Far from the Madding Crowd," after Thomas Hardy. The latter features Flo Turner and was produced by Larry Trimble.

* * *

The deathless story of Nurse Cavell has been selected as a theme for the screen by the Phoenix Film Co., the profits upon the work being promised to a movement to erect a memorial to her honor.

* * *

The publicity department of the Hepworth Company is nothing if not original. This week they have mailed out to the newspaper offices a brochure with the title, "Picture Plays, a Manual for Journalists," the fundamental purpose of which is to guide the newest "cub" reporter or his deputy, the office boy, into describing moving picture matters with greater technical accuracy.

* * *

In generous concession to the preferment of popular taste Sir A. W. Pinero has altered the last act of his play, "Iris," which has just been done by the Hepworth Company, and the curtain falls in the screen version upon a happy termination. Sir Arthur considers such revisions warrantable in view of the different appeals to the public made by the stage and screen. J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

Nance O'Neil in Lubin Play

THE management of the Lubin Company announces that the first of the series of photoplays in which the eminent American emotional actress Nance O'Neil is to appear under the Lubin banner will be an original five act photoplay, "Souls in Bondage," which is from the pen of Daniel Carson Goodman, the author of "Hagar Revelly" and other literary masterpieces, and who is now writing exclusively for the Lubin Company.

Nance O'Neil.

"Souls in Bondage" has been written especially for Miss O'Neil by Mr. Goodman and has been pronounced by her after her reading of the synopsis and script as the most tensely dramatic subject she has ever attempted, and one from which she is wildly enthusiastic there shall be made a dramatic version that she may use it for a vehicle on the speaking stage.

Director Edgar Lewis, who has completed the taking of "The Great Divide," will immediately begin the production of "Souls in Bondage" at the Lubin Philadelphia studios. The cast of the production will be announced later.

"Souls in Bondage" will be released during January or February through the V-L-S-E, Inc., offices.

"BROKEN COIN" COMPANY.

The accompanying picture of Francis Ford, Grace Cunard and the other members of the "Broken Coin" serial company was taken two minutes after the completion of the last scene in the production of that forty-four-reel picture.

The Broken Coin Company.

All were happy to know that the serial was at an end after their six months' work.

At present both Ford and Miss Cunard are away from the studio at Universal City, enjoying a much-needed rest after their labors. Ford has returned to his home in Portland, Maine, and Miss Cunard is visiting her mother in Ohio. While she is resting, Miss Cunard will write scenarios for the company to produce upon the resumption of its work at Universal City.

Service Must Precede National Advertising

Not Until Exhibitors Are on Tiptoes to Buy a Certain Brand May a Manufacturer Successfully Advertise Widely, Says Mr. Masters.

By E. L. Masters, Advertising and Publicity Director, V-L-S-E.

THE New York Herald recently gave liberal space to a story founded on the "novel" idea behind the organization of a new motion picture distributing company. This company, according to the Herald story, is approaching the marketing of the silent drama not as a form of entertainment, but as a staple commodity, to which the same laws of merchandising and advertising apply as do to the distribution of shoes, soup or any other commercial product.

A few weeks later one of the advertising journals printed an interview with the representative of another film concern, the interest-creative qualities of which rested upon the fact that the company in question had organized a service department to help the exhibitor resell its film to the public. These and similar articles purporting to reflect recent and advanced development in this fourth largest industry in the country might prove amusing to those of us who are interested in the correct exploration of moving pictures, were it not for the fact that they reflect such a complete lack of knowledge of the efficiency and the scope of the sales promotion methods of the more advanced companies in the trade.

Particularly does this apply to the representative of the advertising agency or advertising medium, who is greatly concerned lest the moving picture industry will fail to take advantage of the power of printer's ink and who regards it as his solemn duty to educate those at the industry's helm along the right advertising and merchandising lines. Now it is unquestionably true that every industry reaches its greatest development through national advertising, and that the sooner a manufacturer starts such advertising the greater returns every dollar invested in printer's ink will bring.

The only trouble with the outside advertising man is that he sometimes doesn't give the motion picture interests credit for appreciating this fact and that he often rushes in without having first properly informed himself of what is being done and what needs to be done to insure the success of a national campaign. Exhibitors, too, sometimes feel that in urging them to advertise locally, the big distributing companies who have not yet launched a campaign themselves are, in the parlance of the day, "passing the buck." Both the advertising man and the exhibitor are running the risk of mistaking preparedness for procrastination.

In one respect, at least, the moving picture business is not any different from any other business. The only assurance of success in launching a motion picture advertising campaign is to have the ground work of the campaign properly laid. Here, as elsewhere, a national advertising effort must be preceded by intelligent preliminary work.

The advertising coast is strewn with wrecks of campaigns, whose captains failed to follow this course, and not the least conspicuous among these wrecks are those of one or two motion picture campaigns, which cost from $100,000 to $200,000, and which fell far short of the mark.

Why were they not a success? Because there was not first erected the solid foundation of service upon which to build the advertising structure.

In short, moving picture advertising must do more than merely popularize the name of the advertiser. It must create a desire to see the pictures advertised. It must direct the public where it can see those pictures. And it must be predicated upon the knowledge of the exhibitor how to market film features to the best advantage. National advertising in the interests of moving pictures has yet to have the four essential factors of success:

> A product of high average values.
>
> Permanent customers—partners of the manufacturer, who distribute his goods.
>
> A scientifically trained sales force that knows how to co-operate with those customers and help them capitalize upon the manufacturer's advertising investment.
>
> Continuity—cumulative effect.

We would consider the Ingersoll Watch Company a pretty poor business organization to spend $250,000 a year to create a demand for its wares, and then not be able to tell the public when and where it could get those wares today, tomorrow and every day in the year, or whether the designs and prices would be the same when the public desired to buy as they were when the advertisment was published. And yet that is exactly the situation with all the advertising thus far done by the film companies.

It is the sheer shouting of the name. It does not direct the reader where they can see the products of that name, because the advertiser himself does not know whether John Jones is going to handle that product this week, or Sam Smith—or nobody. All such advertising can do is to urge the public to ask exhibitors to show certain features, and to try to arouse enough interest to induce the readers to hunt out a theater at which those features are shown.

This is the line of the greatest resistance, for motion picture advertising, as well as other advertising, to be effective must make it easy for the reader to do what the advertiser wants him to do. It must do more than this:

> It must send the reader back to the same theater, just as other advertising must send him back to a given store.
>
> It must produce repeat business.
>
> It must be backed by a distributive system that will gain it the full value of a satisfied customer's word-to-mouth advertising.

How is this possible when our aforementioned friend John Jones shows one company's films today, another company's the next day and another the following day? For John Jones to get the utmost possible returns from the national advertising of a producer, and for the producer to get the greatest results from John Jones and the public, he must show the same producer's films today, tomorrow and every other day in the year—back up the producer's national advertising with his local advertising—tie up the producer's name, trade mark and prestige, with his name and his prestige.

But, you say, that means the issuance of a regular program on a contract. That would be the easy way of doing it. It need not necessarily be the best. There is such a thing as so winning a man's loyalty through service, that you bind him to you with rivets of such self-interest that you couldn't break them asunder if you would. That's the kind of contract that is more valuable than all the written documents that were ever penned.

When a company has done this—when it no longer has to "sell" the exhibitor, but he is on his tiptoes to "buy"—then, and then only, can a motion picture distributor successfully advertise nationally. When this structural work is finished, then for the first time will a national advertising campaign in the interest of moving pictures prove successful to the degree that the greatest commercial campaigns have been successful. Then will the motion picture industry have been made an advertising industry.

Service first—advertising second—that is the keynote of every successful national institution before the public eye. And it must be the keynote of the pre-eminent success of the motion picture advertiser. That it will be is evidenced by the fact that several of these companies are sacrificing the tremendous profits which would accrue from a flash-in-the-pan advertising campaign for the permanent, staple returns which are bound to result from a properly planned campaign.

E. M. MOUSER LEAVES INDIANAPOLIS.

E. M. Mouser, president of the Indianapolis Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, tendered his resignation at a meeting of the association, held Thursday, November 11. Mr. Mouser recently sold the Apollo theater, Indianapolis, and will move West. He has been a capable and tireless worker and credit is due him, say local exhibitors who know, for the standing the exhibitors have with the Indianapolis public.

J. M. Rhodes, president of the State league, presented Mr. Mouser a beautiful Masonic charm on behalf of the Indianapolis association. J. Huber, vice-president, will fill out Mr. Mouser's term, which expires January 1. R. R. Dair was elected vice-president to succeed Mr. Huber.

ANNA HELD'S FIRST FILM.

"When they talk about Anna Held getting ready for her screen debut," said Ashley Miller, "they show that they are less than four years old in the film industry. I had the honor a little more than three years ago of directing Miss Held's first motion picture. I had been a member of her supporting company in 'The Parisian Model' at the Broadway theater and so we were well acquainted when I came to initiate her into the mysteries of the silent drama. I am sure she will make a success of the feature film work which she is booked to do, and I envy the director who will have charge of the production, as she is the most considerate of stars and perfectly suited to the screen work."

Statistics and the Motion Picture

An Unusual Interview with Roger Ward Babson Who Has Just Affiliated Himself with the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

By Tarleton Winchester.

ROGER W. BABSON, the noted statistician, has allied himself with the Paramount Pictures Corporation in the capacity of associate editor of the Paramount Newspictures, and his works are now being filmed for presentation at Paramount theaters.

It may seem at first glance that statistics do not provide a very fertile field for the cameraman, but this, it developed in a talk with Mr. Babson, is not the case. "Probably there is nothing so uninteresting to the average man as dry statistics," Mr. Babson said. "He cannot get very excited when he reads on the printed page that five hundred and sixty-six million cans of beans are sold in the United States and Canada, or that in New Jersey there are 50.4 per cent. more mosquitoes to the square mile than in any other state in the Union; but by the free use of illustrations I have been able to circulate my books quite largely, and I am informed by Public Libraries that they are in considerable demand.

"Let us take the European war as an example. There are a few in this country who are not deeply interested in the question and there are a few who, after thinking about the matter, will deny that statistics are absolutely necessary in a study of the conditions which have brought on the conflict. The problem is to present them in a way that will attract and hold the attention and interest of the great public. We think that motion pictures will solve this problem. Let us look at the facts in the case. First we will take the population per square mile of the larger countries at war. We will see that Austria has 196 people for each square mile of its area, more than three times the population of any other country; Germany comes next with 62; the United Kingdom of England with 36; Russia with 19, and France with 17. When it is considered that the United States has 26 people to each square mile of its area, the crowded condition of Austria and Germany will be brought home. By means of a motion picture chart the fact that Austria and Germany must spread out can easily be planted in the minds of the motion picture public.

"This all can be shown by means of animated charts, cartoons and trick photography in a way that the average man will remember. The causes that have brought on the war as well as its progress and its inevitable results can be carried to a larger number of people in a week than would read of them in years in books and magazines.

"For instance, the question is often asked, What should be the attitude of an American? The answer is usually that he should be neutral. Of course, being neutral is a difficult thing, but it is well to remember that personal feelings in international affairs have caused much trouble. Let us see why it is not only theoretically but practically proper for the American to be neutral. Statistics will show this and moving pictures will bring the lesson home very forcefully. An overwhelming victory for either one side or the other might mean that the next war will be between the victor and the United States, whereas a draw will probably mean an international law court which will be so formed that fairness will have to be exercised and justice administered. The latter is what we want.

"The high cost of living is a sore problem. The prices of almost all commodities have, it is true, increased, but statistics will show that some communities are successfully coping with the situation, and the first of my films to be released through the Paramount Pictures Corporation shows this.

"Questions of such a vital interest as those which I have outlined can be asked and answered by means of our animated magazine which embraces other features of interest to the great public.

"I first became deeply interested in the motion picture when on a visit to South America I encountered at several points the cameramen of the Paramount expedition, and it was then that I conceived the idea of adapting statistics to the screen. Investigations proved to me the advisability of allowing Paramount to handle these pictures and when Paramount Newspictures were issued a place was found in them for me.

"To my mind, W. W. Hodkinson's reasoning is so fundamentally sound along all lines that I can see nothing but the greatest success for those who have profited by his experiences and in many instances allied themselves with him."

Roger Ward Babson was born at Gloucester, Massachusetts, July 6, 1875. His father was Nathaniel Babson and his mother Ellen Sterns. He received his A. B. from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1898 and on March 29, 1900, he was married to Grace Margaret Knight of St. Paul, Minn. He is president of the Babson Statistical Organization with branch offices in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and London. He is lecturer on statistics at his old college, special writer for the Curtis publications, Saturday Evening Post, New York Times and other periodicals, and is a member of the American Economics Association. Some of his most famous and widely read books are "Business Barometer," "The Future of the Working Classes," "Elements of Successful Investing," "Prosperity, How It Must Come," "The Future of the Railroad" and "The Future of Us Boys."

These titles will suggest of what great interest his writings should be, presented on the motion picture screen.

Mary Maurice

WITH a world-wide reputation as an actress, Mary Birch Maurice, Vitagraph player, and one of the best loved film stars, also enjoys the distinction of being known as "the mother of the movies." She was born on November 15, 1844, in Morristown, Ohio, when that little town was celebrated as a stopping place for the stagecoaches that traveled the National Pike, the highway that made Henry Clay famous. Mrs. Maurice began her education in the public schools of Philadelphia, graduating from the Normal College, and she adopted teaching as the work best suited to her inclination.

Mary Maurice.

Nearly fifty years ago, Mary Maurice joined the Pittsburgh (Penna.) Stock Company and made her first professional appearance in the farce, "My Neighbor's Wife."

During the latter part of the summer of 1910, the Vitagraph Company especially engaged Mrs. Maurice to appear in an important picture production entitled "The Legacy," in which Charles Eldridge was to play opposite. Her varied experience as an actress and her strikingly featural characteristics that reproduced effectively on the film, induced the Vitagraph Company to engage her as a regular stock member. Her second picture was entitled "His Mother," and it was due principally to the lovable character she portrayed and her wonderful interpretation that earned for her the title "the mother of the movies." Since becoming a regular member of the famous Vitagraph Stock Company, Mrs. Maurice has been identified with mother parts almost exclusively and has appeared in a host of picture dramas including "A Modern Prodigal," "The Seventh Son," in which Ralph W. Ince portrayed Abraham Lincoln, "Mother's Roses," "The Portrait," "The Return of Maurice Donnelly," "My Old Dutch," "The Battle Cry of Peace," etc.

LAWRENCE MARSTON JOINS MIRROR.

Lawrence Marston, producer of more than one successful feature picture, the man who staged "Ben Hur," "The Prince of India" and other well-known dramatic spectacles, and one-time director of that sterling screen star, Henry Walthal, has been engaged by the Mirror Films, Inc., to start the production of certain features for that organization the first of the year.

Mr. Marston is one of the best known of the more experienced directors of pictures and has been identified with the making of some of the best things which have been turned out by the Biograph, Selig, Thanhouser and Universal companies. For those companies he has done such well-known favorites as "The Star of Bethlehem," "The Road to Yesterday," "Under the Gaslight," "Dora Thorn," "The Primrose Path," "The Millionaire Baby" and others.

An Eloquent Record

The National Board, Approaching Its Seventh Anniversary, Looks Back Upon a Career of Splendid Service—Constructive and Conservative in Its Policies—The Fallacies of Special Censorship for Children—The Spirit of Devotion in Men Behind the Work.

THE politicians who are eager to prey on the motion picture, and especially those who are now supporting themselves by so-called official censorship, detest the National Board and have ever made it the special target for their bricks. The reason is not far to seek. The activities of the National Board are cutting the ground from under legalized censorship by their splendid appeal to and organization of sound public sentiment. Legalized censorship feeds on ignorance and on greed and on prejudice. Quietly, persistently, fairly and effectively the National Board has fought ignorance and prejudice.

The Board has no court to enforce its decrees except the court of Public Opinion; it can issue no process and no mandate except the demand of crystallized public sentiment.

There is a sincerity about the work and personnel of the Board which is simply compelling. The fogs of fanaticism, the dense black clouds of stupidity, the insidious mists of bigotry vanish before the calm and penetrating light which proceeds from the Board. It is quite impossible to compile a complete record of all its achievements. The workings of strong intellectual and spiritual forces cannot be traced or measured, but the results bear witness.

The Vast Scope of the Work.

The National Board of Censorship has been pursuing its work of presenting its philosophy and point of view to a vast number of organizations of influence for six and one-half years. No part of the country has remained untouched. The part it played in the discussion about a motion picture ordinance for New York was widely discussed and commented upon. It has given advice and assistance to many cities interested in the physical surroundings of the motion picture theater. This has resulted in clean, wholesome and artistic play houses.

In a country of 100,000,000 people, there is necessarily a vast number of organizations interested in some of the multitudinous influences of the motion picture. To most of these have been presented the point of view, personnel, methods of work and results of the National Board. Their leaders have formed definite ideas and have expressed their opinions in sympathetic and effective ways. Among the long list are Chambers of Commerce, local and general federations of women's clubs, civic organizations, city commissions, readers of magazines like the Survey, Harper's Weekly, Review of Reviews, church and technical periodicals, the Y. M. C. A.'s and the Y. W. C. A.'s, the League for Political Education, social workers in neighborhood and settlement organizations, parent teacher associations, libraries, the extension departments of state universities, the Federal Council of Churches, national and local organizations in the various denominations, Federations for Child Study, Drama Leagues and educational groups. These are all composed of intelligent people of influence who effect wide-spread public opinion.

Approaching Its Seventh Anniversary.

While the National Board has continued its work steadily, silently and skillfully, it has gathered to itself remarkable influence because of its efficiency. The very fact that it has gone on its way without proclaiming its achievements from the house-tops has caused it to be recognized as a sane, fair and forceful organization. It feels it is somewhat responsible for the small hold of censorship upon the imaginations of the conservative elements in America. It has been able to accomplish this by gathering to itself many of the leaders of thought in New York. These intelligent people, who are interested primarily in sane solutions of social problems, have steadily given their assistance to the National Board until there are at present 165 members of the committees engaged in the criticism of pictures and 33 members of the governing body, the General Committee.

It is somewhat remarkable that the policy of the National Board in the regulation of pictures has persisted and has developed during the six and one-half years. This speaks well for the conservatism and common-sense as well as the disinterestedness of the organization and for the vision of the manufacturers of motion pictures.

Helping Society and Elevating the Picture.

The organization is unique in American life. It has demonstrated, as no other movement in the history of the country, that the assistance of the public can be given to a great business to the mutual benefit, both of society and of the business. This may be explained in part by the fact that the National Board has never believed in censorship as it is ordinarily recognized. It rather believes in the fullest freedom for the expression of ideas by means of the screen. It represents the public and also the producers as a freindly critic or editor of the ethical ideas and situations appearing in pictures. In a conservative manner, it discovers the point of view of society on fundamental morals and expresses these decisions to the motion picture industry.

The effectiveness of the National Board has been recognized by authorities in many cities. The Board now has some 700 active correspondents and is sending its weekly reports and bulletins to some 400 co-operating groups in different localities. Such cities as Boston, Providence, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Chattanooga, Memphis, Duluth, Spokane, Denver and San Francisco are among those which are satisfied of the completeness of the work performed by this organization. The mayors, commissioners, bureaus, boards of public welfare, etc., have carefully examined into the workings of the National Board and have expressed themselvs officially as satisfied with their findings.

Based on Intelligent Co-operation.

While irritation must inevitably be aroused in some cases, the film companies themselves bear witness to the disinterestedness and skill of the National Board in the criticism of pictures. A part of the influence of this body is due directly to the complete way in which the film manufacturers have accepted the Board's decisions. It has also been furthered by a recognition on the part of the motion picture managers and exhibitors of its skilled and broad-minded decisions.

The most satisfactory phase of the work of the National Board is that of constructive criticism. While it has found it necessary to repress some films, it has constantly referred these to the manufacturers with suggestions of changes which would bring them up to the standard and allow them to be circulated. Behind the individual film, the work has extended to the writer of the scenario, the actors and actresses and the directors of studios. To these important groups, the National Board has addressed itself and has thus been able to check the use of themes contrary to public morals, and, incidentally, to save unnecessary expenditure. In no case does the Board express itself from theory. It satisfies itself of the correctness of its opinions and speaks from sympathy and intimate knowledge.

No Special Censorship for Children Is Feasible.

Most of the discussion about censorship has as an underlying idea the protection of young people. The National Board knows that the audiences generally throughout the United States are composed of not more than fifteen or sixteen per cent. of young people under 16. It, therefore, judges motion pictures very largely from the standpoint of the 85 per cent. It has, however, been conducting a campaign for laying the responsibility for the entertainment of young people more fully upon the shoulders of parents, where it belongs. It is fundamentally absurd to expect that city authorities shall become the nurse-maid and mother of the boys and girls. This idea is coupled with another which is growing rapidly throughout the country, namely, that of furnishing children's film programs and the photoplay houses. The National Board has recognized the possibility of developing this plan and has carried on an active correspondence and propaganda throughout the country. Cities as widely scattered as Providence, Louisville, Minneapolis and St. Louis have adopted it. Witness the 1,200 enthusiastic children in Providence, Rhode Island, and the 1,500 in one theater in Grand Rapids, Michigan. No other organization beside the National Board is able to handle this movement. There is none, moreover, which will break down more rapidly the necessity for censorship than just this simple and practical method of selecting films satisfactory to young people and parents on selected days in the theaters. When once the National Board develops the possibilities of this idea and children are cared for, the argument for censorship will approach the vanishing point.

Not the lease remarkable fact is the economy practiced by the Board. All its work has been done on a mere pittance. Men like the Rev. Mr. Orrin G. Cocks and William D. Maguire are inspired by the knowledge of the good they do, and their compensation is far less than they could get in less interesting, but more remunerative work. The National Board's staff is pitifully small and can do its vast work only by going at top pressure all the time. No single factor has helped the ethical development of the industry half as much as the intelligent and conscientious work of the National Board.

TEACHING BY MOVING PICTURES.

A System.

WISCONSIN has long been known as one of the pioneer states in educational moving pictures. This page has from time to time recorded brief descriptions of the efforts put forth and the progress made, and we are now able to present a more thorough report of results achieved and the further plans contemplated, the perusal of which will be most helpful to other states and communities desiring advice and knowledge upon the best means whereby the great advantages of the moving pictures in the schools can be secured.

In the first place the circuits in Wisconsin are owned and operated by the state. They deal exclusively in films and slides of an educational nature and serve an organized chain of public schools, as well as civic and cultural centers. As a result of the state's free service to the schools, the teaching of history, geography, hygiene and other subjects by aid of the motion picture is demonstrating its value so conclusively that the bureau of visual instruction of the Extension Division of the University of Wisconsin, is rapidly becoming a unique educational instrument of the state.

Seventy-eight public schools and other centers throughout the state have moving picture machines of their own, sixty-three of this number having been equipped during the year. In addition to these there are now 285 schools and centers provided with stereopticons provisionally, some twenty-five of these are planning to purchase moving picture machines before the end of the year.

A Growing Demand for Apparatus.

As the cost of each equipment from stereopticon to moving picture machine is from $75 to $350, the investments to be made by the schools, civic associations and other centers in order to avail themselves of the free film and slide service, which is part of the extension plan by which the advantages of the university are taken out into the state at large, is conservatively estimated at $25,000 to $30,000.

At present about 18,000 lantern slides, on nearly 200 subjects, and 130,000 feet of motion picture film on over 100 different subjects, are made available by the University Extension for use on the state circuit.

At the end of the school year, last June, 160 schools and centers were on the Extension circuits, receiving a weekly service of slides and films for thirty-five weeks of the school year. There were four of these organized circuits in operation, while 157 schools and centers used the service occasionally.

Greater Plans for Next Year.

During the coming year the state hopes to make or have some control over the making of such films found to be most needed, and in addition to those which can be acquired in the general market. It has been proved that if the schools had to depend upon the commercial exchanges the present system could not be sustained. On account of the rental rates and the difficulty of a maintained educational supply, schools would suffer even as they do in other states, but, thanks to the plan of the University of Wisconsin and the state authorities, the problem has been so far solved, to the great benefit of their own state, and as a splendid example to every other state in the Union.

An Economical System.

As a financial proposition, the operation of these circuits is an example of a striking economy in the administration of public funds. Had the schools of the state been compelled to secure on a rental basis from other sources the same service which they received from the Extension Division, the cost would have been about $34,000. Had each school on the circuit been compelled to purchase outright the service used during the past year the same would have been at a cost of $4,025, or a total of $644,000, an expense which would have been prohibitive. The actual cost of this service to the schools of the state under the Extension Division plan was only $6,000.

Interesting Lectures.

Many of the slides and films are accompanied by lectures prepared by university faculty members and the field covered is a varied one. Many of the country training schools for teachers and country agricultural schools are using the educational pictures in work among the rural communities, and are still planning a more extensive use for the coming year. Art, history, travel, literature, sociology, agriculture and the varied sciences are represented in the general service to the circuits, while a special series is now in preparation for high school work. The wonderfully systematized visual instruction is organized now to serve every part of the state and it may safely be said that the vexed question of applied kinematography to the standard of its present possibilities has been solved in and by the state of Wisconsin.

THE PICTURE AS A CIVILIZING POWER.

An interesting account comes from the Fiji Islands as to the great benefits upon the islanders wrought by the moving picture. Their appearance is spoken of as being equal "to the dawning of a new day" among the natives.

After their first fears had passed away, an intense interest developed so that it became possible to secure their aid in any way if only they could be rewarded by a view of the pictures which they watched with hungry interest and gave every evidence of profiting from the examples, which they presented.

The people also became industrious if, as a result of their labors, they could receive such pay as would permit them to see more pictures; an English writer predicts that a general result will be a practical reversal of the economic conditions of these and similar people.

A new world is opening before them, in a single glance they see other peoples of the earth, their manners and customs, and while we in civilized lands know of the manners and customs of the uncivilized as a matter of curiosity, they of the uncivilized lands learn from the pictures everything that immediately uplifts them and which will accomplish the work of ages in a comparatively short time. Thus the moving picture is destined to fill another role, i. e., that of the world's greatest civilizer.

USES PICTURES TO ADVERTISE INDUSTRIES.

The Republic of Bolivia, in South America, is the first foreign country to make use of the motion picture in advertising its industries among the business men of the United States. Four reels of films have been prepared, based upon subjects that are intended to give some idea of the wealth, resources and business activities and customs of that nation, and these have already been shown to several organizations of American business men, through the courtesy of the Bolivian minister at Washington.

The Chicago branch office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has had several opportunities to present these views before prominent clubs and associations, and a notable degree of interest was aroused. This is the first time that any considerable number of American business men have been able to observe the actual daily conditions under which the activities of one of the South American nations take place.

The motion picture and the lantern slide are both being used by the Bureau to bring the various sections of this country into touch with the foreign trade work, for the views relating to the work of the bureau itself have been cordially received when exhibited throughout the United States.

"AS IN A LOOKING GLASS."

All preliminary detail for the production of "As in a Looking Glass," from the novel by F. C. Phillips, and chosen for the initial screen appearance of Kitty Gordon, the international star, has been completed. The production will start immediately under the direction of Frank Crane of the World Film staff.

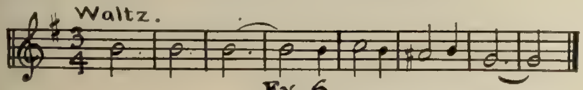
IMPROVISING.

Article II.

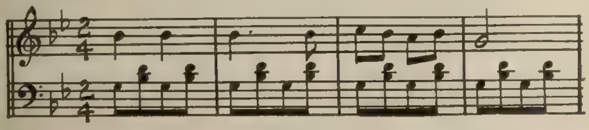
TO CONTINUE with Example 5. Should we play this theme in waltz time we will get another figure and another rhythm without entirely destroying the melodic idea. We can still easily recognize the tune, even though the tempo is changed. See Example 6:



Ex. 6.

This is because the accent is still practically the same in both examples—that is, the same notes fall upon the principal accents of the measure. Play each one and beat the time while playing. You will find the first and third notes falling upon the most strongly accented beats while the 2nd and 4th notes of each are upon the weaker pulsations. And the C and A sharp of the next group are also more strongly accented than are the B and B.

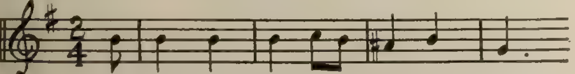
We will modify the same theme (Ex. 5) in another manner; that is, by changing from the major to the minor key. (G major to G minor.)



Ex. 7.

The tempo and form in Ex. 7 are exactly the same as in Ex. 5, but the character is considerably altered by reason of the change to the minor key. However the theme is still recognizable because the principal accents are unchanged and the figure is still the same.

Should we change the figure (pattern) as the figure of Ex. 1 was changed in Exs. 3 and 4, the character of the theme would be so altered as to be almost unrecognizable.



Ex. 8.

In Ex. 8 we have the same tempo as in Ex. 5 (2-4 time) and the sequence of notes is the same in both. But the accent is entirely different. The figure is changed and some of the notes are altered in length. The 2nd and 4th notes now fall upon the principal accents (the beat) of the measure, while the first and third are on the weaker pulsations. Likewise in the next group we find C and A sharp more strongly accented than are B and B. It sounds like another theme. Indeed if we play the 7th note "A natural" instead of "A sharp," the new theme recalls the first measures of another old song from the German called "The Chapel."

Now please don't misunderstand me. Improvisation does not consist in merely twisting a tune out of all resemblance to its original form. These illustrations are merely for the purpose of showing how one theme may sometimes be made to suggest another. We will have many more examples of the same type during the course of these articles, all for the same purpose, viz., to illustrate how one theme may be made to suggest another.

If one is improvising the entire musical accompaniment to a picture, the thematic treatment suggests itself as being the most logical and satisfactory. This consists in choosing some theme or melody for each of the prominent characters (supposed to be appropriate to these characters) and playing one of these themes whenever its particular character dominates the scene, or the situation. If the theme or melody is simple and easily remembered and recognized by your hearers, so much the better. The idea is to "bring out" or intensify by the musical accompaniment those parts of the play which are intensified by the action of the characters. Of course, you always try to do this anyway whether you are improvising or not, but when working upon a theme for each leading character, you try to make that theme express different emotions the same as the one character is expressing different emotions. Sometimes you may alter the theme very slightly, other times you may alter it very much, while at still other times situations arise in which your theme suggests (and leads into) something else very different—but always in such a manner that you can revert quickly to the original should it be required. Quite often it will be the theme of the story which suggests the principal musical theme, that of the actors being secondary. Richard Wagner in his great "Music Dramas" not only gave a theme (a "motif") to characters, but to objects important to the story—the sword motif and the fire motif being two examples.

They who have the ability and ingenuity to study the methods of the great composers and profit thereby can surely find no better models. But we who cannot hope to emulate these distinguished masters must make the best use possible of our humbler gifts and be content with that.

It requires a certain "knack" to improvise, but one that can be in a large measure acquired. Melody makers must follow certain lines and keep within certain boundaries. The more commonplace tunes (dances, ordinary songs and the like), follow a pattern which is as regular and distinct as the pattern in a roll of wall paper. I don't mean that each one is a copy of the other (though that sometimes occurs), but that each one is made up of little themes which are repeated, inverted, reversed and otherwise elaborated, all in perfect order and symmetry—very much like the pattern in the wall paper. Its mechanical parts can be analyzed—taken apart and reduced to the simple elements—so the mechanical part of tune building is not so difficult to learn. Of course the extent of your success will depend upon your inventiveness and ability, but even though you may not be a genius you should, with practice, be able to make a fairly good showing.

I have spoken of "altering" a theme and of "altering" a melody. "Elaborating" would be the better word. We will suppose a "theme" to be a very short subject or figure from which the complete melody is built. Used in this sense, the "theme" is the foundation of your melody. Ex. 5 gives an illustration of this. The "theme" is a short subject of four measures. The song is so well known as to need no reproduction here, but the melody is built up in this way. First, the subject (the "theme") is introduced; four measures. Then this subject is repeated two notes higher. (This is called "repetition.") Three extra notes are then introduced (by reason of there being three more syllables in the second line than in the first), to be followed by the subject again in its original position (plus three extra notes again for the same reason as before). The same subject has now been used three times in different positions, but the words now compel a change in the figure in completing the strain.

This is composition. You can take the same subject—start it on another note if you like—repeat it in different positions from that given in the example, and get another melody. This too would be composition, though as you are building upon another composer's theme, improvisation would more correctly express the process. The melody alluded to was built up principally by repetition. There are many other means of elaboration used in building a complete melody from a short theme, and these are all adaptable when improvising upon another melody. While we expect to devote ourselves to this principally, it may be necessary to explain some of the points of composition for purposes of illustration. In elaborating upon another melody we can use these expedients:

(1) Changing the key. (From major to minor and vice versa.)
(2) Changing the tempo. (From 4-4 to waltz, 3-4 to 2-4, etc.)
(3) Changing the figure.
(4) Playing a theme (or subject) one or more notes higher or lower; called "repetition." See example 5, with comments.
(5) Inverting the figure. (Same shape as to length of notes and "pattern," but opposite in motion.)
(6) Reversing the figure. (Will be illustrated later.)
(7) Extending the intervals. (Increasing the distance between the intervals.)
(8) Contracting the intervals. (Decreasing the distance between them.)
(9) Elaborating by means of grace notes, auxiliary notes, and passing notes.

Miss Retta Hellman, Lyric theater, Covington, Ky., writes:

"I have been a constant reader of your page for several years. The programs and suggestions have helped me very much and I should like to show my appreciation by sending one of mine. This is the manner in which I accompanied

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE PICTURE THEATER.

We have arranged with Mr. W. C. Simon to print a page of original composition in this reduced style at certain intervals. Mr. Simon has composed original sets for a number of the Kalem productions, including their "Midnight at Maxim's" and "The Tragedy of the Desert." This is the first of a series of ten or twelve numbers which will be suitable for certain styles of dramatic subjects under the general classification of society dramas. The complete sets will be available in loose leaf form and will be a welcome addition to the music libraries of orchestra leaders.

NAT GOODWIN JOINS MIRROR.

Nat Goodwin, the famous stage personage who has made but one venture into the world of films, has signed a long term contract with the Mirror Films, Inc., whereby he will appear before the camera exclusively for that organization during the life of the contract. The scenario department of the Mirror has been at work for a week or more on the first screen stories in which Mr. Goodwin will appear and will have at least three ready for the director who will handle Mr. Goodwin's company before the beginning of activities at the Mirror studio at Glendale, Long Island, which is anticipated to be very soon.

Back of the signature of Mr. Goodwin which was affixed to the contract is a story which has a sentimental as well as a commercial aspect. Mr. Goodwin has been a warm personal friend of Clifford B. Harmon, president of the Mirror Films, Inc., for many years.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

ONE of the first duties of every motion picture exhibitor of this country is to become a citizen and arm himself with the privilege to vote. Appeals to exhibitors to stand by their rights are of no avail if the exhibitors are not in a position to do so. It is assumed, and the records appear to bear out the assumption, that nearly all exhibitors in the motion picture business are citizens and are entitled to vote, but there is reason to believe that there are exceptions. It has been suggested that the Bureau of Licenses should make citizenship one of the qualifications for motion picture licenses, and not grant them promiscuously. Every exhibitor should be a voter—an active voter. If he is not he cannot defend his rights on the basis of his fellow exhibitor. Sympathy, co-operation and financial aid may be forthcoming, but the power at the polls is also needed. The picture man is no longer to be scoffed at. He is a part of an established industry, which has a claim to the laws. He has a right to be heard and to have representation. The picture men who went to the polls at the last election demonstrated this by not only helping to roll up a tremendous majority against the constitutional amendment, but also by defeating the assemblyman who introduced the censorship bill at the last session of the Assembly in Albany. All picture people should profit by the example.

* * *

I am frequently asked to give advice regarding investment in stock of motion picture concerns. I wish to state emphatically and for all time that I will not encourage such investment. Those who are inclined to do so must do so without any encouragement from me. It is true that people have made thousands of dollars in the business and there is a great future for the moving pictures, but I will not encourage anyone to invest in them. Such investments are controlled entirely by local conditions, as it were. Past experience has shown that moving picture stock dealings have not been profitable. Whether conditions have changed is left to the judgment of investors. In days gone by such investments were dependent chiefly upon the producing end. Now that and the ownership of theaters are combined. To the impartial mind the latter seems to add to the risk. It is a grave question as to whether the roles of producer and house manager can be combined with profit.

* * *

It cannot be disputed that the photoplay reigns in popularity in the amusement world—that is it is the favorite with the majority of the amusement seeking public, but there is danger that that popularity may be more or less impaired by certain speculative influences. The legitimate theatrical field was killed in that manner. Certain combinations secured control that not only regulated the salaries paid the performers and the admission prices to be paid by the public, but actually put the playwrights upon a scale that stumped their pride and ambition. That is the danger that seems to threaten the photoplay field today. Dividends cannot be ground out of mere popularity. The play must be the play, whether it be the spoken or the silent, and the mere fact that a name or group of names is associated with it will not serve as a guarantee to the investor. As has often been said, the motion picture business is a distinct one. While apparently on a level with the regular theatrical business it differs from it. In the speaking play a good actor or actress may save a poor production. In the motion picture the play itself must win. In the commercial line the products have a standard that can be maintained by certain formula. Not so with the motion picture. The successful formula of to-day may be a failure to-morrow. The standard of production may be maintained, but the production itself may not show it to the satisfaction of the audience. In the theatrical line the public taste is far more fickle than it is even in the line of fashions.

* * *

The most unfortunate feature in connection with the motion picture business is its apparent quick road to wealth. Secondary is the ever present ambitious individual who imagines that a few months of apprenticeship in the business has made him a master. How many players I know who have caused their friends many a loss by their ambition. One I know, who thought he had all the keys of the trade at his finger tips, led his best friend to part with and lose $15,000. Another caused others to spend much more and, instead of prospering, is now playing cheap vaudeville time. Another is now touring the "hayseed towns" in an effort to establish local schools of motion picture acting.

* * *

There may be thousands, even millions, in the motion picture business, but the profits are earned by hard work. The returns are not picked like berries from the bush. A successful photoplay cannot be produced every day. One brand of coffee or other product may hold public favor for years and bring immense profit to the producer. Not so with the photoplay producer. Thousands of dollars may be spent and the best of talent may be used on a production, and still the public may turn its back upon it. There is no stability of taste on the part of the public with regard to amusements and the producers are unable to weigh that taste to a degree that will justify a computation on returns. It cannot be disputed that the life of the photoplay is immeasurable at the present time, yet speculative measures may completely change the aspect within a short period. In the mad rush for wealth many people are endangering the motion picture business. The secrets of the business have now become so broadcast that it is a very easy task for some commendable work to be turned out in a short time, and in a very unpretentious place, but such is not the rule, and a success by accident is frequently used as a vehicle to impose upon the public, and thereby endanger the welfare of the business as a whole. If the newspapers could be induced to deal with motion pictures on the same, apparently, disinterested scale that they do with the legitimate shows, the public might be more liberal in its views on certain photoplays. On the contrary the daily press seems over anxious to take every opportunity to "knock" the motion picture.

* * *

Which recalls to mind comments recently made by a leading daily newspaper of this city. It commends the action of the society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in the case of a rider and horse going over a cliff for a moving picture in the Adirondacks. Ausable Chasm was the place where the "crime" was committed. The local reporter stated that the horse and rider made a plunge of eighty feet. The society representative hurried from New York to the scene and found, by actual measurement, that the plunge was but forty-five feet. The horse escaped uninjured, but the rider had his leg broken. The victim and all those who could be associated with him, were put under bail for trial. The horse was not arrested. He has traveled all over the country as a high diver.

* * *

About two weeks ago a person advertised for one hundred men to meet at a certain point on the North River to take part in a moving picture scene. They were to be paid $1 each. When the crowd assembled they were paired off and told to combat as they would if arrayed against each other as British and German soldiers. They did so, and several were injured. There was no editorial comment upon the incident. The producers of the scene evidently did not have money enough to keep up the publicity.

* * *

Instead of taking hold of direct cases the newspapers attack the business as a whole. It is truly a subsidized press that will publish day after day articles referring to an uninjured horse under the guise of defending the cruelty to animal cause when it will not even comment upon an imposition made upon human beings.

"Old Sam" Bullock, of Cleveland, deserves credit for the fight he is making on the Ohio censors. He was prosecuted because he refused to cut out a subtitle reading that the board of censors was "conceived in iniquity, born in sin and dying in disgrace." The jury disagreed and there is to be another trial. The censors couldn't take a joke. Suppose the statement be the truth? It has no bearing on the film, on questions of morality or public policy. If the publication was a libel Mr. Bullock should have been prosecuted on such a charge. If a similar statement had appeared in a newspaper owned by Mr. Bullock there would have been no prosecution. The case brings to light the line that is drawn between newspapers and motion pictures on the question of freedom of thought. Les Temps, Paris, is protesting against military censorship and very properly says "there are institutions which improve with custom. Such is not the case of censorship" and adds that the censors are not only placing themselves above law regarding freedom of the press, but are also menacing the liberty of the country.

Advertising for Exhibitors

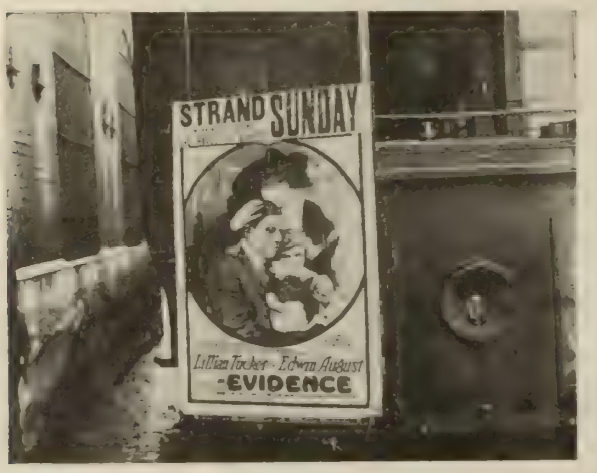
Street Car Advertising.

EVIDENTLY street car advertising is growing popular. It is only lately that many comments on this form of publicity have come in, and this is the first reproducible photograph to accompany comment. This is sent in by R. B. Wilby, of the Strand Amusement Co., Montgomery, Ala., and shows the one sheet boards used for the Strand. These are larger than the average board, which is required to conform to the height of the dash, which is more the half sheet size, requiring a specially printed bill or a cloth banner. Mr. Wilby writes that it costs him "sixty" to use the boards, but does not specify whether week or month and does not say how many cars the payment covers. The house is required to supply and affix its own boards and to do its own pasting.

With a reasonable cost per car, there are few forms of advertising that are better, provided that the cars run on good streets, but it must be remembered that it is not merely street car advertising that is good but the advertising on street cars that take the bills through the desirable portions of the town.

The effect is much the same as the perambulating bill board or sandwich. If you lay out a route for a sandwich man you send him where the bills will be seen by the greatest number of desirable people. In the same way, you must judge the value of this car advertising by the number of cars, their routes and the cost per car as compared with the probable result.



If your cars run up and down the main streets where they are most likely to be seen by a great number of persons, then those cars are worth more to you than cars running down side streets and simply feeding the traffic streets. The same number of persons will ride and these may see your advertisement, but you will not only lose the transient traffic, but the people who ride are less apt to see the advertising on a side street than if, after they left the car they could still see the bills on other cars. Like all billboard work, the effect is not immediate but cumulative, and you want to get the paper where not one but a sucession of bills will be seen, on the proposition that one or more may be overlooked where one of a dozen must be seen.

What the drawing power of any form of advertising will be is wholly dependent on local conditions, and this is a factor you must learn from experience as applied to your own house, but as a general plan the use of cars is excellent if the cost is small enough to make it worth your while to make a general appeal.

And in a recent issue of the Stamco Post Mr. Wilby voices another thought of general interest when he says:

> The manager of one of the largest exchanges in the South, talking to this young man, declared it his opinion that the value of the picture shown in a theater could possibly be no more than fifty per cent. of the program, the balance being made up of projection, house service, and music, with particular emphasis upon the music. And there, we repeat, is where the Strand stands in a class alone in this section.

In other words, you do not merely run motion pictures, but you strive to give them an environment that adds to the comfort of the patrons and conduces to the frame of mind that makes the pictures seem most enjoyable. In a recent issue the Billboard voiced the same idea in other words when it said that the reason of lack of greater success was a lack of real showmen in the business. We need not only house owners but house managers; and managing means the best possible conduct of a house permissible with the making of a reasonable profit.

Folder Programs.

Nikitas Dipson, of the Family, Batavia, N. Y., sends in some folder programs, eight pages about three by six, but varying slightly with the stock. Generally he gives a page a day, save when he has some feature, when he spreads it over two days and condenses the rest slightly. The best form carries the day and date in a panel at the top and this should be used as a regular feature. It gives a finish and definiteness to the divisions that cannot be gained in any other manner, though a straight underline in two point rule is less expensive and still good. Something of the sort should be used. Where two days are run on the same page, these should be cut off by the use of double line rule instead of light single line. Apart from this, the display is generally well planned and well written. There is plenty said about the plays, but the space is not crowded, and the comparative sizes used make for a good display. Mr. Dipson seems to have discovered that six, eight and ten point faces will get the same relative effect as ten, twelve and eighteen point in combination. Of the three sent in for criticism, we think the one dated October 11th the better form. Speaking of The Moving Picture World, Mr. Dipson writes:

> I cannot be an hour without it. Other papers may be good but—I don't know—I am used to the World.

That's the way others—many others—feel. They are used to the paper that has led them to success.

An Auto Float.

H. E. Hinrichs, of the Royal, Minonk, Ill., sends in a photo of his auto placarded with a Mary Pickford play. As the play was "Behind the Scenes" we think that the title would have helped business, and should have been incorporated in the placard. But there is a lack of novelty in a placarded auto alone. If the house had a set of scenery, a box could have been built and placarded with the fact that Miss Pickford was behind the scenes. Something more than a sign on the side of a car is needed to gain more than passing attention. A dressing table might have been set on the floor of the tonneau before which a pretty girl in a bathrobe, presumably covering a stage costume, or in stage costume itself, could have been making up, the sign explaining that it was Mary Pickford making up for "Behind the Scenes" at the Royal tonight. It is a simple matter to get some crude form of display that will greatly increase the pull of the layout. Even some noise maker would be better than nothing, and it is always possible to get a small boy and supply him with a home made triangle.

Might Be Changed.

Stringer's theater, Gainesville, Ga., sends in two pieces, a weekly program and a form letter. The latter might be changed to good advantage. In the first place, it starts off "Honorable Friend." That is not a happy greeting. It suggests a spirit of servility. Then it starts in to complain that the house is not given proper support and to argue that the attendance should be better. Nothing succeeds like success and a confession of failure invariably argues something wrong. The same thing might have been said in a different way. Do not say that you have been giving one of the best programs ever to no business. Say that you are giving surprising value and are astonished that more do not awake to their opportunities. Instead of saying that you have been offering two dollar pictures for five and ten cents and yet the people have not awakened to their opportunities, say "The same pictures we are offering at regular admission cost city theater goers from a quarter to two dollars, and it is one of the beauties of the Motion Picture Business that you get precisely the same picture and at the same time. You do not have to wait for a 'number two' company to happen along. You get the number one company when it is new." Tell the arguments in favor, but do not "make the poor mouth."

And we believe that it is a mistake ever to announce that pictures have been passed by the Board of Censorship. Do not allude to the censorship question as though some such censorship were necessary. Say that you have seen the pictures or know and approve of them, but never put forward a censorship opinion as something necessary and essential to the standing and quality of a picture.

The program is a door knob style in red and green on white. The combination is too gaudy. Red and black would be better and just as pronounced. It is seldom that double printing pays for a house program and when it is done, the colors selected should not be too bright. Red and green is good for poster work, but seldom gives good results in small bills unless one color is little used.

And before getting on to the next program, it might be well to suggest that perhaps the very people who will not come for ten cents may be interested were the prices raised to fifteen or twenty. It has happened and can happen again that the higher price suggests a greater value and therefore a greater desirability.

Features Music.

The Victoria theater, Harrisburg, Pa., features music almost equally with the pictures. They have a unit orchestra and make a noise about it, featuring the program for the week, and giving a cut of William P. McBride, its chief engineer. The program is a peculiar shade of gray brown, printed in black, with one page for the program, one for house chat and one for the musical program and a little more house chat. We think the program proper could be improved were the dated days raised to the top of each section and set in italic instead of running casually in the center of each panel. The dates will show better, the suggestion of a formal program will be better maintained and the man who is looking for something to see on a certain night will have less trouble.

Very Neat.

The Colonial, Pittsfield, Mass., sends in a very neat invitation to its opening. It is a correctly sized card of good stock, printed in a strong blue with an ornament in tint of the same color. There is no aiming at engraved effect, but a clean and very pretty letter is used; but one face throughout, save for the house name, and it bears in every way the suggestion of refinement and good taste. It gives the house the best possible start.

Showy.

The Elite, Mishicot, Wis., sends in a very showy piece of paper in the shape of a throwaway in red and black on white. It is showy and effective because intelligent use of the color is made. Just because they had it, they do not smear it all over the paper, but use the red for border, the house name and one other line, and leave the rest in black to be the more easily read. This is the great trick in using color. If you have two colors, let the brightest be used to set out the other and not to work in combination with it. You will get a better and far less confusing effect.

Another example, a card program, is not so well done. It is a two day program, and the days are not dated, save on the face, and there is no mention of the house in three of the four pages, the only time the name is used being a semi-advertisement on the back. The name of the house, the name of the city or town, the location, if in a city, and the date should always show on the front page. Here there was more than ample room, and we get bare white space and the essentials left out. This could be very much improved.

The program sent is for Saturday and Sunday and the latter day carries the announcement that admission will be ten cents. Presumably Saturday is ten cents, too, but nothing is said. The town people probably know the admission kinks, but there may be a commercial traveler at the hotel who is interested, not that the difference will materially alter his decision.

Too Much Shears.

It is all right to clip stuff from the trade paper to save writing something for the house program, but the house program for the Theatrette, Fort Scott, Kansas, gives a third of a column on the front page to the announcement of a change of management in a theater in Newark, N. J. We fail to see that this will greatly interest the local patron. The Theatrette is a nice little publication, but the pen is a better business maker than the shears.

More Clips.

The Crown theater, Mobile, Ala., is another house with a paper cutting editor, and he does not even turn to the trade papers but tells that a cup of strong coffee will remove the odor of onions from the breath and gives working diagrams for the construction of egg muffins and of muffins without eggs, which is not likely to fill one with a yearning to see certain films. The issue is sixteen pages, but twelve pages will be better until there is more advertising obtained, for there is so much white space that it looks bare and unfinished. The newspaper advertising, on the other hand, is overloaded with words. The program should be built up and the newspaper work cut to permit the use of stronger display through the employment of some white space as well as larger display lines.

Could be Augmented.

The Columbia theater, Victoria, B. C., sends in a program that might be improved by telling more about their current films. They use two subjects a week, three days each, but they do not tell enough about these subjects to gain much interest save from the regular fans. It would pay to read up on the coming attractions and write half a dozen lines of interesting description of each subject. They might, too, take the second page for house talk instead of clip stuff, though they have a lost and found department on that page, the finding for the week the sample covers including a set of false teeth. This might be given more space than the five point used, but it appears to have been set to suggest a newspaper classified advertisement. It should be set in eight point and given a twelve or fourteen point head. A program is not really good until it is doing all the work it can for a house, and house talk beats lifted stuff, though the lifts are all right if there is room for both.

Another Birth.

A. S. McCabe, of the Orpheum, Fort Wayne, Ind., sends in a house program "just born." It is a promising infant, but it has not learned to talk as yet, at least there is no house talk or other than the anouncement of the musical programs. The text for the attractions day by day is carefully prepared; nicely done, indeed, but something more is needed, particularly where there is a campaign for foreign advertising. The only trouble is that the house program gets but the smallest third of each page where it should be given a shade the best of the division. Mr. McCabe, who is the advertising manager, adds this clever stunt:

> During the projection of the Valeska Suratt picture, "The Soul of Broadway," this week, this theater "got across" a unique publicity stunt by arranging with the leading dry goods, millinery and shoe stores to devote one of their display windows to bizarre designs of wearing apparel resembling those worn by Miss Suratt in the photoplay. The theater arranged to have artistically printed cards put in each window reading thus: "Models of Gowns (or Shoes, as the case might be) Worn by Valeska Suratt in 'The Soul of Broadway' at the Orpheum Theater Today." Suffice to say the idea brought unusual results via the box office.

For Reprint.

The advent of the Majestic Monthly, put out by the theater of that name in Columbus, Ohio, is always a bright week in these parts, for the editor writes the stuff that it will be good for others to copy. In the current issue he has a good talk on the work of the projection operator then adds this for the usher:

> The alert young fellows who stand ready to take you to a seat when you enter the picture house, do you ever give them a thought, except at a crowded performance when they are perhaps unable to find a seat? These ushers have their problems, too. The editor was speaking to the head usher the other day about it and he admitted that he, also had a message for the magazine readers.
>
> The chief thing to remember, he told us, is for the patron to tell the usher immediately just where in the house he wants to sit and how many seats he desires. Then the usher can show him with some speed and accuracy to the desired place. "Left aisle, pretty well down, three seats," would be a sample of a request as it should be made. Furthermore, there is nothing more embarrassing to an usher than to get some seats in the best locations he can find and then to have the patrons stop rows and rows behind him.

Train your employees to make theatergoing pleasant for the patron, but also train your patrons to make it easy for the ushers to make it pleasant for them. As a starter reprint this item in your own program and then run a standing line in blackface that runs something like:

> Tell the usher where you wish to sit and he will try and seat you there.

Letter it on the entrance door that it may be seen on entering, and in every way seek to create the impression of service. Your success is only partly dependent upon the films you run. Make your house a home of entertainment in all of its features and not merely in film.

Memories.

Dave Udell said he was going to come in regular.

S. E. Wall said he was going to send a whopping big letter "soon."

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Yes, But—

HERE is part of an unusually interesting letter from a correspondent in Washington. He has hit upon a good method of studying plots, but a better would be not to write what is shown in the screen, but what should have been shown. It is very true that stories and synopses are not always in agreement because the cutting room "fixes up" what the director has already fixed up, and little is left of real story, but you can learn as much from the mistakes as the successes and get a clear idea of what a plot should be. The writer says:

> A study exercise I have found of benefit, in connection with your instruction in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, is to write a synopsis of a picture I see on the screen and then compare my synopsis with the story of the picture published in the World. True these published stories are somewhat sketchy at times, and in some cases it will be found that the story and the picture will not entirely agree, but it is good practice. The exercise can also be carried further and a brief criticism written of the picture which can be compared with the reviews published in the World.
> In a recent issue of the World you publish the comments of an editor on the immense amount of trash that is submitted to the companies by would-be playwrights. Your object in publishing the statement, judged from your writings, was to impress upon your pupils the fact that it is necessary to work long and patiently in order to be successful as a writer of screen plays. I note, however, that it is the practice of some writers connected with the motion picture industry to comment in a sarcastic manner on the fact that every man, woman and child in the United States is trying to write scenarios. This is not good policy. Unfortunately there are, no doubt, some men and women trying to write phootplays who are not, either by training or temperament, adapted to this kind of work. As an example of what this general interest may produce, however, it might be pointed out that Italy, a nation of musicians has produced some great composers, and if we have become a nation of playwrights there is every reason to believe, and even already evidence to prove, that we will produce the leaders in this new art. Good instruction is the proper procedure; the sarcastic gentlemen, when they make fun of the servant girl, are only killing the goose.

As to the attitude of the editors and readers, it is very true that they seem to hold the mass of writers lightly in esteem, but then our correspondent can have no idea of the sort of stuff that is poured into the studios day after day. He cannot realize the impertinence, the effrontery and the exasperating complacency of these would-be authors. It is pretty hard—almost impossible, for any person with a knowledge of literary values to hold down an editorial job for six months and not feel a contempt for the small-minded, but big headed authors who grind out their drivel and then grow indignant when checks are not forthcoming for stories that were old when Edison was unborn. He cannot realize the thefts the editor sees day after day, the calm, untroubled appropriation of stories from last week's Saturday Evening Post and the current magazine back down through the ages to the time of Adam.

When the business was new, all editors helped the authors because they had to create a new class of writers. They still give their help to the promising and give of their personal time as well as that belonging to their employer, but even here the promises are not kept and abuse is as likely to be the thanks the editor gets as his appreciation.

Italy is a nation of musicians and has produced many famous singers, instrumentalists and composers, but for all that the impressario of La Scala does not sit down and teach theory and counterpoint to every truck driver who brings in a few sheets of ruled paper with some marks on them nor give a lesson in voice placement to the scrub ladies. Italy is a land of music, but the ambitious first prove their merit before they receive much assistance, and because a certain tenor was a butcher, it does not follow that all other dealers in flesh goods should be carefully watched for incipient vocalism. The sarcastic gentlemen when they make fun of the servant girl do so because they realize that no amount of instruction can replace the want of brains.

Every editor deserving of the name is willing to help and help generously when help will do any good, but something more than a desire for money must be the foundation of a would-be author's claims to recognition. Don't blame the editors. Blame the school advertising that tells that anyone can earn an income of fifty dollars a week writing and selling two plays every seven days.

Gymnastics.

To improve your plotting ability, take the time now and then to do some freak stunts. Write a story about a parlor match or a can of condensed milk or a left-handed monkey wrench or something. It may not be much of a story and then, again, it might be. One afternoon Harry Hoyt jokingly remarked that he thought he would write a story about a white rat as he had no other ideas, and we told him if he was any good he would. It turned the joke on him, but the Kalem release that resulted was favorably commented upon by the critics for its novelty of idea, something about a man who sent a tame rat down a speaking tube to obtain help.

There is only one excuse for a trained man being unable to write a plot about anything, and that is a temporary case of brain fag due to excessive production.

Sit down right now and write a story about a man who suddenly finds himself in London with nothing but German gold and notes. See what you get in the way of synopsis. Send it inside of 250 words and with a return envelope and we will comment on it for you, if you wish.

Courtesy.

For a couple of months there was some one in Rochester who seemed to spend much time telling others that if they would send us a stamp we would send them a sample script. This was not true, but when the letters came in—and there must have been a couple of dozen of them—we told them that the Lubin company would send a free sheet that included a sample script. Just one of the two dozen odd wrote again to say that the slip had been procured and to thank us for the suggestion.

Honest.

Now and then it is possible to get a laugh even out of a photoplay department. Comes a letter that does not look very intelligent (yes, letters can look intelligent or otherwise) in which the writer says:

> Why do you say there are good stories in the bible? I have read it carefully and do not find any.

Now, wouldn't that shake you up just a little? The writer reads there there are stories in the bible, so he reads it and then kicks that it is wasted effort. But let's see.

Henry and John are brothers. Henry loves Gladys. John also loves her, but he is content to conceal his love and bide his time. They go for a walk near a river. The next day Henry's body is found. All around are evidences of a struggle. Beside him is a favorite cane, a stick with a head of unusual design, perhaps in the form of a horse's hoof with a tiny horseshoe attached. John's body is not to be found, but a rapid river nearby suggests the reason. It is probable that the murderer or murderers disposed of John's body, but were frightened away before they could similarly dispose of Henry's. Two years later John turns up. He tells a story of finding himself on the edge of the river, being picked up by a barge captain and carried to the river's source. A scar on his head explains the aphasia. Now he has recovered memory and has come home. All goes well for a time, but he seeks to make love to Gladys, who cannot overcome her dislike for him. One night, while he is visiting her she sees Henry's cane. The tiny horseshoe just fits the scar on John's brow. Shocked into confession, he admits that he killed Henry to get him out of the way, receiving the blow on his head in the struggle.

That is not precisely like the story of Cain and Abel, but that was the inception of the story and "The Mark of Cain" would make a good title had it not been used so often before.

Suppose that David Jocelyn is ruined by Peter Higginson. They have been business rivals and by underhand methods Peter not only wrecks David's business but does it in such a manner that the failure is made to seem to be the result of David's dishonesty. The disgrace breaks his heart and he dies. David's mother, or perhaps his wife, swears to be revenged. She knows that Peter is intensely superstitious. She goes away and reappears as a clairvoyant and gets Peter into the toils and wrecks his business, partly through her advice and partly through use of the information she obtains from him. Disgrace does not kill Peter, but loss of his money is worse than death to him. David has been avenged.

There is no very strong resemblance to Saul's visit to the Witch of Endor, but this is the source of the plot. Understand that we did not mean to be read as saying that all you had to do was to open the book and find a plot all ready. You must add imagination to suggestion, but if you really are an author and not a faker, that is what you will do in any case. The bible is a great source of inspiration if you know how to use it, but so, too, is the dictionary or the Consular Reports or anything else that will serve to start you. The bible was mentioned because it is unusually rich in suggestion.

Misplaced.

An author writes that he has a story that won praise from Phil Lang, but which was not purchased because it showed railroad men in an unfavorable light and they did not care to make it. He asks where to send it next and we told him to send it to the morgue.

This holds good in any case. Do not write stories that show men as a class in an unfavorable position. Take this railroad stuff that Kalem makes, for instance. We know many exhibitors at division points who have built up big business running the Helen stories and advertising to railroad men. There are many picture theaters where the yardmaster has an arrangement whereby the theater near the yard will flash a slide when a man is wanted, and many times this reaches him where a message to the employee's house will not be received. Probably there are two or three hundred thousand men in the railroad business who are partly attracted to the theaters by railroad films. Is it to be supposed that their interest can be kept up by showing railroad men as sots and fools? The business of these men is important to house managers and so it is important to the exchanges and the manufacturers and it would be foolish in the extreme to show a drunken engineer running his train into a freight or a conductor killing a man by throwing him off the rear platform.

In the same way there are hundreds of traveling salesmen who are among the picture theaters' best patrons. It would be poor policy to produce films in which these men are depicted as home wreckers and generally dissolute.

Play for clean, well placed interest. Do not make enemies of patrons. Get stories that will appeal to and be approved by classes and throw the onus on individuals. Then you can sell.

Saving Footage.

Use film when you must have it, but save it where you can. And don't get the idea that you positively must have eighty scenes to the reel and invent scenes just to fill. You can have eighty scenes if you need them and they are short, but you can use but forty if the scenes, or some of them, are longer and forty scenes will tell your story.

Do not, for example, have the clownish suitor come to the window and peep in, then cut to the interior to show the girl sees him, go outside to show them greeting, move him to the doorstep and so into the room, when it would be as effective if the man came directly into the room or if he came to the door and was then ushered in.

This sort of stuff is all very well when a director is trying to pad or when he wants to build up and emphasize by delaying the big scene, but it is a waste of footage to indulge in similar elaborate development of every action. Each scene should have a direct bearing on the story and contribute to the general effect a result equal to its footage. If this is not the case, the development is poor no matter how tricky and "cute" the planned action may be. The best story is the one most simply told. It must be told not only simply but directly and with the least possible amount of lost motion. It should not, of course, be so cut down to the bare necessities that the effect is lost through the suddenness of the happenings, but use the in and out action for big stuff and do not force it everywhere just because it was effective in some play you saw.

Continuity.

In your eagerness to get plenty of meat into your story do not ignore continuity, for the meat will be hamburger steak if it is all chopped up.

Too little attention is paid to real continuity, not the elaborate continuity that gives a dozen scenes to establish a single action, but the true continuity that avoids an abrupt change. Scores of pictures fail of their full effect because they are not properly cut. Jim dashes out of Helen's parlor after his rejection. Immediately we see him come into his own home, grab up a revolver and try to choke himself with it. This is too sudden. It would not pay to show Jim come out of Helen's house, exit through the gate, come down the street, come down another street, enter his own yard, enter the front door, then hang his hat in the hall, go up stairs, come to the top hall and so, at last, to his room, but we can avoid the suggestion that Jim has the magic carpet of Suleiman and saves even jitney fare. We can, for instance, get this:

11. Parlor—Jim proposes—Helen rejects—he pleads—she is firm—he roughly siezes her—kisses her—exits—Helen stands by the table—dejected—likes Jim but doesn't want to marry him and is sorry to wound him.

Now we can go on with the story and there will be more interest because the two big scenes have been divided by lesser action (it is too early yet to have crisis follow crisis, scene by scene) which enables the spectator to get ready for the next shock that a crisis represents.

In many produced pictures it will be found that the lack of continuity is due to the removal of scenes to gain space, and often there will be found other scenes that might better have been removed to let in the connection scenes. This is poor cutting and not bad manuscript work, but too many scripts show the same fault of disconnection where later scenes are used that might be eliminated in favor of the more important action, action that is unimportant in itself, but important in that it connects two essential scenes.

Not Quite.

A writer who conducts a photoplay writers' department in a southern paper gives this advice:

> The importance of the title is not fully appreciated by the novice. How important it is may be gathered from the almost absurd statement of a text-book writer, himself an expert scenario writer and critic on one of our most prominent screen weeklies, that the proper way to write a photoplay is to find a catchy title, then set to work and write a story around it. Yes, it sounds like take a button and sew the coat to it; but such is the state of photoplay literature at present. The main object is to get the spectators into the house and you have to attract their attentions by a good title.

This is not quite what was said. What we did say is that one way to get a plot is to get a catchy title and write a play around it. This does sound absurd, but many writers know that it is a good way to go to work now and then, though not always. For example you think of the title "Making Henry Happy." That sounds catchy. All that remains is to find a story to fit it.

Who made Henry happy? How did they make him happy? Why did he need to be helped to happiness? Find the answers and you have your story. Perhaps Henry has had a quarrel with Bess. John, Henry's friend, tries to pour oil on the troubled waters. Perhaps he does, or perhaps he adds a lighted match and makes matters still worse.

Suppose that Henry and Bess have fallen out because Bess thinks that Henry is too tame. Perhaps Jack dresses as a woman, goes to Bess's house and acquaints him with Henry's lurid past. Perhaps this convinces Bess that Henry is the dashing, roistering blade she wants him to be, or perhaps she is more than ever certain that she does not want ever to see him again.

Perhaps the title is to be ironical. Perhaps Henry's happiness is about the last thing that John plans for, the object being to get Henry in worse than ever. This, too, would make a good comedy, or it can be supposed that Henry is unhappy because he is not married and half a dozen friends labor to supply him with a wife with such success that Henry faces five or six breach-of-promise suits. There are lots of ways of making Henry happy and most of them will provide a story.

In the same way "In the Last Trench" might be a war story, a story of a failing business campaign rallied at the last moment or the low ebb in the life of a girl who is suddenly forced to make her own way in the world. Here, too, are countless possibilities.

Writing to a title is not the only proper way of plotting, but it assuredly is one way, and a good one. The author who would keep his product up cannot have too many ways of arriving at an idea for when one plan fails to yield results another may, and with several established schemes there is generally one way that will work when others fail.

Actor Talk.

Every little while some one writes that they know that stories are stolen because a friend of theirs, a prominent photoplayer, has said that all editors steal plots.

This sounds convincing to the outsider, for surely a man who plays in the studio should know all about it, but as a matter of fact most actors know as little about play writing and the editorial department as the rankest outsider. Many of them do not even know how to write in proper form and they have no point of contact with the script end, but they wish to appear important and well informed and since the author seems to be of the opinion that stories are stolen they confirm his fears and are believed. Their testimony is worthless.

Suspense.

A. Van Buren Powell, in the October Writers' Monthly, offers an excellent description of suspense in an article on gaining interest. He writes:

> If you just simply give a dog a bone he crouches and eats it. That's all. But suppose you held it too high for him to reach, and when he barked, teased him a little, made him jump and struggle, wag his tail, plead, and finally, hooking his front paws around your wrist, drag your hand down and get the bone. He would have been more interested, wouldn't he? And he'd appreciate that bone, too.

The advice is equally good for characters and spectators. Make the spectators beg because the hero has to beg, for in the well written story the suspense that comes to the hero and heroine is shared by the men and women interested in the outcome of the story. This is only a bit of a most interesting article, one that it will pay you to read.

"We" and "You."

From the number of correspondents who write that "We have just done this," or that "We have just done that," it would seem that many think the plural to be the proper form. It is not. Kings and editors alone use the plural; kings because they imagine they are the whole works and editors because it is considered egotistical to use "I" instead of "we" or "this writer." In a personal letter it is not only out of place but suggests a lack of familiarity with conventions.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended until the excellence of such article has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 114.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor.

> How many lenses are there in the objective? Explain fully. Suppose you got them mixed while cleaning, how would you tell "which is which" and which surface to place toward the screen? How and how often ought your lenses to be cleaned?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 108.

The Roll of Honor on question 108 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Tex.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; C. A. Dann, Toronto, Can.; A. H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Can.; A. D. Hotaling, Orlando, Fla.; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; H. Gordon, Tampa, Fla., and F. V. Poyser, Brandon, Manitoba.

The reply of M. W. Larmour has been selected for publication.

Reply to Question No. 108.

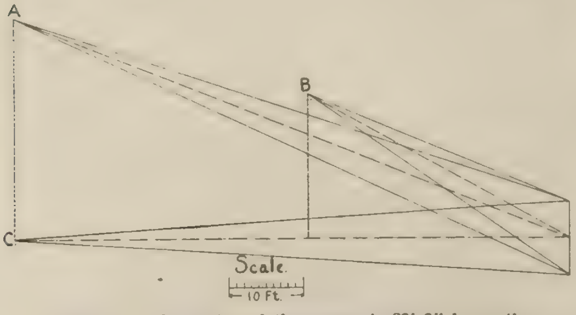
By M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

The Question:

Suppose you have a very steep pitch in projection, what could you do to secure sharp focus both at the top and bottom of the picture? Can a picture be made sharp all over under these conditions?

The Answer:

> The best results can be attained where a steep pitch in projection is encountered by stopping down the projection lens, tilting the aperture plate forward by loosening the bottom screws and slipping a thin piece of tin under the bottom part of the plate, and tipping the top of the screen back.
>
> By also remedying the keystone effect the above treatment will improve a picture a great deal, provided the picture is carefully focussed; but a steep pitch cannot, under any conditions, be made to give a picture as perfect as where the machine sets squarely in front of the screen.
>
> The inclosed diagram, drawn to scale, illustrates the great difference in distance the rays of light from the aperture have to travel to reach the screen where the pitch is excessive.



> In condition A the center of the screen is 29′ 9″ lower than the center of the aperture. Center of aperture to center of screen is 80 feet. Center of aperture to top of screen is 78′ 8″. Center of aperture to bottom of screen is 82 ft.
>
> In condition B the center of the screen is 19′ 5″ lower than the center of the aperture. Center of aperture to center of screen is 40 ft. Center of aperture to top of screen is 37′ 9″. Center of aperture to bottom of screen is 42′ 7″. This shows why a picture cannot be correctly focussed where the pitch is abnormal. Take condition B, for instance, the rays have to travel 4′ 10″ farther to reach the bottom of the picture than they do to reach the top, and when the top of the picture is exactly in focus the bottom will be 4′ 10″ off. The only thing to do would be to focus the center of the picture, which would leave both the top and bottom parts approximately 2 ft. 5 ins. out of focus.
>
> If managers would, before planning their theaters, draw a diagram, to scale similar to the inclosed, of their proposed pitch, they could readily see what difficulties will be caused by sticking their operating room any place where it will be out of the way, rather than placing it as squarely in front of the screen as possible.

What Brother Larmour says about managers and architects exercising a little common sense in planning theaters is absolutely correct, as has been already pointed out many, many times by this department.

Not Practice, But Study.

George McBath, Tampa, Florida, sends in answer to Question 107, and says:

> Local 321 has signed up the Kinodrome Theater here, which has been employing non-union men, and the New Strand has also blossomed forth with two of our men, so you see our flag is flying high. I join Brother Nosti and thousands of other operators in recommending the Handbook and the Hawkins works, as the latest and best books published on projection and electrics. This is my first attempt at answering the questions, and naturally there will be mistakes, but "Practice makes perfect."

No, Brother McBath, you haven't got it quite right this time. In a thing of this kind it is not practice but study that makes perfect, and study is fortunately a thing which cannot be denied to any of us, though apparently some of the good friends think it ought to be.

I am, indeed, glad to know that Local 321 is getting along so nicely. And now let me give a little word of caution, in excuse for which let me say I was for many years actively identified with the labor movement. One of the greatest dangers which confronts a union, the membership of which is made up of men who have not had a wide experience in labor affairs, lies in the tendency to get "chesty" as soon as some success is accomplished. I don't mean that you boys will do anything of that kind, but, nevertheless, you may, hence this advice. Many an organization has been wrecked by success, meaning by this that as soon as they won two or three small scraps they got a mistaken notion that they were invincible, and, forthwith, proceeded to try to turn the earth over. Old labor organizations like, for instance, the locomotive engineers, the bricklayers, and plumbers do not make that mistake. Probably you won't either, but just the same to you and other comparatively young organizations I would say, don't get excited over success, but just keep pegging along, getting a little here and a little there where you can, and, above all things, never get into a fight as long as you can attain your end without it. Many a man has shaken his fist under another man's nose and had the everlasting tar licked out of him, whereas had he used a little soft soap instead of his fist he would have won his point without trouble. My compliments to Local 321. May her troubles be few and her joys many. P. S.—Please don't jump to the conclusion that I don't believe in fighting at all. I most emphatically do believe in it, but ONLY as a VERY LAST RESORT, after soft words and all other methods have failed; also, I believe that if a fight is forced on a union, then the only method to pursue is to use every legitimate weapon and fight to win. But remember that neither dum dum bullets or stink balls are regarded as "legitimate weapons."

A Success.

Local Union 321, Tampa, Florida, gave a banquet and ball recently, which proved to be a decided success. Affairs of this kind, where the men are brought together in social intercourse, do a great deal of good. The affair lasted until almost daylight, and when at the finish the tired ones settled themselves on the roost, and closed their eyes for what remained of a night's sleep, the happy faces wore the "smile that won't come off."

The editor was honored with an invitation, and a correspondent in describing the affair says: "And believe me, there was only one thing missing, and that was you." Well, I would have enjoyed being there, but, as I told you before, it is a long, long ways to Tippertampa.

Instruction Book.

The Precision Machine Company has gotten out an illustrated and excellent instruction book for the Simplex. This book will be sent out with all new purchases; also it may be had by addressing the Precision Machine Company. It is a thirty-two-page pamphlet, well bound and of convenient size for operating room use.

Articles Beneficial.

F. Haley, Bristow, Oklahoma, says:

> The articles in the department have been very beneficial to me as an operator, but I am seeking more light, both literally and figuratively. My picture, at its sharpest focus, is very dim most of the time, and the major portion of the trouble lies in a very fluctuating current, due to fault at power house. When it is most even there is a regular pulsation, which is quite distinctly visible on the screen. The operating room equipment is the best we can get. There is a Wagner converter, a new Power's Six A, motor driven, and we have meniscus-bi-convex condensers. In October 16th issue appeared Table No. 1 giving proper distances to place the lenses, but it was not carried far enough for my machine. My throw is 94 feet. The objective lens is a 7 inch E. F., with a 5⅛ back focus. Across the face of the lens the diameter is 1 7-16 inches. The condensing lenses are set with the 7 inch concave convex at the back and the 9 inch bi-convex lens in front. These lenses are placed as closely together as I can get them, but are, nevertheless, ⅜ inch apart, and the arc is 4½ inches behind the back condensing lens. One other trouble is that the picture seems to dance up and down on the screen. I have toiled with the idler of the intermittent until I think it is as nearly as right as possible. The machinery has only been in operation about six weeks, so there should be no worn places. I clean the sprockets with tooth brush and gasoline after each show, and wash the whole machine with gasoline occasionally, following the Handbook instructions as closely as possible. Does the fluctuating voltage constitute my whole trouble? I am supposed to get 30 to 60 amperes, with a voltage of 70. Am using ⅝ inch cored Bio carbons above and ½ inch solid below. Why should the polarity change while the arc is running? Sometimes it switches half a dozen times while we are projecting one reel, and the arc has never yet been without a flame. Do you think it would be best for my manager to install his own power plant for the arc? Am much interested in the light ray experiments.

Well, always provided the voltage fluctuates as much as you say, you will have a hard job getting good results, unless you do install a power plant. But I cannot advise very intelligently without knowing what you are paying per K. W. Do you mean to say that the power plant is supplying 70 volt current? That is very unusual. I think you will find it is 110, and that it is the secondary or D. C. circuit that is giving the 70 volts. If your D.C. current pulsates it is evidence that your converter is "racing," and if the polarity switches while the arc is in operation there is something radically wrong somewhere, and you should immediately take the matter up with the manufacturer of the converter. The most likely thing is that one of the connections has been wrongly made.

As to the picture dancing up and down, why you will have to describe the condition more clearly. If your sprockets are clean, and the movement is regular, four times every revolution of the machine crank, then there is something wrong with your intermittent, or its shaft. If, on the other hand, the movement is irregular it may be due to slack tension, or fault in the film itself. Describe the effect more in detail and I can probably do something for you.

Your objective lens is not large enough in diameter. It should be not less than 2 inches, and your arc is ALTOGETHER too far from the lens. I would advise you to order either a Preddy or Elbert condenser mount, get an objective lens with an aperture not less than 2 and preferably 2½ inches in diameter (though I think you will have to have the Power Company send you a special front plate) and until you do you will continue to have light loss, and lots of it, too. When you get a lens of that size you can then match up according to the table referred to, and you will, I think, be surprised at the increased illumination of your picture. The table will, however, bring your arc up to between 3 and 3½ inches from the lens, and I fear unless you have an Elbert or Preddy mount you will break a good many lenses.

As to the carbons flaming, why try ¾ cored above and ⅝ inch solid below, or you might also try ⅝ cored below, using whichever you like better. The arc will be steadier with the cored, but there will be added arc gas at the wrong place and it will somewhat diminish the efficiency of the light. The flaming is probably due to carbons working above capacity.

The Table Did It.

Charles A. Dentelbeck, Toronto, Canada, writes:

> Well, brother, I have set tight, and have been experimenting with your experiments. Now I will loosen up a little. In October 30th issue, Friend E. W. Nichols, Pasadena, Cal., set forth his flicker troubles. I had the same difficulty, but instead of a rotary converter I have two motor generator sets; instead of two Simplex, have two Power's Six A machines, and instead of two Keno 2½-inch lenses, I have two Gundlach No. 2, or half size. Am using 50 amperes, generated at 75 volts, projecting a 17-foot, 4-inch picture 112 feet on a plaster screen. Made all kinds of shutters, but did not get proper results. In talking to the manager of an optical company here I told him the story of my difficulties, and he showed me a letter from the Gundlach lens people saying the Nicholas Power Company made a special shutter for the Gundlach half size lens. I wrote the Power Company, and the enclosed letter is the result—no charge for the special, only return my old shutter. Well, the new shutter gave better results, but still I had travel ghost and was not satisfied, and that was where you came in. I got out the light ray tables, October 16th issue. The dope for a 2½-inch diameter lens at 4 7/16 back focus was, according to the table, two 6½-inch condensers 14 inches from the aperture, the condensing lenses ⅞ inch apart. My crater is now 3 inches from the back condenser with a Preddy condenser mount, and, Brother Richardson, the result is that I will now put my picture up against anything I have ever seen. Cannot find the slightest discoloration in any part of it, which means that the illumination is perfectly even. Am operating in the only 10, 15 and 25 cent straight picture house in the city, except the Strand, and, believe me, I have to deliver the goods because my manager knows his business. Brother C. A. Dann of this city is in our local now. He joined a month ago and we find him to be a very nice gentleman. Incidentally, we have had a good, thorough house cleaning in our local, so good luck to you, Brother Richardson.

Comment, I think, is scarcely necessary. Up to date every report I have had from those who have tried the tables have been favorable, except in cases where the equipment could not be made to meet the conditions. It is now up to machine manufacturers to so change their equipment that the apex of the front condenser can be gotten 24 inches away from the film, and it is very much up to lens manufacturers to increase the diameter of their objectives. Good luck to the local. Maybe next summer I may find time to visit our Canadian brothers. I certainly would like to.

Diameter Too Small.

R. E. Wicker, Pinehurst, North Carolina, says:

> Am running a Power's Six A with an objective lens having a 1⅝ inch aperture. Distance from back plane of objective to aperture plate 3¾ inches. What condenser combination should I have? The tables published in the World did not cover this combination. Am projecting an 11 x 13 picture at 90 feet, using 110 volt current through a compensarc. At this writing have a 7½ condenser combination and get a fairly good light, but wish, if possible, to improve.

If you will remove your lens and place a sheet of white paper approximately where its back combination now is, noting the size of the light beam at that point, I think you will see what is wrong. The diameter of your lens is altogther too small. You should have one with not less than a 2 inch opening. Until you get a lens of larger diameter I cannot suggest any improvement. That table is, I think, right; and if the equipment is not right, that is the fault of the equipment. You can't make equipment that is totally wrong fit very well, no matter what you do. Get a lens of larger diameter is my advice, though you may have trouble following it. We will only get lenses of proper diameter when enough of you put up a strenuous kick and refuse to accept lens makers' word that their lenses are of proper diameter when they are NOT.

He Objects.

P. O. Gandrean, operator Casino theater, Burlington, Vermont, writes thusly with regard to the criticism of his projection, published October 30th:

> I have been employed at the same theater since, February 24, 1909, and am still on the job. My critic came in, I think, about 1911 and I gave him instructions on the projectors for something like two years. He very well knows that if our projection is poor we have the crowd, and are still doing business at the old stand. I have the old departments bound in volumes since 1909 (when it was the "Trouble Department"), and as for wages, why I am getting mine. If my friend, the critic, is a live wire he must be on short circuit. The other theater is a vaudeville house with 1,400 seating capacity, with pictures between the acts only—not really a picture house at all. I am awake at least a part of the time, since I read the World just as soon as it comes in, and keep them, too.

Brother Gandrean, after a careful examination of your letter and an examination of the facts you cite, while I may be in error, I believe you have just simply become a little careless. I don't think there is any doubt about your knowledge, but remember this: knowledge is of small value if we get careless and fail to apply it, and the fact that you are doing a good business in spite of faults in projection is no proof that the faults ought to be there. I am glad to see that you did not get angry and that you answered your critic like a man. A jolt of this kind often does us good. I get careless myself sometimes, and then some one lands a bump hard enough to rattle my teeth and I wake up from my doze and—mentally thank the bumper for having performed a genuine service.

Helped Him Very Much.

George Hoffstatter, St. Paul, Minneapolis, encloses forty cents for first and second set of questions and says:

> As soon as the new Handbook is out I want one. Am a regular reader of the World, and particularly of the projection department, which has helped me very much in my work. Am anchored to a Simplex machine sixty-six hours a week. Have been about six months at the machine and would like to have some of your visitors pass an opinion on my work. I would be curious to know how it would sound in print.

Well, if you served an apprenticeship and have studied, so that you have both the theory and the practice, and are careful to apply your knowledge, there is no reason in the world why it would not sound well. When I had been running a locomotive for six months I considered myself a pretty good engineer, and looking back now I can see I was too, though I was a very much better one a few years later.

Comment on Question No. 93.

John Solar, Watertown, New York, says:

> Noting your request for comment on third part of the answer to question 93, August 28th issue, why Friend Smith's diagram does not show the true action of rays passing through a condenser. Taking ray A, for example, which is a straight line, it is impossible to pass light through a lens, or condenser without refraction. (Not true, Brother Solar. If a ray is passed directly through the center of a lens it is not refracted. Brother Smith, however, shows ray A as a straight line, which is wrong. Under the conditions shown ray A would be refracted.—Ed). Brother Griffiths says: "I do not think that imperfections in a conderser, other than those which cause color to be projected to the spot on the aperture, would injure the definition of the picture on the screen. The direct result of imperfectly placed condensers would be a comparatively poor image of the crater at the aperture, and, incidentally an injury to the illumination on the screen, but not necessarily poor definition or focus at the screen." In my opinion, Friend Griffiths is right.
>
> I have made a diagram of a condenser ¼ inch out of square with the principal axis of the combination, and drawn the rays to the index of refraction for crown glass. In observing the figures, we see that the rays of the lower half of the lens are focused nearer the lens than are those of the upper half; also that spherical aberration is nearly corrected in the lower half. This seems strange, but if the laws of refraction are correct, then it must be true. However, in this case, the condition applies only to a small part of the lens. If we start at the extreme lower half of the condenser and swing around in an arc of 90 degrees in either direction, we arrive at a horizontal line through the plane of the condenser. In swinging through this arc, the rays gradually change direction until we arrive at the horizontal line, at which point the direction of the light is the same as if the lens were set square. It is evident from this that light passing through the lens near the horizontal line across the center of the condenser will only be slightly affected, and that in passing through near a perpendicular line through the center it will focus closer to the condenser in the lower half than in the upper half. The result is that in any position we may place the condenser combination with relation to the objective we have unequal angles from the aperture to back of objective. In other words, the diverging beam will be at a greater angle on one side than on the other, consequently there will be loss of illumination.

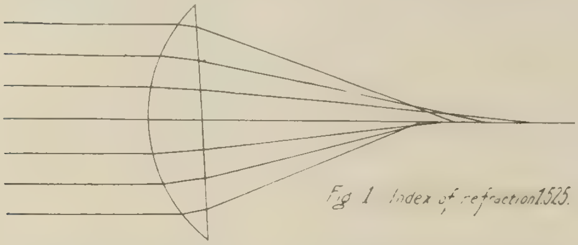


Fig 1 Index of refraction 1.525.

I do not see there would necessarily be a loss in illumination, Brother Solar. That there would be uneven illumination I grant you, but providing the objective receives the entire light cone there could, I think, be no loss. As to the rays focusing more closely to the lens in the lower half, why, that is but natural, since the angle is made greater by tilting the lens in the direction you have it. If it were tilted the other way the same thing would be true in reverse. I see no reason, however, why spherical aberration should be reduced. As a matter of fact I think it would be greater. However, don't let this fact escape your observation, viz., in tilting the lens you have not in the least altered the angle on the convex side, nor would you alter it if you tilted it still more. The only alteration is on the plano side, where it seems to me the action ought to be precisely the opposite to what you have it, since the upper half presents a greater angle and the lower a less angle than it would were the lens set perpendicular, always assuming that your lines are drawn precisely as per the index of refraction. These things, however, I think, are rather highly technical. Still, they serve a good purpose. It is well to know not only what happens if our condensing lenses are out of square with each other or if the front plane of the front lens be out of square with the aperture of the machine, and we cannot arrive at a complete understanding of such matters unless we also know the why and wherefore of the effect. Understand that I am not disputing your claims, but merely setting the matter forth as it looks it me.

My Comment.

W. C. Evans, Sherman, Texas, whose letter head contains a neat cut of a motiograph projector, and the statement, "Motion Picture Operator since 1906. Member Local 280, I. A. T. S. E." sends in some film faults and says:

> Here are a few of many of the bad patches I am compelled to cut out in order to be able to run my program. We are on circuit, receiving service from one of the Dallas, Texas, leading theaters, therefore I don't know whose fault it is, but let us have your comment, anyhow. Am also sending you a few broken carbon tips. Am using 220 D. C. and about 20 or 25 amperes at the arc with ⅝ cored carbon above and ½ inch solid below. Every time I strike an arc I lose my crater, and using another make of carbon, under the same conditions, they do not break off at all. What is your idea of the reason for this?
>
> In closing I wish you many happy hours, and send best regards to yourself and our department.

Why, as to the film faults, you should have sent the name of the theater from which you receive the service, and I would have promptly taken the matter up with same, and had the fault traced. The only comment I can make is that circuit service is almost invariably bad service, and it is a thing that ought not to be allowed at all. It is brought about through the combined cupidity of the theater manager and exchange. Film in bad condition is dangerous, both to the eyesight of the public, and from the fire hazard standpoint, and circuit film is almost always in bad condition before it gets back to the exchange, therefore it seems to me that it would not be at all outside the province of our public employes (officials) to prohibit films being used on circuit, obliging them to be sent back to the exchange for repairs from each theater.

As to the craters breaking off, why it is hard to name the cause. The Henrion (it was a long time ago, but I think that is the way it is spelled) used to do the same thing. They give a very white light, and aside from that single fault were excellent; but I stopped using them on account of that one thing. It is a mighty serious thing to have your crater break off right in its center. I would sugest that you stop using the offending carbons, and notify the importer of your reason for abandoning their use.

Must be Twenty-One Years Old.

Denver, Colorado, has an ordinance which went into effect September 1st, which provides that no license will be granted to an operator under the age of twenty-one. It is estimated that about one-third the Denver operators are under the age limit thus set up, and the question is raised as to whether these minors will or will not be affected. They have been operating, some of them, for a considerable time, but the ordinance apparently fails to take that circumstance into account.

It has long been the opinion of this department that the best interests of the industry, as a whole, would properly be served by refusing to license very young men as moving picture operators. However, we believe that most certainly those men who are, and have been working for some time as operators ought by all means to be exempt from the operation of the ordinance. The city of Denver cannot very well say that it was right, proper and safe to allow them to run a moving picture machine for an extended period, and now say it is not right, proper and safe to license them, particularly in view of the fact that they are now at least somewhat older than when they were permitted to work. This is a hard question, I know. It must be conceded that in this day and age young men are being forced out into the world to earn their own living at tender years, but motion picture operating at its best (and that is the only way we can consider it) calls for a great deal of painstaking care, good judgment and knowledge in several directions—more, I believe, than we can fairly assume very young men to be in possession of.

If a two years' apprenticeship was required, as it ought to be required, a young man cauld start at nineteen and receive his license when he was twenty-one. However, a two years' apprenticeship presumes a high class workman, and I am afraid such an apprenticeship will never be brought about until such time as the managers themselves have come into a more thorough understanding of the responsibility they owe to the public, and the industry as a whole. It may perhaps be contended that whereas there should be a minimum age limit, still 21 is too high. Well, who shall say where the limit ought to be fixed? I think but few disinterested persons would contend that it ought to be as low as 16 or even 17. I doubt if any large number would contend for 18 or even 19, but perhaps 21 does seem a little stiff. I would like to hear from operators and managers on this point, but operators writing on this point should give their ages.

Jack Knife Set.

B. H. Yeo, Montague, Prince Edwards Island, says:

> Am using two rheostats in multiple on 125-cycle current. During the first part of show the light is fair, but toward the last there is a dividing line on the curtain. Set carbons as for D. C., but could not get a brilliant light. Am running on jack knife set. The carbons seem to burn the right shape, but the cone burns ¼ inch up in carbon, which spoils the crater. Can you help me out in the problem?

The only way I can help you out is to advise you to set your carbons as per Fig. 101, page 211 of the Handbook, or as per Fig. 99, page 210, but I don't even advise the Fig. 99 set. The jack knife set gives you a higher c.p. per ampere, but it cannot be depended upon for even illumination. I would suggest that it will pay you better to get a good, low voltage transformer (economizer, inductor, compensarc, etc.) rather than to take alternating current through rheostats, and that you then use 60 amperes with the D. C. carbon set.

State Examination.

A. D. Hotaling, Orlando, Florida, says:

> I have been a reader of the world, and a student of the department for four years, though this is my first "offense." The department is certainly a great help to operators who take pride in producing results on the screen. On January 1, 1916, there is to be a state examination for all moving picture operators in Florida. I am sure it will be a great help to all who have applied themselves to the study of their profession.

Yes, provided, always, that the examination is a real one, as let us hope it will in this case be. Glad to know you approve our more or less humble efforts. Will try to continue to deserve your approval in future. Come again when the spirit moves.

Champion Small-Town.

C. Plambeck, Dorchester, Ia., says:

> I enjoy reading the World very much, particularly the projection department. Have your Handbook and have improved projection in my theater from or through pointers or information taken from both the book and department. And now I am in trouble. Have a Power's Six machine with a Power's Six or "Perfect" arc lamp, using 5/8 inch cored carbons above and ½-inch solid below—Electra carbons. I have trouble in keeping a white spot; the circle soon dies down, or diminishes in size, or the spot becomes oval in shape. Have to keep feeding the carbons all the time. Might say I feed them together every three or four minutes anyway. If I do not the spot becomes dim or small in size. Get my current from a 60-volt D. C. plant located in the building which can develop 50 amperes at 80 volts if necessary. Can you give me a clue as to what is wrong? I see you even print items with regard to picture theaters being run in small towns. Have you on record a smaller one than this, which supports a permanent moving picture theater? The population of Dorchester is about 125. I run two shows a week—occasionally three. General Film service, and expect to run features once or twice a month, beginning with this month. Seating capacity 160.

Really, old man, I had to laugh when I read your statement that you had to "feed the carbons every three or four minutes." My dear sir when I was operating I venture the assertion that I fed my carbons oftener than once every sixty seconds. You cannot get good, even illumination and allow the length of your arc to vary much. From what you say I think your main trouble is that you don't feed the carbons often enough. You should stay right there by the machine and feed your carbons often and just a little at the time. It is also quite possible that the voltage varies considerably. In fact I presume that in all human probability voltage fluctuation constitutes a part of your trouble. In order to get continuously good light you must have steady voltage. In a part of your letter you speak of "cutting in and cutting out 15 ohms resistance." Why, if you cut in 15 ohms resistance you would have to have 300 volts pressure in order to get 20 amperes. You evidently have made the mistake of supposing that each contact on your rheostat represents a certain number of ohms, whereas each contact actually represents one or more coils or grids, which would offer a fraction of an ohm resistance. No, I do not know of any town of less than 125 population supporting a theater. I guess you are in a class all by your lonesome in that particular respect.

"Daylight" Screen.

Nat I. Brown, director of sales of the Minusa Cine Products Company, St. Louis, Mo., says:

> Just finished very careful reading of the projection department of Nov. 6 issue. Notice the article on "Daylight" screens, and to show you how strong we are "for" your statements, we enclose herewith one of our catalogs showing our method of advertising "Daylight" screens. There have been more than 15,000 of these catalogs put in circulation among our dealers throughout the United States and Canada. We also have carried similar mention in a number of other advertising booklets. We wish to congratulate you on the stand you have taken on this matter, and to assure you that it meets with our hearty approval.

Now, the editor does not wish to get into a scrap with the screen manufacturers. He simply objects to the use of the term "daylight" in connection with screens, in view of the fact that, when it comes right down to rock bottom, there is, as previously pointed out, no such thing on the market. The term is simply misleading. Somebody started to advertise daylight screens, and at that stage of the game the advertiser was probably honest; he really thought he had that kind of article, but we understand better now, and know there is no such thing as a practical daylight screen, meaning by "practical" a screen which can be used for theatrical performances. We, therefore, object to the use of the misleading word, and are much pleased that the Minusa Company has, in their catalogue, taken the same stand. We trust other screen manufacturers will fall in line.

From Grand Rapids.

John Vander Mate, Grand Rapids, Mich., writes:

> A word from Grand Rapids to let you know we are still on the map. I am a member of Local 291, I. A. T. S. E., and proud of it. We are 100 per cent. organized, and I believe we may say that projection is good in all the houses, even in the suburbs; however, it is, of course, always subject to improvement. I am the owner of the Handbook and the Hawkins Electrical Guide; also a reader of the department, into which this is my first attempt to break. Hope I am welcome. The new Strand theater, of which I am chief operator, opened Sept. 18, 1915, and has the most modern operating room I have ever worked in, or for that matter have ever seen. It has hot and cold water and everything to make the operator comfortable. In closing I wish you success in every way. Am looking for the new edition of the Handbook.

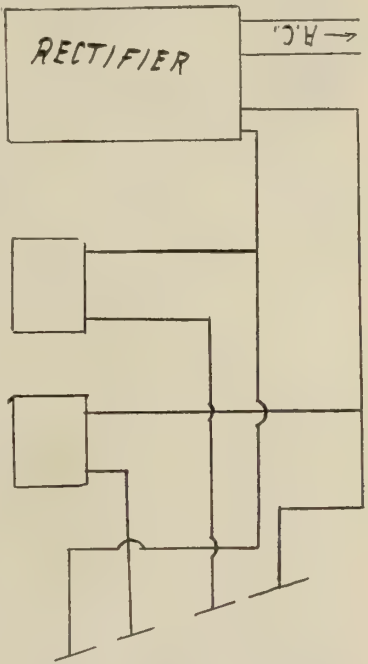
Well, you won't have to look so very much longer I think. We hope to have it out before Christmas, but——! Anyway I have now turned in all the manuscript and am reading proofs to beat the band—some job. That is the kind of report I like to get from a town. My compliments to the members of 291. Let the good work go on. Certainly you are welcome. The latch-string is always on the outside for our friends—and enemies, too, for that matter.

Has His Burglar Tools.

San Francisco, California writes:

> Have just received my set of burglar's tools, and am going to try to break into the department. Have been a reader of the World for the last five years and have been working in this city since 1908. Find enclosed wiring of my stereopticon. Am using 18 amperes at each lamp (ammeter test), and have cut out all but one grid of each rheostat (Powers). Have been using the lamps for the past eight months, and they work fine.

I see no reason in the world why you should not use a rectifier on two lamps wired the way you have it, because, in effect, you simply connect each lamp to the D. C. side of the rectifier, with one grid of resistance in series therewith, thus, to all intents and purposes splitting the rectifier D. C. output into two separate circuits. The wiring is shown in the drawing. I am glad to hear from San Francisco. I have been deeply disappointed in the attitude of the local there. I had believed it to be composed of high-class, broad gauge men. Well, I'm afraid that view is subject to some modification, though I am very reluctant to accept that conclusion. At any rate I do know positively that at least a considerable proportion of the membership are not traveling via the narrow gauge track.



Lens Diameters.

The recent experiments have brought out the fact that objective lens diameter is an exceedingly important thing, and one to which entirely too little consideration has been given in the past. In the light of present knowledge it is not too much to say that insuffcent objective lens diameter is costing the exhibitors of America hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in wasted light, which means in other words, wasted power.

It is not so easy, however, to suggest the best remedy for this condition of affairs. The nearest thing I could see to a solution at the time the light ray experiments were printed, was that the diameter of the lens be one-half its E. F. up to 5 inches E. F. and 2½ inches for all lenses above 5 inches. This, however, it seems to me, while a possible solution, still is likely to breed confusion. In considering this matter, while it might add somewhat to the cost, and while it is possibly for manufacturing reasons impractical, still if it can be done, a really good solution would be to make all motion picture objective lenses with a 2½ inch opening and supply them with an Iris or other diaphragms, by means of which the operator could stop the lens diameter down to fit local conditions.

This would have the advantage that it would allow machine manufacturers to provide for a standard lens mount. I would welcome discussion on this point. It is one of very great importance in which both managers and operators are vitally interested.

It is exceedingly difficult to get lens manufacturers to make any improvement of any kind whatsoever, but if we can decide on what is needed I believe we can get it, therefore let us get our heads together, and between us all I think we can come to the right conclusion, and in the end secure what is needed.

Information Wanted.

Claremore, Oklahoma, issues a requisition for the following information:

> I have two spots at the aperture and, as a result, a ghost on the screen. My condensers are 6½ and 7½, taking current through a Fort Wayne Compensarc-Simplex lamp. Have tried to eliminate the double spot and ghost by moving the condensers back and forth, using lenses of different focal length, but it did no good.

In the first place, Claremont, by all means use at least 40, and preferably 60 amperes. Use two 5/8 inch cored carbons, and set them the same as you would for D. C. (See page 209 of the Handbook); then try giving your lamp a greater angle. This combination should straighten you. The double spot is probably largely due to your lamp not having sufficient angle. You are getting light from both the upper and lower crater, and it is exceedingly difficult to superimpose the two crater images thus formed exactly over, or upon each other. As to your lenses, I would recommend that you match your optical system in accordance with Table No. 1, Oct. 16 issue.

More Static Trouble.

J. F. Reed, Mgr. Connecticut Film Mfg. Co., New Haven, Conn., writes:

> The article in your issue of October 9th headed "Elimination of Static," was read with much interest by the writer, as our camera men use brass handles, but are still troubled with static and I would like to ask George W. Lawrence, through your department, if he uses a metal tripod.
>
> I always understood that the reason for using a metal handle was to ground the electricity which was generated by a camera while in motion. Our experience has been that we have more static when we use a brass handle than when we were using a wooden handle and pictures were being taken absolutely under the same conditions.
>
> Our camera men are using Prestwich cameras, and most of our work is done out of doors.
>
> I am enclosing herewith a piece of negative which shows the particular form of static which we get on our films while using a brass handle, also a piece of negative which shows the static we get when using a wooden handle; both pieces of negative were exposed by the same camera.
>
> Can any one offer any explaination of the different results obtained by Mr. Lawrence, and ourselves?

Static is without doubt, one of the worst and hardest things that a cameraman has to buck up against. I am going to confess right at the start that I do not know how to avoid it absolutely, although I have tried many of the remedies that have been suggested for its elimination.

The man who can discover or invent a sure-fire method for avoiding static can win a fortune and the undying gratitude of a host of cameramen and manufacturers.

Of course we all know that static is caused by high tension electrical discharges generated by the friction of the moving film against itself or some substance with which it comes in contact. Cold and dryness seem to be favorable conditions for the production of these discharges; for that reason many camera men have devised various means of heating and moistening the air inside their cameras. Some place a sponge cup with a wet sponge inside the camera and various chemicals, like glycerine, alcohol, ether, acetone, tetra-ethyl chloride, amyl acetate, etc., have been recommended for lessening the vapor tension inside the camera. Some cover the pressure plate with felt or other fabric which they keep moistened with water or various chemicals, but while some of these devices have proven useful to a certain extent, none of them have proven specific.

A pad which engages the perforated edges of the film and kept lubricated with three-in-one oil is used with considerable success by one studio.

They claim that the small amount of oil absorbed by the edges of the film is not enough to interfere with the development of the image and that the lubrication of the film reduces the friction which causes static.

In many cases static markings have been made on the film in one way or another before it is placed in the camera. I have seen static in positive film, which is not nearly so sensitive to electrical discharges as negative stock, so bad that it could not be used. Both negative and positive stock are liable to show static markings caused in rewinding or in perforating and, with positive, in printing. It is a very good plan when static troubles are encountered to take off pieces of different rolls, before each operation which might possibly cause static, being sure to mark each piece and the roll from which it comes for easy identification and then develop all the pieces together on the same rack without exposing to the light. In this way the cause can generally be located and, by raising the temperature and humidity in the room where the trouble occurs or taking more time and care in rewinding according to the source of trouble, eliminate it.

Many different ways of heating the camera have been devised. Hot bricks, soapstone foot warmers, hot water bottles, Japanese pocket stoves, alcohol heaters, etc., have been used inside and outside the camera and in the camera case. Resistance coils connected with storage batteries, small battery lamps in light, tight metal cases, hot water coils heated from outside the camera with alcohol, oil, gasoline and prestolite tanks have been used. Padded felt and wooden cases have been made to envelop cameras with only the lens and handle and view finder visible so that the camera might be operated while still wrapped in its snug overcoat.

Some have maintained that static is caused by uneven temperature; that is, that it did not matter how cold or dry it was, that if the camera were of an even temperature in every part that there would be no static. An operator at Saranac Lake in the coldest part of the winter claimed to have gotten away from old static by always leaving his camera and loaded retorts for the next day in an unheated outhouse so that they were thoroughly chilled when he went to work the next day.

Others place their film rolled as loosely as possible in some sort of a humidor to get it moist before using when they have static trouble.

Numerous ways of dissipating the electricity have been tried, such as the metal handle recommended by Brother Lawrence for allowing it to escape to the earth, via the body. Metal tripods, grounding wires and chains from the camera or tripod head to a metal stake stuck in the grounds, static machine collectors, such as metal brushes, amalgam pads, tinseled retort mouths, etc., have all been tried without marked success.

All of the foregoing is by no means indicative that precautions should not be taken to avoid static, on the contrary, every possible reasonable precaution should be taken. Keeping the interior of the camera warm and of a certain degree of humidity will undoubtedly reduce static to a minimum and by using X back or so-called non-static stock, static can be reduced to a very small percentage.

Mr. Reed sends two samples—one taken with a wooden handle and one taken with a brass handle. The one taken with the wooden handle has markings of an irregular character, such as might be caused by cinching or tightening a roll or by rewinding rapidly, still there seems to be a recurrent pattern as near as I can make out from the short strip of four pictures. The one taken with the brass handle is plainly recurrent in every frame, showing that the discharge or spark takes place on the film somewhere in the gate between the loops.

You can therefore probably remedy this form of static by changing your gate fittings. Remove all the cloth fittings and replace with polished metal.

Lens Flare.

A Middle West cameraman is having trouble with his lens.

> I would like to have you advise me through the columns of your well-known publication, in regard to a peculiar flare or haze in motion picture negatives taken with my 50 mm. Carl Zeiss original lens, used on my Williamson Camera. The lens is mounted in the regular Williamson rack and pinion mounting and sets back at least 2½ inches from front of mount, which should give ample sun shade. Please find enclosed piece of negative containing this peculiar defect which should give you a better idea of the trouble. There is nothing in the focusing tube behind the exposure window to cause reflection that I am able to discover, in fact, the proposition has got me guessing. In taking pictures of any object where there is a strong light above them there seems to be a light streak in the dark edge of the building or any other like object.
>
> I seem to be unable to get the usual amount of depth of focus in my pictures of late; always keep the lens as clean as possible and even when stopped down to the lowest stop with lens racked in as far as possible and lens barrel back as far as it will go in the jacket, I find that in some cases the picture seems to be out of focus on the objects about 100 yards from the camera. My idea of this is the atmospheric conditions present, cause this out of focus effect, but would like to have your reliable suggestions and advise me on this matter.

He sends a sample of film which shows a very bad halation from the high lights of the picture. As his lens is protected from extraneous light by the hood and a Carl Zeiss Tessar—is generally very free from halation of this kind it is evident that there is something on the lens glass which is causing this diffusion. The most likely explanation is that several little drops of oil have been thrown upon the back of the lens by the camera movement and being nearly transparent and invisible have not been noticed. If this is not the cause look for checking or discoloration of the Canada balsam with which the lens cells are cemented together. I think, without doubt, the trouble lies in some almost invisible foreign substance like grease or oil somewhere on the lens glasses.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Edna May to Act for Vitagraph

Former Comic Opera Favorite to Work in One Picture for Benefit of Red Cross.

EDNA MAY, former comic opera favorite of two continents, the wife of a wealthy New Yorker, and one of the most beautiful women in the world, is to appear in motion pictures. She has made a contract with the Vitagraph Company calling for her appearance in a single feature film, for which, according to the statement of the company, she is to receive $100,000.

Financial gain was not the motive that lured Miss May from the privacy of her married life. The entire amount will be turned over to the Red Cross and other worthy charities in which she is interested. Well remembered and loved as "The Belle of New York," at the Casino theater, New York, several years ago, Miss May, since her marriage in June, 1907, has been out of the limelight's glare.

It was due to the efforts of Albert E. Smith, treasurer of the Vitagraph, that she agreed to pose in motion pictures. Both he and Commodore J. Stuart Blackton had met Miss May socially, and her rare type of beauty woke them to an immediate realization of the possibilities of using her in scenes for their company They.pleaded along charitable lines, and won out thereby.

Edna May.

"Now that I have promised to appear in the picture," said Miss May yesterday, at her Fifth avenue residence, "I am anxious to begin. Of course, the Vitagraph Company has already photographed me in some tests, and Mr. Smith assures me that I come up to his most optimistic expectations. I want to feel that the results will be well worth while, especially since I am to act in but one picture."

Mr. Smith is equally enthusiastic over the test film that has been taken and is certain the Edna May film will be a photoplay classic. The subject in which she is to appear has not yet been announced.

Few actresses reached the heights of popularity, both in America and abroad, that Miss May attained as Violet Gray in the comic opera, "The Belle of New York." Following "The Belle of New York," she starred in "The Casino Girl," "An American Beauty," "The School Girl," "The Catch of the Season" and other operatic successes both here and in London. In January, 1907, Miss May created the title role in a new comic opera, "Nellie Neil," at the Aldwych theater, London, and won new honors.

Miss May was born in Syracuse, N. Y., and at the age of seven appeared in a production of "Pinafore" in that city. Her first appearance in New York was as Clairette in that operetta, "Santa Maria," then showing at Hammerstein's. She played in Hoyt's "A Contented Woman" for a season and was then selected by Lederer for "The Belle of New York."

KLEINE FINISHES MAX MARCIN'S STORY.

"The Law of Blood," Max Marcin's story, written as a starring vehicle for Miss Alma Hanlon, was given its finishing touches at the Kleine studios last week. Scenario authorities claim "The Law of Blood" an extremely able dramatic offering, charged with many situations of great power. In it Miss Hanlon has been given numerous opportunities and has risen to the occasion splendidly. She will be seen in three distinct roles in "The Law of Blood"—a youthful mother, a child of fourteen and a young woman of twenty-two, parts which her own youth permits her to portray convincingly.

Arthur Hoops, who won many plaudits as the result of his work in "The Danger Signal," is co-star with Miss Hanlon in "The Law of Blood." The subject is scheduled for release through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

Roland E. Blaisdell Marries

Treasurer and Part Owner of the Queen City Film Corporation of Buffalo Takes a Wife, Gertrude J. Stokes, of Hamburg, N. Y.

THE Moving Picture World has received an announcement in the mail that reads like this: "Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Stokes announce the marriage of their daughter, Gertrude J., to Mr. Roland E. Blaisdell on Wednesday, November the twenty-fourth, nineteen hundred and fifteen, Hamburg."

Mr. Blaisdell is well known in film circles in both New York City and Buffalo. He is a member of the New York Screen Club and has recently gone into the Queen City Film Corporation as partner in the business and treasurer. He is a well liked young man and a son of George Blaisdell of the Moving Picture World staff. We all extend to Roland and his bride the best wishes and much happiness.

METRO BOOSTERS EAT AGAIN.

The Metro Boosters' Club released another weekly food feature at Healy's gustable projecting room Tuesday night, November 23, in which thirty-five of the liveliest members of the Metro family appeared. The principal interior set used was the Jungle Room, where a practical grill was operated by emotional chefs and waiters, who dispensed real beefsteak and other things. Richard A. Rowland and Joseph Engel were the directors of the gripping feature production, which teemed with action, and ran for five hours straight, without a cold screen.

Mr. Engel furnished the copy of the spoken inserts and captions, introducing the principals as they appeared. With a shout of "Lights!" from Mr. Engel, B. A. Rolfe flashed his ump-teenth carat diamond ring, and the battery of cameras started to click. If any criticism could be made at all, the story of the food feature did not contain suspense. But what it lacked in suspense it more than offset with continuity and thrilling moments. Every member of the all star Metro cast was provided with an adequate role and met the occasion with the proper tempo.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" AT THE LIBERTY.

Even with extra morning matinees, "The Birth of a Nation" was unable to take care of the belated patrons anxious to see D. W. Griffith's great spectacle at the Liberty theater the past week. Owing to this unusual demand and the piling up of thousands of mail orders from out-of-town patrons, the engagement of this record-breaking attraction has been extended for a limited period. The run will be maintained at the Liberty with matinees daily, the same as heretofore. The management had hoped to terminate the run on Saturday, but when it was found that the house was practically sold out for every performance the latter half of the week and numerous patrons were unable to make reservations, hurried arrangements were made with Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger to remain in the Liberty theater for an indefinite period.

CALL FOR BALTIMORE MEETING.

The Exhibitors' League of Maryland will on November 30 hold their first big meeting of the fall season at the Hotel Raleigh in Baltimore. Our National President, Fred J. Herrington, will address this meeting, and we have invited all the exchange and accessory men together with the exhibitors from all over the State of Maryland. A liberal luncheon will be served, and it is also arranged for several good entertaining vaudeville acts.

The object of this meeting might be termed a general "Get-Together Meeting" in which both the exhibitors and exchange men will discuss in general the conditions existing throughout the entire State.

J. HOWARD BENNETT,
Vice-Pres. M. P. E. L. of A.

MUTUAL TOOK ARMY-NAVY GAME.

Exclusive motion pictures of the great Army-Navy annual gridiron contest, played at the Polo Grounds, N. Y., on Saturday, November 27, taken under the auspices of the Mutual Film Corporation, will be released to the public December 9 in the regular Mutual program.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Graft Charges in Chicago

Latest Troubles of "The Birth of a Nation" Involved in an Alleged Offer to Dispose of the Minor Embargo for $6,000.

THE Chicago City Hall has been fairly sizzling during the past week over the charge that a demand for $6,000 was made by a "fixer" on the managers of "The Birth of a Nation," for which in return the city officials, who were opposing in the courts the Epoch Producing Corporation's efforts to secure permission to show the pictures to minors, would be called off.

George Bowles, Chicago manager of "The Birth of a Nation," at the Colonial, was first approached in the office of the theater and declined to pay the money, though the "fixer" stated that if the money was not paid the show would probably be closed. Manager Bowles then notified J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Corporation in New York City, who came on to sift the matter. Mr. McCarthy and Mr. Bowles had a meeting with the same "fixer" at the Hotel Sherman, where the demand was renewed and again refused.

Mr. McCarthy has declared the "fixer" stated that "no money need be paid until the job was done," and Mr. Bowles has given out that the "fixer" was willing to arrange it so that the amount could be paid in installments, if there was any objection to having the lump sum appear in one item on the books at the Colonial office. Mr. Bowles has also stated that the "fixer" who approached him was not a city official, and that he has no proof that the "fixer" had the power to do what he said he could do.

Messrs. McCarthy and Bowles have made a careful record of every conversation with the "fixer" on the subject, and have sworn to their accuracy before a notary public and have also the depositions of witnesses.

The preceding paragraphs touch on only one attempted holdup. The sequel reveals what appears to be a plot to force the Epoch Producing Corporation to sell the state rights of "The Birth of a Nation" for the states of Illinois, Indiana and Iowa at a ridiculously low figure. A representative of the group in charge of this scheme, it is said, informed Messrs. McCarthy and Bowles to this effect: "You can't do business in Chicago, but we can, and will, take the Chicago rights off your hands." The representative continued details regarding his offer, and when he was given a flat refusal by the Epoch Producing Corporation's managers made the threat: "Well, you fellows can't get by in Chicago. We could fix up things with the administration, but you can't. You'd better sell out or they will close your doors."

The representative of this alleged group or syndicate informed Messrs. McCarthy and Bowles that its members included a prominent state politician, a purchasing agent of a large Chicago company and a business man well known in Chicago theatrical circles. It later developed that the names of Governor Dunne, George H. Baird, purchasing agent of the Pullman Company, and A. M. Gollos, president of the Photoplay Releasing Company, were mentioned in the rumors that spread over the city.

On being advised of the rumor, Governor Dunne replied emphatically: "I have had not one single thing to do with it, directly or indirectly. I never heard of the plan. It never was put up to me or hinted at to me. I do not know Mr. Baird, that I now recall, or the other gentlemen you name."

George H. Baird, being asked what he had to do with the proposition, said:

"Sometime ago, in the summer it was, Mr. Gollos came to me with a business proposition regarding the film. He said he would suggest that we buy the state rights in Illinois and nearby states, saying he thought he could get this for about $40,000. His idea was that if we couldn't get this we could get it on a percentage basis through the company of which he is head. He wanted particularly, he told me, to get the booking privileges.

"I did not have the money to put into the scheme, and told him so. That was the end of the matter so far as I was concerned. I regarded it as a good business venture, because the film was attracting large houses.

"Nothing was said about meeting trouble in the courts. In fact, I had read about the injunction matter and, seeing that the show ran right along, assumed, of course, the troubles had ended. Mr. Gollos, so far as I know, had nothing to do with any attempt to satisfy any courts; at least, no such suggestion ever was made to me."

In connection with Mr. Baird's statement Lou M. Houseman, well known as sporting editor of the old Inter-Ocean, also in theatrical and business circles in this city, and also at one time associated with A. M. Gollos in the "Sarah Bernhardt at Home" films, stated:

"Mr. Baird is correct. He knew nothing of the deal from other than a perfectly legitimate angle. He thought that the rights for the picture were for sale as to certain states.

"He did not know that Manager McCarthy of the Epoch company had told George Bowles and me he would rather take the reels into the middle of a ten-acre lot and touch a match to them than to sell them to Gollos under the pressure which Gollos claimed to be able to exert."

Replying to the rumor connecting him with the attempted state rights deal, A. M. Gollos said that he knew nothing about the plan and never spoke to anyone in Chicago about it, the latter part of his statement conflicting with that made by Mr. Baird.

In answer to the Houseman statement Mr. Gollos replied:

"Within three days after "The Birth of a Nation" had its inception at the Illinois theater I was approached by Lou Houseman and told that I could 'purchase the state rights for $75,000.' This was the first intimation I had had that the film was for sale and the first time that I had heard any price named. I was well aware that the picture would be a money-maker, but both I and my partner, whose name I do not care to disclose at this time, felt that the price mentioned was too high.

"A short time afterward I met J. J. McCarthy, the New York manager for the Epoch Film Company, at the Illinois theater, and he said that the film could be had for $75,000. I still paid little attention to the matter, but following a conference with my partner we decided to make a bid for the picture, and set the figure that we were willing to pay at $60,000. Of this amount, $45,000 was to be for the Illinois rights, including the city of Chicago, after the picture completed its run at the Colonial theater. The balance of $15,000 was our offer for the rights in the state of Iowa."

Mr. Gollos afterwards went to New York twice to try and arrange with H. E. Aitken, president of the Epoch Producing Corporation, for the purchase of the rights to Illinois and Iowa, but failed, Mr. Aitken asserting that he had nothing to sell.

J. J. McCarthy in an interview given in New York City said concerning the Houseman and Gollos controversy:

"I have made half a dozen trips to Chicago during the last six months and I have talked with a number of men regarding letting the rights for "The Birth of a Nation" film.

"I believe Mr. Houseman and myself talked over the matter. However, I do not remember the details of our conversation. As I stated, so many discussions were under way that I cannot recall all of them.

"I do not remember the specific $40,000 mentioned. I do not believe they are the figures entering into my conversation with Mr. Houseman. I cannot remember the dates of my conversations with Mr. Houseman, nor can I remember any further details offhand.

"I do not believe the name of A. M. Gollos entered into the conversation. I do not know Mr. Gollos, nor have I heard of him as far as I can remember before today."

The last paragraph flatly contradicts the Houseman statement regarding Mr. McCarthy's reference to Mr. Gollos. The latter has prepared a suit against Mr. Houseman for the recovery of money alleged to have been lost by him through his connection with Houseman in the Sarah Bernhardt films.

State's Attorney Hoyne has announced that he is ready to go ahead with an investigation, as soon as evidence is given him of any attempted holdup or graft in this matter.

Richard S. Folsom, who was the Corporation Counsel who directed the city's contest against the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" states that he does not know either Mr. McCarthy or Mr. Bowles, and that no one has ever come to see him, either in their behalf or to ask for a halting of the suits. "At no time did any 'fixer' come to me, and if my name or that of anyone in my office was used it was without my knowledge. The case is still in the courts and is being fought just as bitterly as in the start."

Manager Bowles has directed attention to the excessive requests for free tickets to "The Birth of a Nation" by politicians and City Hall officials.

"We must have given away to politicians and their friends more than $20,000 worth of tickets," says Mr. Bowles. "Major Funkhouser is the only one in the City Hall asking for seats who paid for them. I still have scores of letters in my files which show how we had to take care of city officials."

"The Girl and the Game" Serial.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, arrived in the city Saturday, November 20, making a short stay at Salt Lake City on the way.

He announced that the new serial, "The Girl and the Game," in which Helen Holmes will be featured, will shortly be launched by the Signal Film Corporation and released through the Mutual Film Corporation. James P. McGowan has been appointed director, and the production will be made in Los Angeles. Frank Hamilton Spearman is the author of the story. He is well known as a writer of railroad stories, and as "The Girl and the Game" will abound in thrilling scenes on the rail Mr. Spearman is particularly fitted to invest them with a realism and atmosphere that will appeal to the spectator, be he trained railroad man or ordinary citizen.

Mr. Spearman will write his story of the serial for newspaper publicity, after being present during the production of the various scenes and incidents. By this means the newspaper story and the story told in the pictures will harmonize, thus preventing confusion in the minds of those who read the written story and afterwards view the pictures.

The plan adopted in the production of "The Diamond from the Sky" will be followed in the matter of the number of reels in each release, and in the use of the word "Chapter" instead of "Part" for each release. There will be fifteen chapters in the serial and each chapter will contain two reels.

The first release will be made on Monday, December 27, and the first chapter of the written story will appear in the Chicago Herald, the Chicago Evening Journal and the Chicago Evening Post in due time for Chicago patrons to familiarize themselves with the characters and the opening events.

Mr. Hutchinson left for New York Tuesday evening, November 23, and on his return will remain in Chicago for the Christmas and New Year holidays.

Big Success of the Theatrical Hospital Benefit Association's Ball.

The Theatrical Hospital Benefit Association's ball at the Second Regiment Armory, Saturday night, November 20, developed pretty much into a moving picture affair, inasmuch as the chief attractions of the evening were Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, of the Metro program.

One of the leading spirits of the ball was Alfred Hamburger, head of the Alfred Hamburger Enterprises, and the chief attractions were furnished by Arthur H. Spiegel, M. H. Spiegel and S. J. Spiegel, of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, who also put up a beautiful silver loving cup for the best dancers of the evening, which, by the way, went to Mr. Barber King and Miss Mildred Brown. Frank Powell, director of the Equitable, presented the cup.

Mr. Spiegel also was responsible for issuing a publication which appeared about midnight, giving a complete report of the ball. The name of this publication was the "Equitable World" and it gave full information about the ball, its reasons, effect and success. The publication made a big hit when it appeared.

The only real spirited bidding on the doll which was auctioned for charity was between M. J. Spiegel of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation and Mr. Bushman, the former bidding it in at $130.

The Equitable and World Film booth was one of the centers of attraction, because of the fact that registrations were accepted for entrance into the contest, by means of which the World Film Corporation will select several girls from various parts of the country to appear in moving pictures, and to become stars if they have sufficient ability.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Walter W. Evans, Jr., traveling representative of the Precision Machine Company (Simplex), came into the city Saturday, November 20, after a long trip through the Middle West and as far south as Oklahoma City. Mr. Evans visited, in order, during this trip, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Oklahoma City, Colorado Springs, Denver, Omaha and Kansas City. He reported that conditions in the supply line were very good, and especially so in Pittsburgh, Kansas City, St. Louis and Denver. The exhibitors in these cities also were showing to fine business. In Kansas City and Denver, exhibitors were using features chiefly. The exhibitors in the latter city have finally broken away from the five-cent admission, which is now charged for matinees, ten cents being the charge at night, for programs of from five to six reels. Mr. Evans informed me that Oklahoma City is booming just now, not only in moving picture circles, but in all-around business. McCall and Robertson, of Cushing, Okla., are building a new picture theater in Oklahoma City at a cost of $80,000. This will be the largest house on the chain of moving picture theaters owned by these gentlemen. They expect to have the new house ready for opening about the middle of February. Mr. Robertson is president of the Farmers' Bank at Cushing and is well known throughout the state as an able financier and business man. The admission prices in the state of Oklahoma in moving picture theaters, generally, is ten cents. Mr. Evans will make Chicago his business headquarters after January 1, 1916, and will travel from it as a center.

Frank L. Hough, manager of the Kleine Optical Company, Chicago, visited St. Louis Friday, November 19. He was invited to the Rothapfel banquet given that evening at Lipp's restaurant. A large and enthusiastic gathering of exhibitors, exchangemen and film representatives was present.

Watterson R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, this city, has given me the pleasant news that at the termination of the company's fiscal year just ended a special forty per cent. cash dividend was declared. This was in addition to the one per cent. dividend which was declared regularly every month throughout the year. The figures require no comment, and hearty congratulations are extended the able general manager of this growing concern.

Harold P. Brown, director of the Northwest Weekly Service, Minneapolis, writes me that the recent accident at the Wisconsin-Minnesota football game at Madison, Wis., happened squarely before the lens of Cameraman Fred C. Place, who had the good fortune at the time to be grinding on a line plunge of Pudge Wyman of the Gopher team. Fully fifteen hundred people were banked up in a cheering mass on the bleachers when Wyman hurled himself into the midst of the clashing grid warriors. At the tensest moment the background of human faces suddenly broke at the left, with a V-shaped opening against the sky. The V widened. The right arm quickly stretched out and settled down, leveling the mass of humanity to the ground, while the left arm crumpled back for a short distance. William A. Lochren, president of the Weekly, was near the cameraman at the time of the accident and has written the titles so that the spectator is given the full dramatic effect of the scene. Cameraman Place was so close to the bleachers that he found it necessary to panorama in order to follow the progress of the sinking bleachers.

Chicago has been all agog for several weeks past over the escapades of old Captain George Wellington Streeter, a squatter for many years past on new made ground near Lake Michigan, which was formerly a tract of shifting sand. Captain Streeter claims that, owing to his squatter rights, his property is outside the jurisdiction of Chicago and of the state of Illinois and that he is answerable only to the federal authorities for his action. When Chicago saloons were recently ordered closed on Sundays, Captain Streeter ignored the order, and persisted in dealing out intoxicating beverages to the hundreds that gathered at the Streeterville home. One Sunday, recently, the Chicago police made an exciting raid on the Streeter premises, and the Captain and his wife and other trusties tried to hold them up with shotguns, rifles and other weapons, the result being that the Captain and his force were badly man-handled. Moving pictures of the raid were taken by a cameraman of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, and appear in No. 93 of that series.

I. Van Ronkle, manager of the Chicago office of the V-L-S-E, Inc., tells me that his office force and he himself had a very pleasant surprise one day last week. Everyone in the office, from the janitor up to the manager, received a check made out in his or her own name from the New York main office of the company. These checks totaled $1,500 and represented the employees' share of the profits made by the company for the thirteen weeks past. The lowest check was for $30 and the amount ranged well up in the hundreds, as the position of the recipient grew more important. Mr. Van Ronkle states that he never saw a more delighted crowd in his life, and that everyone in the office immediately deposited his or her check in a bank. Needless to state, everyone in the office has been made more enthusiastic in their duties, and that no one is permitted to say a word against V-L-S-E in their presence.

Highland Park, a small suburb of Chicago, not within the city limits, has decided on having an "inexpensive" censor of moving pictures. An ordinance has been drawn up providing for a censorship board, with one member, and submitted to the commissioners. The cause of this censorship fuss was a petition from the Ossili Club, filed by Mrs. W. J. Fyffe. This lady acknowledges that she never goes to see moving pictures but that she had heard that some objectionable pictures had been shown. She also acknowledged that she did not know what the objectionable pictures were. This incident clearly shows how "intelligent" the craze for censorship of pictures is in some localities.

"The Battle Cry of Peace," after a successful run of six weeks, was withdrawn from the Olympic Saturday night, November 27. It will be succeeded by "The Warring Millions," a German war propaganda subject, made by the American Correspondent Film Company. Real battles and real war scenes are shown in these pictures, it is announced.

The New Strand theater, this city, has installed a $20,000 pipe organ. This addition to the instrumental force of the Strand's symphony orchestra will contribute strongly to the musical accompaniment of the pictures. The management announces that "filmharmonic" concerts will henceforth be given at this house. H. B. Pearce, the organist of the Strand Company at Orchestra Hall during the recent summer season, will fill the same position at the New Strand. Mr. Pearce is a talented interpreter of moving pictures with organ music, and his appointment at the New Strand will be hailed with pleasure by its numerous patrons.

"Damaged Goods" broke all records at the La Salle theater last week; but it has been decided to withdraw it after Saturday night, November 27. It will be succeeded by a program of Fox features. The first will be "The Galley Slave," in which Theda Bara is featured.

The Tribune's staff in the editorial and composing rooms played star parts in "The Power of Publicity," several days last week. This film subject was chosen as winner in a recent prize newspaper contest, and is being produced by Essanay.

The Rev. Dr. W. T. McElveen, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Evanston, Ill., was unable to show his moving picture program on Sunday evening, November 21, as intended. When asked to explain, the Rev. gentleman replied, "We simply were not ready." It has transpired that the real cause was due to the fact that the moving pictures on the program had not been inspected by the Evanston censor board, and the law requires that all films shown in Evanston must be inspected by the board. The Rev. gentleman evidently prided himself on the fact that his judgment was above both the law and the censors.

Miss Maud Gale, who plays the piano accompaniment to the pictures in the Gayety theater, South Chicago, prevented a panic in that house one night last week, when smoke from a basement ash barrel in the theater filled the auditorium. Following the rule in such cases, Miss Gale played the "Star Spangled Banner," while the manager calmly cautioned the spectators to leave in order. No one was hurt.

On Monday, November 29, the management of the Studebaker was again taken over by Jones, Linick & Schaefer. Triangle programs will be offered, though much shorter than under the former regime. The price, as has already been announced, will be 15 cents for matinees and 25 cents for evenings.

Indictments for malicious mischief will be laid in cases where there is sufficient evidence.

Thomas Persons, superintendent of the Selig Zoo, Los Angeles, was in the city a few days last week, conferring with President William N. Selig, of the Selig Polyscope Company, on business matters. Mr. Parsons, when seen, spoke enthusiastically of the photoplays now in course of production at the Selig studios on the Coast. "I have been in the film business for many years," said Mr. Persons, "but I want to say that certain films now in course of production at our western studios are among the best I have ever seen, in point of story, acting and photography.

My friend, J. A. Maddox, manager of the Majestic theater, Columbus, O., has just forwarded a copy of the "Majestic Monthly," which is issued by the Majestic management. This monthly is really a booklet of twenty-four pages, and Mr. Maddox states that it is read by 75,000 people in central Ohio. The reading matter is varied, and, in addition to valuable information about photoplays and players, has many news items that are valuable to the trade. There are also articles by some producers, and a query page devoted to correspondence. The typographical appearance is enhanced by neat half-tone illustrations.

JAMES P. COGAN, PREMIER SCENARIO EDITOR.

James P. Cogan, who is now associated with the Premier program in the capacity of scenario editor, has had a vast experience in the motion picture business. Starting as an exhibitor and exchange man many years ago, he found that his previous newspaper and magazine experience particularly fitted him for scenario work. He therefore took up this class of work with the Biograph Company, working with Griffith and Sennett. For three years he did the editorial work at the Edison studio, and later with both the Reliance and Majestic companies at their studios in West Twenty-first street.

Few men are better equipped for the exacting work of scenario editing than James P. Cogan. His early experiences as a newspaper man, his intimate knowledge of the motion picture industry and his broad outlook on life particularly fit him for this class of work.

The policy of the Premier program will be to produce one five-reel feature weekly, each picture being adapted from some famous play or novel. To this class of work Cogan brings an eye for the dramatic—a knowledge of what the exhibitors require—and that indefinable touch of human nature which makes an artist of a craftsman.

MALCOLM DUNCAN WITH GEORGE KLEINE.

Malcolm Duncan, Harrison Grey Fiske's versatile leading man, is a welcome addition to the list of stage and film stars now engaged at the Kleine studios. Mr. Duncan was engaged last week to play the leading juvenile role in "Wild Oats," a feature now in process of filming. Duncan has been given an exceptionally competent support, in the persons of Alma Hanlon, Ruby Hoffman, Frank Belcher, William Anker and Herbert Hayes. Aside from his long and successful stage experience, Mr. Duncan has frequently been seen in film, notably in George Kleine's "The Money Master" and "The Spendthrift" with Irene Fenwick.

G. A. Metcalfe, the supply dealer of San Francisco, made us a pleasant call this week. Mr. Metcalfe is opening a branch office here at 728 South Olive street, where he will have a complete line of machines and supplies.

Other callers this week at the World office were R. W. Horn, traveling representative for the Nicholas Power Company, and W. E. VanDuyne of the Pacific Amusement Company. Mr. Horn who makes his headquarters in San Francisco, stated that he finds business exceedingly good and a gratifying demand for the new Powers model.

Ding-Dingelie-Ding rang the telephone. "Yes?" "This is the Isis theater. You are invited to a funeral." "Who is dead?" "A palm. The deceased is to be buried at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Have you seen the procession?" We had. Two pallbearers in black shrouds solemnly carrying a potted palm with the inscription "to be buried at 2 o'clock at the Isis theater." The populace gasped and gasped in sheer wonderment. The funeral of a palm was a clever and timely advertising stunt by James C. Quinn, proprietor of the Isis theater, and a brother of Damaged-Goods-Superba-Quinn.

Palms are a touchy topic in Los Angeles. Tax payers had to pay last spring for $30,000 worth of potted palms to decorate the streets, and this week the city council decided that potted palms were a nuisance and menace to health and ordered the whole decorative business to be removed, permanently and forever from the city streets, and hence the row.

Word comes from the Pallas studio that production will be started this week on a film adaptation of Maurice Maeterlincks "Monna Vanna," featuring Constance Collier, the noted English actress. Miss Collier, as will be remembered, appeared to great advantage in "The Tongues of Men," a recent Morosco feature.

May Allison had quite a nasty fall last week while working in one of the scenes of "The Other Side of the Door," now being produced at the American studios. She was supposed to jump from a window, a fall of five feet, but missed her reckoning and dropped ten feet further. She was so shaken up that she had to be carried home and was confined to bed for several days. Fortunately no bones were broken so the popular player was soon back to work again none the worse for her mishap. Her next part will be in "Lilla of the Sulu Seas."

Vivian Rich will soon appear in a photoplay written for and around her and very nearly named after her for it is entitled "Viviana." Miss Rich just returned from Arizona where she was much feted.

Arthur Shirley, the Australian actor, is playing the part of John Vassar, the leading role in Thomas E. Dixon's big photoplay production, "The Fall of a Nation." All the week past Shirley has been on horseback leading his troops of two thousand "soldiers," who were tented and fed by the company. George Sargent is directing this picture.

Director R. S. Sturgeon came down from the mountains of Bear Valley this week long enough to order provisions, give instructions at the studio, cut and assemble two reels of "God's Country and the Woman," his current production for the V-L-S-E. program, now being made in the hills, see it run, say hello to the World man, and visit his wife and the young family. No he is not very busy, but all his time is taken. He went his way with promises of a fine wild duck for Thanksgiving, that is if he could shoot one. Anyway we hope he trees some of the animals.

Herbert Rawlinson, featured player for Mr. Laemmle's Broadway features, had a birthday and as a result of the event he is sporting all kinds of fine things. One article we noticed soon after the famous man's natal day was a bark on his young and spirited car, and we were wondering who presented him with a cut-out for the muffler.

* * *

H. D. Naugle, manager of the local V-L-S-E. exchange, returned this week from a trip down into the depths of Arizona booking the Big Four features. He said they were welcome to talk war but that it did not seem to hurt our business here any. Mr. Naugle returned with a suitcase loaded to the rails with cactus candy, which he distributed to a few of his personal friends. He described the growing industry and told how they saw down cactus trees and make delicious candy out of them. And believe me, it's good, too.

James Horne is the latest victim of the "gas fever." Forgotten is the white horse on which the Kalem producer directed the "Grand Hotel" series and "Stingaree" pictures. One bright morning this week he greatly astonished his Glendale company by arriving at the studio in a great big new eight-cylinder car.

Mr. Horne has just completed the ninth episode of "Stingaree" and is now revising a scenario for a new production.

Every time that we visit the Biograph studio we run in with some old friend we knew a couple of years ago who had gone East with that company last season. This year many of the same faces are there, but then there are many new ones.

Charles Bennett who was with the Vitagraph, and who played many fine character parts, is again under California skies, only he has changed over from the Biograph to citizenship, and is awaiting another engagement, which he is loath to announce for a few days.

Oscar M. Larson who formerly did much of the work for Al Hale when he was making comedies for Kalem, is now assistant to J. Farrell Macdonald, one of the directors now working here. Larson is a busy man and a hustler and deserves the progress that has been afforded him. He can act too, b'gosh!

Editor Albert Glassmire also wrung our hand and whispered that he had plotted up a play and sold it in the East. That's good news also. He calls it "The Devil's Workshop," and it must be a hot place at that. Mr. Glassmire is as busy as ever reading the scripts and writing a few in between the busier moments.

Gene Lewis, the husky writer of scenarios, was also on deck and came down to the last meeting of the Photoplayers club.

Travers Vale was busily directing Louise Vale in a big picture with Rose Ruben and a promising young woman, Helen Brady, in the cast. The other persons about the large plant were busy too.

We met the genial Lee Daugherty, manager of the Western branch, who was talking busily to some visitors when we arrived. I said that I had intended meeting the train when they arrived and he smilingly replied, "Oh, that's what the matter was. I thought something was wrong when we arrived here; now I know, I missed that smile of yours."

Manager Parsons of the new Triangle exchange is as busy as a soldier in Europe who is on the firing line with a rifle that has a jammed barrel. The new program is going so well that he is signing them up every day. One man who had listened to the Triangle talk for some time without a murmur of anything promising, laughed at the big idea, but after the first week's run at Clune's auditorium he snook up to the office and put his name to a contract for a year. We withhold his name.

Tally's theater, as usual, is being crowded to the curbs with lovers of the film drama. Mr. Tally ran "Madame Butterfly" last week, and the demand for tickets was so strong that the picture was held over for a split week. The remainder of this week "Bella Donna" is being run.

Reserved seats for the entire house are now being sold exclusively here, and the management is well satisfied with the plan, as many people would not wait for seats, but desire to go in immediately. Hereafter the theater will be run just as the large legitimate houses are operated. Mary Pickford in this offering drew the second largest week since she appeared in one some months ago.

As an advertising feature Mr. Tally drew a unique little display from the paper. The picture of Mary in the Japanese garden was cut out and pasted on cardboard. An artist painted in trees, etc., and on a large sheet, placed about six inches behind the cut-out, he painted a scene, with the snow-capped Fujiyama in the distance. This sheet is transparent, and at night looks most realistic. The drawing power of the device was shown by the large number of passersby who stopped to gaze into the cabinet.

In presenting this feature from the Paramount program, Mr. Tully has gone himself one better by putting "atmosphere" into the house, for from the time one steps into the lobby until he is seated, one is transported to Japan.

J. A. Barry, a former newspaper man of the West, and who is connected with the publicity department for Griffith in New York, is a visitor to Long Beach, his former home. Incidentally this publicity man says that the film industry in Los Angeles is more of a magnet to Easterners than either of the West Coast expositions, and that is probably very true.

Miss Ethel Weber, who is the third person in the triangle of heavy thinkers who produce big features for the Universal under the Smalley banner, has purchased a Class A looking motor car, a roadster finished in black and white, and it must be a powerful brute the way it barks. For some time Alan Hale has been seen on the screen as a leading star but now he is to be more than starred in coming Lasky releases. Mr. Lasky signed Mr. Hale this week and the big husky star leaves the old Biograph for the Paramount producers. As yet no definite plans have been laid but it is certain that Mr. Hale will be seen in some of the best that will be made by the big company.

Al W. Filson is playing the part of his life in a Selig picture which is fast nearing completion. It is the character Biff Schulte, the policeman who camps on the dangerous trail of Chick Hewes, the crook, played by Harry Mestayer. The story is called "The Dragnet," and is a film version of Willard Mack's successful play called "Kick In." The story is being produced by Frank Beale. The part is just the one for Al W. Filson, who will be remembered from vaudeville days with Lee Errol, when he did a skit written by George M. Cohan especially for the couple called "A Tip on the Derby."

While at Bear Valley, this trip, the Vitagraphers had a lot of fun. Bill Duncan, when asked by Sturgeon if he could paddle a canoe, replied that he certainly could. At the test it is sad to relate, Duncan did everything but paddle. He is powerful, and power is not as essential in propelling a canoe as skill. However, now he can go like the wind, but he carries the name of "Paddling Nelson," in lieu of "Battling Nelson."

The weather has been ideal ever since the first rain and everyone is shooting lots of film. The only difference is a slightly lowered mercury.

Since the Selig forces have been consolidated at the zoo studio and the Edendale plant moved over, the place is a busy one. Bob Daly is engaged in producing a three-reel drama featuring Fritzi Brunette. It is called "The False Alarm." Mr. Daly, who is one of the best known directors on the coast, has just finished a five-reel feature for the big program called "Unto Those Who Sin," and it also features Miss Brunette.

* * *

That those who make the pictures are deeply interested was proved here this week when Lasky's "Chorus Lady" was given its first run at Ocean Park, in the Rosemary theater. This was the first time the complete film had been projected, not even the players had seen it. We attended, as guests of the Raymond Brothers and Mayor Sams, of the theater, and noticed many picture makers present. Little Miss Marjorie Daw, who played the part of the slip of a country miss who comes to the city to visit her big sister, Cleo Ridgley, was wonderful in the part. Several other players traveled all the way to the beach to see the first projection of the film.

Miss Doris Schroeder, who for the past two years or more has been with the Western Vitagraph, went away on a vacation. She chose Bear Valley, a secluded sort of spot way up in the hills, and when she arrived at the mountain retreat, far from the maddening crowd, where she would not see a player with makeup, or smell raw film, or hear the bang of a typewriter, what was her surprise to hear "Action! action! a-c-t—come on there, get some pep into that scene. Show some life! What's the matter with yuh?" bawled out by a Lasky director or some other director who was "on location" in the hills getting scenes for a big picture. Farther on up the river the poor scenario writer came upon the band of Vitagraphers who were filming "God's Country and the Woman." California is full of picture people.

So far Captain Cupid controls the situation here with the Balboa army of lovers in the lead by several couples. This week the seventh pair in four months have trotted up to the altar and come away linked for life. This time the youngsters were open and above board, planning the wedding and letting everyone in on the secret. Previously, they disappeared and were gone several days then we heard from some city nearby that a knot had been tied with two players of film fame. The persons who got our best wishes this week are Richard Johnson, a character man, and Lulu Bower, a young actress.

While visiting the Laemmle plant last week we held converse with the big chief, Henry McRae, and while he was relating some of his exciting experiences with different heads of departments, he thought of something and told us of a fine new horse that he had just received. The young and spirited animal is a "peach," and it is so proud and spirited that he has named it Peacocke. The genial head of the Coast Universal studios is a boy when it comes to a good horse, and he delights in riding the animal while inspecting the hilly portion of the great plant here.

A message from Las Vegas, New Mexico, we presume it is somewhere down below the rim of the desert, says that the Selig players were honored guests of the manager of the Browne theater one night this week. They were entertained with a feast in the ice cream parlor, a row of seats in the playhouse, and afterwards a barbecue luncheon. Among the present ones we noticed the names of Tom Mix, Victoria Forde, George Martin, E. A. O'Brien, Pat Chrisman, and others. 'Rah for the moving pictures!

Oh, for the life of an exchangeman if he sells V-L-S-E. features. This week tis said H. D. Naugle, manager, and all his assistants who have been employed for thirteen weeks or more, received a slice of the dividends of the firm, just as if they had been making little Fords and got a part of the profits. The dividend totalled $1,007.88. Not half bad!

Pomona, a lively little city about 40 miles east of here, is considering purchasing a moving picture machine to install in its hall for visual education of its many students. Some members of the board thought that it would be wiser to buy playground equipment, but the majority are in favor of using pictures to educate in physiology, history, geography and other subjects.

Australian Notes

By Our Own Correspondent.

Sydney, Australia, October 23, 1915.

VERY little seems to be known in America about pictures in Australia; yet I think that Australians are as great picture fans as there are in the States. Sydney has a population of 700,000, and over 75 picture houses. Of these about 20 are in the city proper and are continuous shows. The remainder seat from 750 to 2,000, change the program twice a week (except the first-class houses) and charge 3d., 6d. and 1s. (5 cents, 10 cents and 25 cents) admission. The first-class houses (about 8 in number) show first-class features, running for a week. They charge for admission from 6d. to 2s. 6d. (10 cents to 60 cents). We get a good variety of American features here. Pictures shown lately have included: "A Builder of Bridges" (Frohman-World), "Lola" (World), "The Unafraid" (Lasky), "The Dancing Girl" (Famous) and "Woman and Wine" (World). The latter, shown in the Crystal Palace, the largest house in Sydney, drew record audiences, no less than 50,000 seeing the picture in the week (six days).

Sunday pictures have not arrived here yet, but if some enterprising manager should start them the practice would become general.

Australian Films, Ltd., are advertising "Hypocrites." It has been passed by the censor here, and Mr. Black, chief secretary, said it was the best photoplay he had ever seen. The same company recently produced "The Loyal Rebel," in five reels, a story taken from Australian history. The cast included several stage stars and was directed by Alfred Rolfe, son-in-law of the famous Australian producer, Alfred Dampier, who directed many famous pictures, nearly all of which were released by the Sawyer Company in America about eighteen months back. Messrs. J. C. Williamson, Ltd., the most prominent theatrical managers in Australia, have produced "Within the Law" and several other stage successes with Miss Muriel Starr, no doubt well known to Americans. These have not been released yet, so I will have more to say regarding them at a later date. Clement Mason's Cine Co. got an injunction against Australasian Films the other day to prevent them (Australasian Films) showing Essanay-Chaplin comedies. Before the injunction, the Chaplin comedies were shown at as many as 15 out of the 20 theaters in Sydney proper.

Pictures to be shown include "The Marked Woman" (World), "Carpet from Bagdad" (Selig) and "The Eagles' Nest" (Lubin).

To show the funny side of the exchange business, if there is one, read the following letter that was received by a Chicago exchange manager:

> Kind Sirs:—Your letter of the 13th at hand and contents noted carefully.
>
> I have two days, Saturday and Sunday, that I am going to give some exchange.
>
> I have been running less than 40 day stuff and am not telling an untruth when I say that I show pictures that are from 8 to 15 days old in this town. Do you believe it?
>
> Do you believe it? I pay $1 per reel, paper included.
>
> Do you believe it?
>
> The pictures I show are free from rain, clean, complete and in good condition. Do you believe it?
>
> There are a lot of exchanges after the business these days. Do you believe it? Their offers are fine, goods new—and us "little town" fellows have a chance to show our patrons "good goods." Do you believe it?
>
> I know all exchanges will come to it in time and then the climax. Do you believe it?
>
> Several exchanges start well but it don't last long. Of course, they have good excuses to offer. I can't show rotten film here as I am too close to KanKaKee and when I show "old has beens" ther I drive my patrons over those nice roads fifteen miles to KanKaKee. But when I show that KanKaKee has nothing on us then they stay home and forget KanKaKee.
>
> It's a hard game, and in order to let the little fellow live, you fellows must give (us) then the goods too.
>
> Respectfully yours,
> (Signed) "Quality first" "Prosperity later."
> "WATCH ME GROW."

"Divorcons"

Biograph's Adaptation of Famous Play Makes Entertaining Four-Part Picture Comedy—A Single Reel Reissue.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

VICTORIEN SARDOU'S "Divorcons," one of the most famous of all stage comedies, makes an entertaining picture for an intelligent audience, despite the enforced elimination of the playwright's brilliant lines and necessary alterations in the incidents of the plot. The adaptation holds consistently to the spirit of the original and presents the same lesson in a manner at once humorous and cynical. A story so typically French in thought and substance remains French even when the characters are interpreted by Americans in American settings; and the marital problem with which "Divorcons" treats, it may be added, is quite as pertinent here as abroad.

Scene from "Divorcons" (Biograph).

It will be recalled that in handling the eternal triangle, Sardou eliminated the outwardly jealous husband. He chose, instead, a man who seemed to fall in very readily with his wife's intention of getting a divorce that she might marry her cousin. And the woman, finding freedom so easily attainable, experiences a renewed interest in her husband. They come to a happy understanding at a little dinner party for two in a private dining-room, while the cousin is undergoing several unpleasant experiences.

Scene from "Fate" (Biograph).

The most entertaining scenes in the first reel, showing the progress of the affair between the flirtatious young wife and her amorous cousin, were photographed on a bathing beach. In view of the interest aroused by the players, one may overlook the somewhat slow development of the story, which acquires greater speed in later reels—the reels that bring about the success of the husband's plan to hold his wife, and the complete discomfiture of the cousin. Much of the action is laid in an elaborately staged cabaret restaurant where a gay throng gives a realistic depiction of expensive night life. Dell Henderson as the husband, Dave Morris as the cousin and Gertrude Bambrick as the wife are effective in the three principal roles.

"Fate," a one-reel Griffith production, soon to be reissued by the Biograph Company, is a masterpiece of dramatic suspense culminating in a real thrill. It is a vivid story of rough woodsmen, with early scenes giving careful preparation for the big situation of the picture, that in which a log cabin is blown to pieces by an explosion of powder. The human and dramatic interest centers in the almost miraculous escape of two innocent children and the just punishment of a troublesome ruffian. Mae Marsh, Bobby Harron, Lionel Barrymore and Charles H. Mailes appear in this excellent photoplay.

"The Cave Man"

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

HERE we have Vitagraph at its very best and I do not know that I could go any higher in the dictionary of laudation. Mr. Edeson has never had a part more thoroughly suited to his splendid personality and his equally splendid acting powers. He is most ably supported by Fay Wallace, whose screen debut in this feature is sensationally successful. Every man and woman in the play is perfect in his or her part. Lillian Burns as Dolly Van Dream showed exceptional abilities as a commedienne. In the selection of the right and convincing types, the producers have lived up to their best record and perhaps surpassed it. Settings and photography are of the highest standard imaginable and if there is the slightest flaw anywhere in this feature it has escaped me altogether. The dozen reviewers present gave it a quick verdict of "Most Excellent," which is a rare thing, indeed.

Scene from "The Cave Man" (Vitagraph).

The plot is interesting and withal highly diverting. In the course of its clever development the foibles and shams of what is called "Society" are held up to ridicule. There is no malice in the ridicule, every thing is perfecty good-natured and that's why it is so genuinely laughable. It is a story that in the first part holds us by its oddity, that amuses us in its gradual rise and then thrills and grips us in its sudden turn and its most satisfying climax. The plot takes its origin in the strange whim of a frivolous and perhaps somewhat cynical society woman, Miss Mischief. She takes it into her head to make a social lion out of a coal heaver. She resorts to a clever artifice, which need not be told in detail here. The coal heaver has never been touched by either the ordinary or the extraordinary refinements of civilization and has, of course, never dreamt of entering society. Miss Mischief, with the aid of two barbers and "a ton of energy" and a gents' furnishing store and a tailorship, makes the quondam coal heaver very presentable. She then introduces him into society with results which the pictures describe far more truly than could any words of mine. In turn he becomes a "sociologist," an art critic, an artist and a social hero. His vision grows broader in the mean time. The ordinary scenario writer would have ended the story here by letting Miss Mischief and the hero fall in love with each other and go to the parson, deftly inserting about one hundred and fifty feet of wedding festivities. Nothing like it happens. The coal heaver, whose ambition has fed on his manhood, perceives that he has been but "a man on a checkerboard" and his wrath against Miss Mischief awakes with a terrible explosion. He realizes that he is capable of achieving big things in this life and he goes forth and, beginning away down at the bottom, he achieves them. At the height of his wealth and his power he again meets Miss Mischief, who now yields herself willingly to the man of superb physical and moral power. To say that this film play essays at fully 100 per cent is stating the plain truth.

"The Alster Case"

A Mystery Story in Five Parts by Essanay, with a Strong Cast Headed by Bryant Washburn, Jno. H. Cossar and Miss Ruth Stonehouse.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"THE ALSTER CASE," directed by J. Charles Haydon, is an absorbing mystery story by Essanay, in five reels, that holds the spectator's attention in eager expectancy until the final scenes unravel it. The complications put moving pictures to a severe test in the effort to make the story clear to the observer and at the same time to cast an air of mystery over that which is to follow, so that the real culprit is not discovered until the end, but the feat is accomplished without any lavish use of subtitles I am glad to state.

In the production of such a story in moving pictures the greatest care must be exercised not only in withholding information, but also in furnishing it when absolutely necessary. The director may be prone, from his own knowledge of the story, to think that he has at certain points given the necessary links in the chain for the spectator's benefit, when in reality he leaves gaps that sorely puzzle the observer and mar the solution. In "The Alster Case" this is avoided by much painstaking thought and careful direction.
